A. I. R. 1953 JAMMU AND KASHMIR 1

WAZIR C. J. AND KILAM J.

Samad Malik, Appellant, v. State.

Criminal First Appeal No. 8 of 2009 D/- 9th Assuj, 2009.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164 — Retracted confession — Evidentiary value.

It is not illegal to base conviction on a retracted confession but the rules of prudence require that a retracted confession must be corroborated by independent evidence connecting the accused with the crime.

Anno: Cr. P. C., S. 164 N. 18 Pt. 1.

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 300 — Murder —
Burden of establishing guilt — Duty of prosecution — Evidence Act (1872), S. 103.

The burden of establishing guilt of the accused is throughout on the prosecution and the prosecution must prove every link in the chain of evidence against the accused from the beginning to the end. When two persons are seen together and shortly afterwards one of them is found to have been murdered it cannot be inferred positively that his companion is responsible for the murder of the deceased unless there are other circumstances to support that inference. No doubt the circumstance that the deceased was last seen in the company of the accused raises a strong suspicion against the accused but mere circumstances of suspicion without more conclusive evidence are not sufficient to justify conviction of the accused.

Anno: I. P. C., S. 300 N. 43, 45; Ev. Act, Ss. 101 to 103 N. 3.

J. N. Bhan, Amicus Curiae, for Appellant;
Asst. Advocate General, for the State.

WAZIR C. J.: Samad Malik has been found guilty of the murder of one Wali Mir s/o Jabban Mir resident of Pandit-Pura, Tehsil Handwara and under S. 302, Ranbir Penal Code, has been sentenced to death. He has appealed against his conviction and sentence and the case is also before the Court for confirmation of the sentence.

(2) The facts of the case are given in great detail in the judgment of the Learned Sessions Judge and need only be briefly recapitulated here.

(3) Wali Mir deceased was the son of Jabbar Mir. The accused Samad Malik is the son-in-law of Jabbar Mir. He was made Khana Damad and was residing in the house of his father-in-law Jabbar Mir who had executed a document in his favour by which he had given him half share in his immovable property. Jabbar Mir died during winter of S. 2008. Samad Malik was away in the Punjab at the time of the death of his father-in-law. On hearing the news of his death he returned home. He asked for his half share in the immovable property left by Jabbar Mir but his mother-in-law, Mst. Farzani, refused to give him share in the land and wanted to retain the whole of land for her son, Wali Mir deceased. The matter was referred to the Panchayat and the members of the Panchayat decided that Samad Malik should get half share in the house, the Kothar and the vegetable garden and should not demand any share in the land left by Jabbar Mir as he had already got some land from his own father. It is alleged that Samad Malik accepted the award given by the Panchayat and agreed to have a share in the house and the Kothar only. It is further alleged that for some time he was not willing to cultivate the land belonging to his father-in-law but at the insistence of his mother-in-law he cultivated the land. On the 3rd of Jeth 2009 he asked his mother-in-law to allow Wali Mir, her son, to accompany him so that they may both go to the fields and take the woods out. Wali Mir accompanied Samad Malik and they both went to the fields. After some time Samad Malik came back alone. He asked his mother-in-law as to where Wali Mir was. She replied that he should know better as Wali Mir had gone with him. The mother began to search for the boy and she asked some neighbours also to look for the boy. The accused Samad Malik, it is alleged, told his mother-in-law that a Fakir had taken fancy to the boy and he might have gone with that Fakir. The villagers began to search for the boy but could not trace him. On the 5th of Jeth the accused is alleged to have confessed before Ahad Gansi, the Deh president and Khawaja Rasul Numberdar that he had murdered the boy and had drowned him in the river. On the 6th a report was lodged in Thana Handwara.

(4) Nazir Ahmed Head Constable who was on some other duty repaired to the scene of occurrence and started investigation. He conducted the search for the body of Wali Mir which could not be found. During the search the chaddar which the deceased was wearing was recovered from underneath a heap of sand. The search went on and after some days the dead body was recovered from the junction of the river called Nubal. It was sent for post mortem examination and on the 11th Jeth Dr. Dwarka Nath, Medical Officer Handwara, performed the autopsy. The Head Constable came to the village and arrested the accused. He was called on some other business by the Inspector General of Police and another Officer Mr. Sri Kanth Sub-Inspector of Police arrived in the village on the 16th and took charge of the investigation. He seized the clothes of the accused as he found some blood stains on them.

(5) The dead body was identified by Qadir Mir, the uncle of the deceased. Dr. Dwarka Nath found the following injuries on the person of the deceased:

1. A circular wound nearly 2½" in diameter over the left side of chest above the nipple. The skin and the muscle below were absent in this area down to the ribs.
2. A 3½" in area oval gap in the abdominal wall on the right side corresponding to the 8th, 9th or 10th rib. The intestines were protruding from this gap.
3. An incised wound 1" long ½" deep ½" wide near the external end of right clavicle.
4. Ecchymosis of the right side of the forehead above the eye and also of the right upper and lower eye-lids."

In his opinion the death of the deceased was caused by shock and haemorrhage due to the injuries which he had already received. He further stated that the deceased had some signs of life when he was drowned. According to the doctor all the injuries were ante-mortem and were caused by some sharp weapon.

(6) The accused is alleged to have made a confession before the police and he was produced before the Tehsildar Magistrate First Class Handwara for recording his confession. The Magistrate ordered that the accused should be kept in the judicial lock-up before his confession is recorded. The accused was kept in the judicial lock-up in Baramulla and was produced before the Magistrate on the 20th of Jeth for recording the confession. The Magistrate, after complying with the necessary formalities required by law, recorded the confession of the accused. The accused was committed to Sessions on a charge of murder.

(7) There is no direct evidence in this case. The evidence consists of this fact that the accused was last seen in the company of the deceased, that the deceased and the accused went together towards the river and the accused came home all alone. There is the evidence of Mst. Farzani that the accused asked her to permit her son to go with him. They both went together. There is the evidence of Mahad Mir and Wahab Mir who stated that they saw the accused and the deceased going towards the river. They enquired from them and were told that they were going to catch small fish in the river. Mst. Mukhti, the wife of the accused, stated that her husband had remarked that he would not allow Wali Mir to get any share of the land left by Jabbar Mir, his father but she did not attach much importance to this remark as her husband, Samad Malik, was trying to make arrangements for the marriage of Wali Mir. Qadir Mir has appeared as a prosecution witness and from his statement it appears that Samad Malik accused was reluctant to cultivate the land as he was not given his share in the land which was given to him by his father-in-law but the Panchayat had decided that he should get share in the Kothar and the House and give up his share in the land in favour of his brother-in-law Wali Mir. Another witness has been produced by the prosecution, Sultan Mir, who stated that he saw with his own eyes the accused pushing away the dead body into the river with a stick. There are two other prosecution witnesses Ahad Ganai Deh, President and Khawaja Rasul Numberdar, who have deposed that the accused made extra-judicial confession before him admitting his guilt.

(8) The learned Sessions Judge has discussed all the evidence which has been produced in this case and has not believed the testimony of Ahad Ganai and Khawaja Rasul who are witnesses of extra-judicial confession.

(9) We have carefully gone through the testimony of Ahad Ganai and Khawaja Rasul and we find that their evidence cannot be relied upon. According to these witnesses the accused made extra-judicial confession before them on the 5th of Jeth, two days after the occurrence. The first information report was lodged on the 6th of Jeth and there is no mention of the fact that the accused had confessed having murdered the deceased. If the accused had actually confessed his guilt before these two witnesses it was expected that this confession would have found place in the first information report. In view of the fact that there is no mention of this fact in the first information report the evidence of these witnesses is false and, therefore, cannot be relied upon.

(10) The evidence of Sultan Mir also is by no means convincing. According to him he saw the accused pushing off the dead body into the river. It is strange that he did not mention this fact to any one till he was called by the police long after the occurrence when he came out with this important information. His evidence is unreliable and has been rightly brushed aside by the Sessions Judge.

(11) The learned Sessions Judge has relied upon the confession of the accused which was subsequently retracted by him before the committing Magistrate and before the Sessions Judge and also on the fact that the accused was last seen with the deceased on the fateful day of occurrence. He has further been impressed by the fact that a Chaddar was recovered from a heap of sand at the instance of the accused which was worn by the deceased on the day he was done to death.

(12) It is necessary to give in detail the so-called confession made by the accused before the Magistrate at Handwara. In the confession the accused has stated that he threw Wali Mir in the river and placed his leg on his neck till he breathed his last.

(13) The accused does not mention that he inflicted injuries on his person with a sharp-edged weapon and then threw him in the river till he died. We have it from the medical evidence that the accused had a number of injuries on his body which were caused by a sharp weapon and all these injuries were ante-mortem. The accused has not admitted anywhere in the confession that he inflicted injuries on the body of the deceased. Moreover the accused has stated that under police pressure he made the statement before the Magistrate at Handwara confessing his guilt. He completely denied having committed the offence.

(14) There is, therefore, retracted confession of the accused before us and we have to see whether or not his confession is voluntary. It is not illegal to base conviction on a retracted confession but the rules of prudence require that a retracted confession must be corroborated by independent evidence connecting the accused with the crime. We have to see whether the confession receives any corroboration by any independent evidence adduced in this case.

(15) There is no doubt evidence to show that the accused and the deceased went together towards the field on the fateful day. There is further evidence of Mahda and Wahab who stated that they saw the accused and the deceased going towards the river. But this evidence is not sufficient to connect the accused with the commission of the crime. Great stress has been laid by the counsel appearing for the state that as the accused was last seen in the company of the deceased that fact alone should justify the inference that the accused was responsible for the murder of the deceased. The burden of establishing guilt of the accused is throughout on the prosecution and the prosecution must prove every link in the chain of evidence against the accused from the beginning to the end. When two persons are seen together and shortly afterwards one of them is found to have been murdered it cannot be inferred positively that his companion is responsible for the murder of the deceased unless there are other circumstances to support that inference. No doubt the circumstance that the deceased was last seen in the company of the accused raises a strong suspicion against the accused but mere circumstances of suspicion without more conclusive evidence are not sufficient to justify conviction of the accused.

(16) In this case we have to see what are the other circumstances which connect the accused with the crime. As pointed out above the accused has made a confession which he retracted at the first opportunity when he was put on trial. He has given a cogent explanation that the confession was extorted from him under Police pressure. The retracted confession is not corroborated by any other independent evidence. The learned Sessions Judge has taken into consideration the recovery of a Chaddar from underneath a heap of sand. We have examined the recovery list and we find there is no mention in the list that the Chaddar was recovered at the instance of the accused. There is no reliable evidence to show that the Chaddar was recovered at the pointing of the accused. The evidence is to the effect that a certain Chaddar in the course of search for the body was recovered from the sand. That recovery does not connect the accused with the commission of the offence. I fail to see how the Sessions Judge has attributed the recovery of Chaddar to the information supplied by the accused. Moreover it appears that the Chaddar was recovered long before the accused was arrested and the confession of the accused was recorded on the 20th of Jeth long after the recovery of the Chaddar. The recovery of Chaddar even if it had been at the instance of the accused could not form a corroborative piece of evidence of the retracted confession.

(17) Much stress was laid on the motive which induced the accused to commit this crime. It is stated that the accused wanted to avenge upon Mst. Farzani for not having given to him the share which he got by virtue of the gift deed executed in his favour by his father-in-law. There is no doubt some evidence to show that Mst. Farzani did not agree to part with half portion of the share in the land to the accused but after the decision of the Panchayat which was accepted by the accused it does not appear that the accused had any ill feelings towards his mother-in-law. Even if he felt a little aggrieved we do not think it would be such a strong motive as would induce him to commit such a heinous crime especially when he was so well disposed towards Wali Mir deceased that he was making arrangements for his marriage.

(18) Taking all the circumstances into consideration we do not think that the prosecution has made out a charge of murder against the accused. We, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside his conviction and sentence and direct the release of Samad Malik forthwith, unless required in connection with some other charge.

KILAM J. (Reviewing Judge)

Ghulam Nabi and others, Accused-Applicants v. State.

Criminal Revn. No. 28 of 2006, D/- 9 Maghar 2006.

(a) (Jammu and Kashmir) Constitution Act (14 of 1996) Ss. 5, 38 — Ordinances passed under — Distinction — J. and K. Ordinance No. 8 of 2005 passed under S. 5 does not expire after six months — (Jammu and Kashmir) Enemy Agents Ordinance (8 of 2005), S. 1).

A time limit of six months is prescribed for an Ordinance that may be passed by His Highness under S. 38 of the (J. & K.) Constitution Act, 1996, on the recommendation of the Council, but as regards the laws and ordinances that are passed by His Highness by virtue of the powers reserved in him under S. 5 of the Constitution Act no time limit has been prescribed in the Act. The result is that any such ordinance passed under S. 5 by His Highness would continue to exist as long as it is on the Statute Book and has not been repealed by the authority promulgating the same.

(Para 7)

Held that the Enemy Agents Ordinance, (8 of 2005) having been passed under S. 5 of the Constitution Act was still in force and would continue to be in force till it was repealed.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898) Ss. 156, 537 — Investigation by inferior officer — Defect curable under S. 537 — Trial not vitiated.

As a matter of fact a conviction or an acquittal does not depend upon the question as to which particular officer actually conducted the investigation which resulted in the trial. That is to be determined mainly on the basis of the evidence that is tendered at the trial. Therefore, an irregularity occasioned by a Sub-Inspector investigating into an offence instead of an inspector, is curable by S. 537 Cr. P. C. and does not by itself vitiate the trial. (d) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 114 and 133 — Approver — Evidence by — Corroboration — Necessity — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 337).

A conviction based upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is not illegal, though it is highly dangerous to base a conviction upon his uncorroborated evidence. It is a wholesome rule of practice that an approver must be corroborated before he is treated as worthy of credit. The question of corroboration, however, is not an easy one, and in every case the Court has got to see that the corroboration forthcoming is not only in general terms but must specifically connect each accused with the actual commission of the offence. (e) Evidence Act (1872) Ss. 133 and 114 — Accomplice — Who is — Evidence by, must be corroborated by independent witness.

The word accomplice has not been defined in the Evidence Act and must be taken in its ordinary sense. Ordinarily an accomplice means a guilty associate or a partner in a crime or who in some way or the other is connected with the offence in question. The test that can be laid down, in order to see as to whether a particular witness is an accomplice or not is as to whether he can be jointly indicted with the other accused in a particular case.

The evidence of one accomplice cannot be corroborated by that of another accomplice and in order to connect each accused with the offence, corroboration must be by independent evidence. (Para 14)

ORDER: Eighteen persons by name Ghulam Nabi Bazaz, Rashid Mir, Iqbal Bhat, Mohy Din Pandit, Gulam Mohd Kar, Ali Mohd Vakil, Sh. Iftikhar Ahmad, Dost Mohd. Khan, Gani Magre, Sadiq Bat, Aziz Bat, Ghulam Ahmad Karnay, Q. Gulam Hassan, Ahmad Bhat Tangaban, Karam Din, Sultan Bat, Rasul Khan and Ghulam Naqi have been convicted by the learned Special Judge, Srinagar for offence under S. 3 of the Enemy Agents Ordinance, and

Ss. 4, 5 and 6 of the Explosive Substances Act and also under S. 120-B, Ranbir Penal Code. They have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. There were about 37 accused in this case out of whom 13 accused are absconding. Two have turned approvers. The remaining 22 were sent up for trial, out of whom four namely Inayat Ullah Khan, Raja Habib Ullah Khan, Mohy Din Pukhta and Dr. Abdul Majid have been acquitted.

(2) The case for the prosecution has arisen out of the following facts: It is alleged that one Maraj Din Pandit, who is accused No. 25 in the Challan, was league minded and wanted some how or other to bring about the failure of Indian troops operating in Kashmir. This he hoped to achieve by creating as much of internal turmoil as was humanly possible for him to do and thereby he hoped to create what has been termed as an internal front so as to facilitate the coming in and contribute to the success of the Pakistan invaders. With this object in view he is said to have acted as the master mind in the organisation of a conspiracy which it is alleged by the prosecution was given a practical shape in the month of Baisakh 2005, when accused Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31 and 32 assembled at his house for formulating a programme and giving a practical shape of the ideas harboured by Maraj Din. It is alleged that in this meeting it was resolved that a centre be opened where Muslims of the League persuasion would be given training in the use of daggers and dangs. Besides that, not being content with these homely weapons, it was further decided that steps be taken for the importation of arms and ammunition from the Pakistan side. Narpur Gali from the Badgam side & Tutmar Gali from the Handwara side were chosen as routes for importation of arms & ammunition. Two batches, one consisting of accused Jahangir (No. 26), Mohd. Maqbool Sheikh (No. 27), Rashid Mir (No. 2) and Iqbal Bhat (No. 3) and the other of accused Ali Mohd. Vakil (No. 6), Ehsan Ullah (No. 31), Atta Ullah (No. 30), Ghulam Mohd. Kar (No. 5) and Mohud-Din Pandit (No. 4) were selected for operating on the Badgam and Handwara sides respectively.

(3) Over and above the persons who joined the first conspiratorial meeting, there were others who were taken into confidence by these persons and their cases will also be dealt with at the proper time. In the month of Jeth 2005, the importation business was taken up in right earnest. It is alleged by the prosecution that Jehangir who was deputed along with some other accused towards the Badgam side, came one day to Meraj Din Pandit and informed him that they had succeeded in persuading the Pakistani Leaders to supply them with the much needed arms and ammunition. Accompanied by one Capt. Manna who remained as a guest with Maraj Din Pandit for some time Jehangir came to Srinagar. Sidiq Bat and Aziz Bat (accused No. 10 and 11)—two servants of Meraj Din Pandit—were detained with Jehangir for the purpose of carrying information from him to the head-quarters of the party. After all the ammunition did arrive it had to be carried and for this purpose some Pahari people were engaged. They had to conceal their identity and for this purpose both Sadiq Bat and Aziz Bat carried from Srinagar some clothes to be worn by them so as to make them appear as Kashmiris. When these articles of ammunition arrived within the State, Ghulam Nabi Lala (approver), Gani Magree, Sadiq Bat and Aziz Bat (accused Nos. 23, 9, 10 and 11) went to a jungle situate at a short distance from Dudhathari, but at a fairly good distance from Badgam, and brought two boxes with themselves containing hand grenades. After some time these articles were carried to a garden at Hakahal by Jehangir and Gulam Nabi Lala approver and some other persons from Pakistan. This garden once belonged to one Col. Rehmat Ullah Khan but was later seized by the Government and was placed in charge of Dost Mohd. Khan accused. Why these articles of ammunition were taken to the garden can be explained by the fact that Jehangir accused was the purchaser of the fruit of this garden & he had sold this fruit to Ghulam Nabi Lala approver and as such they had the whole garden at their disposal. The latter procured some wooden boxes generally used for carrying fruit. These boxes were used as a cover to hide the hand-grenades which were placed in them. The boxes were concealed in the garden at Hakahal. For the time being all, it seems, went well with the conspirators, but some how or other the news leaked out and the Badgam police put itself on the track. The police arrived on spot and apprehended Dost Mohd. who it appears was made of a weaker clay and at once pointed out to the police the place where hand grenades were stored. This place was dug out and the hand grenades found. The result was that the activities of the conspirators on that side proved abortive.

(4) While disaster overtook the conspirators on Badgam side, the Handawara party was well on its mission. The Handawara party was headed by Ali Mohd. Vakil accused No. 6. He took into his confidence one Ghulam Ahmad Ganai who later on turned as approver. Both of them went to the house of Rajas of Zachaldara, namely Rajas Inayatullah, Habibullah, Ehsanullah, & Attaullah (accused Nos. 14, 15, 30 and 31). With the Rajas Ali Mohd and his party had a free and frank discussion about the aims and objects of the conspiracy. The discussion having lasted for the whole night, on the succeeding morning Ali Mohd, Raja Atta Ullah, Aziz Sheikh and Ahmad Tangaban (accused Nos. 6, 30, 33 and 16) went to see Brigadier Khalid of the Pakistan Army. After three days Ali Mohd came back, bringing with himself a box containing hand grenades and a letter for one Abdul Ghaffar of Amira Kadal in which the latter was asked to hand over the wireless set to Ali Mohd Vakil. Ghulam Ahmad Ganai approver was instructed that the box should be sent over to Meraj Din through Mohy Din Pandit. For some time this box remained with Aziz Sheikh (accused No. 33) and Mohd Khan (accused No. 35) wherefrom it was brought by them to Gamapura and kept there with Q. Ghulam Hassan (accused No. 13). Finally this box reached the house of one Ghulam Ahmad Karnayi (No. 12) at Doabgah. To avoid unnecessary suspicion, Ali Mohd Vakil, Meraj Din and others decided that this box should not be carried to the town of Sopore and, therefore, it was sent across the river to Sangrama road and was carried there by Shaban Tante, a servant of Ghulam Ahmad Karnayi. From there Ali Mohd, Meraj Din and two other men got it to Srinagar. The car in which Mehraj Din had gone to Sopore was out of order and it was through one Mistri Ali Mohd, who was carried from Srinagar to the house of one Ali Mohd Hajam, that the car was repaired. At Srinagar Meraj Din opened the boxes and found 12 hand grenades in it, out of which one was kept by him with himself and the remaining 11 were kept with Sultan Bhat accused.

(5) Again in the month of Bhadon 2005 Ali Mohd renewed his activities and this time accompanied by Ehsanullah, Aziz Sheikh and some others went to Muzaffarabad and from there he went to Rawalpindi, wherefrom he brought arms and ammunition in fairly large quantities. This quantity of ammunition was dumped in the house of one Sultan Gojar. There it remained for some time when Ali Mohd. Vakil, Raja Ehsanullah, Dr. Nazir-ul-Islam, and Ghulam Ahmad Ganai started discussing as to what would be a safe place for keeping these explosives. Later on it was carried out of the house of Sultan Gojar and kept on a walnut tree covered by grass. By this means they hoped to ward off suspicion. Besides the importation of arms and ammunition, a number of scurrilous posters and cartoons were brought which were sent to the house of Dr. Nazir-ul-Islam. The police who was on the track reached Handawara side also. The houses of the Rajas were searched and arms and ammunition recovered. The ammunition dumped on the walnut tree, after it was removed from Sultan Gojar's house was also found out and searches were started at Srinagar and from the house of Dr. Nazir-ul-Islam a number of posters and pamphlets etc. were recovered. Meanwhile a great deal of disturbance was caused in the ranks of the conspirators some of whom went underground and some were arrested. The accused were then challaned under S. 3 of the Enemy Agents Ordinance, Ss. 4, 5 and 6 of the Explosive Substances Act and S. 120-B Ranbir Penal Code. This in brief is a synopsis of the case for the prosecution.

(6) The prosecution has produced 51 witnesses to prove its case. These witnesses narrate the proceedings of the meetings of the conspirators, recoveries and other activities of the accused. On behalf of the accused statements of about 144 witnesses have been recorded. This evidence will be dealt with when the cases of the individual accused are gone into by me. The case mainly hinges upon the evidence of two approvers Ghulam Nabi Lala and Ghulam Ahmad Ganai and also on that of Mohd. Hus-sain.

(7) The learned Special Judge has written a well-reasoned judgment, though rather lengthy and the case has been argued at very great length by both the Learned counsel for the accused and also by the Learned Assistant Advocate General. A number of preliminary objections were raised by the Learned counsel questioning not only the jurisdiction of the Court trying the accused but also the competence of the investigating officer to hold investigation in the case. His argument is that it was under the provisions of Ordinance No. 8 of 2005 that the Court of the Special Judge was brought into existence. He further argued that this ordinance had ceased to have any force on the date when the judgment was pronounced, the judgment having been pronounced six months after the passing of this ordinance. In other words the Learned counsel argues that this ordinance could remain in force only for six months. In support of his argument he has drawn my attention to S. 38 of the Constitution Act of 1996 which lays down that in case of emergency or where immediate legislation is required in any manner affecting peace or good government of the State, the Council may submit to His Highness an ordinance and such ordinance on being assented to by His Highness shall have the force of law for a period not exceeding six months from the date of its promulgation. But this argument of the Learned Counsel does not hold water. The ordinance in question has not been passed under S. 38 of the Constitution Act of 1996. On the contrary the preamble to Ordinance No. 8 of 2005 would make it clear that this ordinance was passed by His Highness in exercise of powers reserved in him under S. 5 of the Constitution Act. Under S. 5 of the Constitution "nothing contained in this Act would affect the right and prerogative of His Highness to make laws or issue proclamations, orders and ordinances by virtue of his inherent authority." True, that a time limit of six months is prescribed for an ordinance that may be passed by His Highness on the recommendation of the Council, but as regards the laws and ordinances that are passed by His Highness by virtue of the powers reserved in him under S. 5 of the Constitution Act no time limit has been prescribed in the Act. The result is that any such ordinance that has been passed under S. 5 by His Highness would continue to exist as long as it is on the Statute Book and has not been repealed by the authority promulgating the same. Under these circumstances this argument of the Learned Counsel cannot hold water and it is, therefore, held that the ordinance is still in force and will continue to remain in force till it is repealed and that the Court that has been constituted under the provisions of this ordinance is a competent Court to deal with any case coming within the purview of the said ordinance.

(8) There is yet another objection raised by the Learned Counsel. He argues that Sheikh Qadir was not a competent person to start an investigation in the case. Reference has been made by him to S. 156, Criminal P. C., in which it has been laid down that any officer in charge of a police station may investigate any cognizable offence. The argument of the Learned Counsel is that as S. Ghulam Qadir was not an officer in charge of a police station, as such he could not have investigated the present offence. But sub-s. (2) of S. 156 Criminal P. C. lays down that "no proceedings of a police officer in any such case shall at any stage be called in question on the ground that the case was one which such officer was not empowered under this section to investigate."

As a matter of fact a conviction or an acquittal does not depend upon the question as to which particular officer actually conducted the investigation which resulted in the trial. That is to be determined mainly on the basis of the evidence that is tendered at the trial. A case may arise in which an investigation may appear to have been conducted under circumstances which may be called as suspicious. This shall certainly be a circumstance which will be taken into consideration by a Court trying the case, but this by itself would not vitiate the trial. In — 'Hafiz Mohamed v. Emperor', AIR 1931 Pat 150 it has been held that ".....failure properly to conduct an investigation into an offence cannot vitiate a trial which was started on the final report after the investigation." In — 'Shivbhat Manjunathbhat v. Emperor', AIR 1928 Bom 162 it has been held that ".....the question whether that evidence has, in the first place, been elicited by an inspector or by a Sub-Inspector is of very minor importance and does not really affect the result of a trial, except to this extent that the theory is that the higher the rank of the police officer investigating, the more careful and unimpeachable his inquiry is likely to be. Therefore, an irregularity occasioned by a Sub-Inspector investigating into an offence, which investigation should have been made by an inspector, is curable by S. 537 Cr. P. C."

In a Privy Council case reported as — 'Parbhu v. Emperor', AIR 1944 P.C. 73, the contention of the accused was that his arrest having been effected in the Jind territory by a British Indian Officer was illegal and that the illegality of his arrest vitiated the whole of the subsequent proceedings. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that "..... the proceedings before that Court were regular and in order, and the validity of the trial and conviction of the accused could not be affected by any irregularity in his arrest." I am in respectful agreement with the view enunciated in the above rulings and hold that even if there was any irregularity in the investigation proceedings taken by the Sub-Inspector Sh. Ghulam Qadir, that irregularity by itself is of very minor importance for the decision of the present case and that the trial cannot be impugned on the ground of such an irregularity.

(9) The learned Counsel has further argued that the investigating Sub-Inspector (S. Ghulam Qadir) has failed to comply with the mandatory provisions of S. 157, since he has omitted to send a report to the magistrate which is necessary under S. 158. He has also referred me to — 'AIR 1931 Pat 150' (referred to already) in which it has been held that "a police officer will be deemed to have failed to comply with the provisions of S. 157 if he has omitted to send a report to the magistrate. But in the same judgment on p. 152 it has been laid down by their Lordships that "There can be no doubt that the Sub-Inspector in his procedure disobeyed certain provisions of the law, and for that he could be punished, if the authorities deemed it fit, but I cannot find that his failure was to the prejudice of the petitioners. Nor can I see how failure properly to conduct an investigation into an offence can vitiate a trial which was started on the final report after the investigation". All this would make it amply clear that if there was some thing irregular in the investigation started by S. Ghulam Qadir, that would not in any way vitiate the trial of the accused that was conducted by a duly constituted Tribunal.

(10) The Learned Assistant Advocate General has met this argument in a very ingenious, and I should think, in an original manner too. His contention is that under S. 157 of the Criminal P. C., from information received, an officer of the police station shall forward a report of the same to a magistrate empowered to take cognizance of such offence upon a police report. But he argues that the present case was not cognizable by any magistrate and as such no report could be sent or needed being sent to a magistrate. It is true that the present case was within the cognizance of the Special Judge specially constituted under Ordinance No. 8 of 2005. Since no magistrate was empowered to take cognizance of this case, therefore, the necessity of sending a report to a magistrate did not arise at all.

(11) The preliminary objections of the Learned Counsel having been thus disposed of, let us see what is the evidence in this case. As already stated this case hinges mainly upon the evidence of two approvers and one other witness by name Mohd. Hussain. The question has frequently arisen before Criminal courts as to whether an approver is a competent witness so as to base a conviction upon his uncorroborated testimony. According to S. 133 of the Evidence Act "An accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person, and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice." But illustration (b) of S. 114 Evidence Act lays down "that a Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars." In England the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law but it has long been a rule of practice at common law for the Judge to warn the jury of the danger of convicting a person on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, and in the discretion of the Judge he may recommend them not to do so. Nevertheless in England it is within the legal province of the jury to convict upon such unconfirmed evidence, if after proper caution by the Judge the jury finds the evidence of the accomplice without corroboration worthy of credit. The rule in India is exactly the same. In — Emperor v. Jamaldi Fakir, AIR 1924 Cal 701 the dictum of Reading C. J. in — R. v. Baskerville, (1916) 2 K B 658 has been quoted with approval by the learned bench which is to the effect that "there is no doubt that the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law. But it has long been a rule of practice at common law for the judge to warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice or accomplices and, in the discretion of the judge, to advise them not to convict upon such evidence, but the judge should point out to the jury that it is within their legal province to convict upon such unconfirmed evidence".

But in considering whether the testimony of an accomplice should or should not be believed, illustration (b) to S. 114 which says that an accomplice needs corroboration in material particulars, cannot be lost sight of. In India in practice the courts have invariably started with the presumption against the trustworthiness of the accomplice unless corroborated in material particulars. The considered opinion in this country as also in England is that a conviction based upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is not illegal, though it is highly dangerous to base a conviction upon his uncorroborated evidence. In England the law has been summed up in the following words:

"There is no absolute rule of law that accomplice evidence must be corroborated. But as Martin B. said in — R. v. Boyes, (1861) 9 Cox C. C. 32 there is a rule of practice which has become so hallowed as to be deserving of respect..... It deserves to have all the reverence of law."

This rule of guidance is to be found in illus. (b) S. 114. (of the Indian Evidence Act). Both the sections (S. 133 and S. 114 Illus. (b)) are parts of one subject and should always be considered together. In — Nga Aung Pe v. Emperor, 1937 Rang LR 110, Roberts C.J. said:

"The rule of law says that he (accomplice) is competent to give evidence, and the rule of practice says that it is almost always unsafe to convict upon his testimony alone."

So also has Phear J. remarked in — R. v. Sadhu Mundul, 21 W R Cr 69 that the combined result of the two sections (S. 133 and 144 Illus. B) appears to be that the Legislature has laid it down as a maxim or rule of evidence resting on human experience that an accomplice is unworthy of credit against an accused person, unless he is corroborated in material particulars in respect to that person. The reason for requiring corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice is that an approver on his own admission is a Criminal, and a man of the lowest character who has thrown to the wolves his own erstwhile associates and friends in order to save his own skin. It has been held therein that his evidence must be received with very great caution.

(12) There is no use referring to all the rulings on the subject. Suffice it to say that the rule of practice that an approver must be corroborated before he is treated as worthy of credit is almost of universal applicability and in the present case I do not find any reason to make a departure from this most wholesome practice. This court, so also the Board of judicial advisers, have in a number of cases followed this rule and as already stated I would also follow the lead given to by my illustrious predecessors in a number of cases. But then it has to be borne in mind that the question of corroboration is not an easy one, and in every case the court has got to see that the corroboration forthcoming is not only in general terms but must specifically connect each accused with the actual commission of the offence. It has been held in — Ranbir Singh v. Emperor, AIR 1932 Lah 204 that "Corroboration falls under two heads: (1) general corroboration and (2) special corroboration connecting each of the accused with the offence. The first shows or is meant to show that the man is truthful and has a good memory. With regard to the second it is settled law that additional corroboration is required connecting accused individually with the actual commission of the offence. Prudence requires that the connexion of each individual with the crime should be proved and corroborated by independent evidence; the real point being that precaution must be taken against the possibility of substitution. A story may be meticulously true on every detail with the all important exception that the name of A has been inserted instead of the name of B. The correctness of the story is not affected by this all-important change".

This dictum has been passed by Harrison J. who delivered the judgment on behalf of the Bench in a case in which an attempt was made on the life of the Governor of the Punjab and one Sub-Inspector who was in attendance was killed. A number of accused were tried and sentenced to death for conspiracy along with one Hari Krishen who was captured on spot. The law on the subject has been very lucidly detailed in this judgment and I propose to follow the lead given by it.

(13) This proposition of law has been conceded very frankly by the learned Assistant Advocate General who appeared on behalf of the State. Now we have got to see whether there is general corroboration for the conspiracy. Both the approvers have described the various courses through which the conspiracy ran and have given a very detailed description of the whole affair. That there was a conspiracy is proved not only by the statements of the approvers but by the ample corroboration which it has received from a Khal, Nila Dugar and other places. Hundreds of hand grenades and other weapons and posters, pamphlets and cartoons were literally unearthed at the instance of some accused. From many individual accused hand grenades and sten guns etc. were also recovered. Under these circumstances, I am definitely of the opinion that there existed a conspiracy in which a number of people took part and which was hatched for the purpose of subverting the present Government and facilitating a successful attack by the Pakistan hordes.

(14) This having been established that conspiracy did exist with the aforesaid purpose, now the point that we have got to see is as to which of the accused have been proved to have participated in this conspiracy and other acts in its furtherance. The approver as also Mohd. Hussain witness say that Ghulam Nabi Bazaz (accused No. 1) Rashid Mir (No. 2) Iqbal Bhat (No. 3), Mohy-din Pandit (No. 4), Ghulam Mohamad Kar (No. 5) Ali Mohamad, Wakil (No. 6), Sh Iftikhara Ahmad (No. 7), Ghulam Nabi Lala (No. 23) Meraj-din Pandit (No. 25), Iqbal Khan (No. 28) Mohd. Maqbul Jhenger Khan (No. 26) Sheikh (No. 27), Mohd Amin Faktoo (No. 29), Raja Atta Ulah (No. 30), Raja Esan Ullah (No. 31) and Dr. Nazir-ul-Islam (No. 32) participated in the meetings wherein these fateful decisions which later on proved abortive, were taken. Before proceeding further, I think it is necessary to decide as to what is the position of Mohd Hussain in this case. The learned assistant Advocate General has argued that Mohd Hussain is an independent witness and that his evidence can be used for corroborative purposes. But I am afraid I cannot agree with the view pressed by him. True it is that Mohd. Hussain has not been given king's pardon, but admittedly he was present in both the meetings which did take place in the house of Meraj Din accused. The question is: Is Mohd Hussain an independent witness or an accomplice? Unfortunately the word accomplice has not been defined in the Evidence Ordinance and in my opinion it must be taken in its a guilty sense. Ordinarily an accomplice means who is associated or a partner in a crime or with the offender or the other is connected and offence in question. In — 'Punjab Char Bank Ltd., Gujranwala v. Amir Char', AIR 1930 Lah 731 a wife, who was cognizant of the fact that the accused intended to kill her husband and did not disclose that fact to him was recorded as an accomplice. The test that can be laid down, in order to see as to whether a particular witness is an accomplice or not, is as to whether he can be jointly indicted with the other accused in a particular case. Applying this test to Mohd. Hussain, I am of the opinion that he cannot rid himself of the position which can be assigned to an accomplice. He was present in both the meetings. Fateful decisions were taken in his presence, I mean decisions if carried into practice would have meant death and disaster to many a person and destruction of much valuable property. This man kept these secrets hermetically sealed in his own bosom. Besides that the mere fact that the organization of the meeting allowed him to participate and be present in the meeting shows that he was a trusted colleague of the conspirators. Under these circumstances, bearing in mind the test laid above, the evidence of Mohd Hussain cannot be given greater credit than that of an accomplice. The mere fact that the police has not secured pardon for him, would not in any way improve his position. Therefore, the evidence of Mohd. Hussain cannot be treated as corroboration of the statement of the other approvers. The corroboration of an approver must be corroboration by independent evidence i.e., by the evidence of a person other than that of an accomplice. It should not be lost sight of that tainted evidence cannot be made better by being doubled in quantity. Therefore, the evidence of one accomplice cannot be corroborated by that of another accomplice and in order to connect each accused with the offence, corroboration must be by independent evidence. The present position is that the evidence of Mohd Hussain would also require corroboration.

(15) Having laid down the principles that should guide me in dealing with the evidence in the case, let us now deal with each individual accused.

(16) (After discussing the evidence on record relating to each of the accused the order continues as follows:) The result of the above is that the convictions of Rashid Mir (accused No. 2) Iqbal Bat (No. 3) Mohd-Ud-Din Pandit (No. 4), and Ghulam Mohd. Kar (No. 5) are set aside. They are acquitted and ordered to be released forthwith. The convictions and sentences recorded against Ali Mohd. Wakil are maintained, excepting that under S. 3 of the Enemy Agents Ordinance the imprisonment of ten years is reduced to that of seven years. The convictions of the remaining accused, i.e., Ghulam Nabi Bazaz (accused No. 1) Sh. Iftikhar Ahmad (No. 7) Dost Mohd Khan (No. 8) Ghani Magre (No. 9), Sidiq Bat (No. 10), Aziz Bat (No. 11), Ghulam Ahmad Karnavai (No. 12), Q. Ghulam Hassan (No. 13) Ahad Bat Tangaban (No. 14), Karam Din (No. 15), Sultan Bat (No. 16), Rasul Khan (No. 17), and Ghulam Naqi (No. 18) are upheld and their sentences maintained. The sentences of fine and imprisonment in default thereof are also maintained. The sentences of imprisonment in each case shall run concurrently.

(17) This Revision application is accepted to the extent indicated above.

(a) Hindu Law — Joint family — Partition — Evidence — Recitals in document.

Annoyed on account of his strained relations with his son who after the death of his mother had started living separately, if the father prepares a record in writing stating that certain properties were taken away by his son and that he was living separately from him, the mere recitals of this nature do not go to show that partition had been effected between members of a joint Hindu family. (Para 10)

(b) Hindu Law — Joint family — Partition — Mother's share.

On partition of the joint family property by the sons after their father's death, the widow is entitled to get a share equal to that of each of the sons, and if she has received any property either by gift or legacy from the father, she is entitled to so much only as with what she has already received would make her share equal to that of each of the sons. At the time of partition the widow should not be in a worse position merely because she has received stridhan from her husband or from her father-in-law. 12 Cal 165, Foll. (Para 17)

JUDGMENT: This appeal arises out of a suit for partition and possession of the property described in para. 2 of the plaint and for declaration that defendant 1 had no claim to the property which was acquired separately by the father of the plaintiff after partition.

(2) The following pedigree table will help in understanding the facts of the case:

Prem Nath died leaving one son Hirdey Nath by his deceased wife Iqbal Rani and a widow Mst. Chanda Rani and two minor children Piare Lal and Rajkumari. Piare Lal minor is the plaintiff in the suit. He has brought a suit for partition and possession through his next friend Pt. Babbar Koul against his brother Hirdey Nath defendant 1, his uncle Mohan Lal defendant 4 and his son Som Nath defendant 5 and has also impleaded his sister Raj Kumari as defendant 2 and Mst. Chanda Rani his mother as defendant 3.

(3) The plaintiff's case is that his father Pt. Prem Nath separated from his son Hirdey Nath defendant 1 in the year 1989 and lived joint with the plaintiff, his mother and his sister till his death. Mohan Lal, his uncle, separated from his father in S. 1996 and executed a document by which some of the ancestral property was partitioned and some of it remained joint. It is alleged in the plaint that as Hirdey Nath had separated from his father in the year 1989 he had no claim over any property which Prem Nath had acquired subsequent to the partition and a declaration was sought that Hirdey Nath Defendant 1 had no claim to the property which was acquired by the plaintiff's father after partition.

(4) Hirdey Nath defendant resisted the suit on the grounds that he had not separated from his father; that the widow defendant 3 and the daughter Raj Kumari defendant 2 were not entitled to any share in the ancestral property; that the plaintiff had not included some of the ancestral property in the list mentioned in the plaint, and therefore, his suit was not maintainable. It was further averred that his father, Prem Nath had gifted some portion of the land to deft. 3 his wife out of the ancestral property which he could not do and the gift made in favour of defendant 3 was invalid.

(5) Defendant 2 claimed maintenance and her marriage expenses while defendant 3 claimed her share in the property left by her husband and stated that the gift of land made by her husband was in lieu of some ornaments which her husband had sold and utilised the amount on his illness.

(6) Mohan Lal and his son claimed one-half of the ancestral property left by the common ancestor Har Narayan and also claimed a portion of the rent of the land which had been realised by Prem Nath, the father of the plaintiff.

(7) The following material issues were struck by the trial Court:

- (1) Had the entire property belonging to the parties been put into the hotch-potch? If not, what other property ought to have been included in the ancestral property?
- (2) Had defendant 1 separated during the lifetime of Pt. Prem Nath?
- (3) Is the stridhan property belonging to defendant 1 in the hands of defendant 3 and is defendant 1 entitled to claim it in the present suit?
- (4) In case of partition what are the respective shares to which the parties to the suit are entitled?

(8) The trial Court of District Judge, after considering the evidence — oral and documentary — adduced by the parties came to the conclusion that the entire ancestral property had been included by the plaintiff in the plaint for the purpose of partition; that defendant 1 had not separated from the plaintiff's father in his lifetime; that the widow defendant 3 was not in possession of any stridhan belonging to Mst. Iqbal Rani, mother of defendant 1. Mohan Lal defendant 4 and his son

Som Nath were entitled to one-half share in the ancestral property, the remaining one-half was to be partitioned between the plaintiff, Hirdey Nath defendant 1 and Mst. Chanda Rani defendant 3. Defendant 2 Raj Kumari was allowed maintenance allowance of Rs. 30/- p.m. till her marriage and also her marriage expenses.

(9) The plaintiff Piare Lal has come up in appeal against this preliminary decree passed by the District Judge. On behalf of the plaintiff-appellant it is argued that the District Judge has erred in holding that no partition took place between Hirdey Nath and Prem Nath in S. 1989.

(10) We have been taken through the evidence produced by the plaintiff in regard to the alleged partition. Great reliance is placed by the appellant's counsel on the will alleged to have been executed by Prem Nath dated 15th Poh 1996 and it is argued that in the will there is a clear mention of the fact that partition of the property has been effected between Hirdey Nath and Prem Nath. It may be pointed out at the outset that the document dated 15th Poh 1996 referred to by the appellant's counsel is not a will but is a mere recital of what Prem Nath had spent on his son defendant 1. It appears that after the death of his first wife Prem Nath's relations became strained with his son Hirdey Nath and Hirdey Nath lived separately from his father after the death of his mother. It is in evidence that Hirdey Nath defendant 1 removed some furniture to the house of his sister where he was residing after his mother's death. This fact annoyed his father and on account of his strained relations with his son he executed a deed in which he stated that certain properties were taken away by his son defendant 1 and that he was living separately from him. Mere recitals of this nature would not go to show that partition had been effected between members of a joint Hindu family and that defendant 1 had received his share out of the joint property.

(11) Another circumstance has been brought to our notice to show that partition was effected between the father & the son. Our attention has been drawn to a written statement dated 29th Jeth 1997 filed by Bakshi Prem Nath in a suit which was instituted by one Dina Nath against Hirdey Nath defendant and his father Bk. Prem Nath. This suit was for the recovery of the price of a butter churning machine which was purchased by Hirdey Nath from Dina Nath. This suit was brought for the recovery of the price against Hirdey Nath and his father as they were considered to be the members of the joint Hindu family. In that suit Prem Nath, father of Hirdey Nath, stated in the written statement that his son was living separate from him and he was not responsible for the debt due from his son. The suit was decreed against Hirdey Nath defendant. The counsel for the appellant argues that as the suit was decreed against Hirdey Nath alone it clearly showed that there was a disruption of the joint family and Hirdey Nath had already separated from his father. We do not see any force in this contention. There was no definite issue raised by the trial Court in that suit in regard to the jointness or otherwise of the family and merely because the suit was decreed against Hirdey Nath alone would not show that he had separated from his father. Moreover a revision was preferred against the decree passed by the Judge Small Causes and the judgment of the High Court in that revision application does not show that any disruption of the joint family had taken place.

(12) The learned counsel has laid great stress on the testimony of Sarva Nand, a domestic servant of Prem Nath, and wants us to hold on the basis of this evidence that Hirdey Nath had taken away his share of the property and had separated from his father. We have gone through the evidence of Sarva Nand and we find that his evidence is vague and indefinite and does not establish the partition between Hirdey Nath and his father Prem Nath. He has not been able to give the details of the property which is alleged to have been taken away by Hirdey Nath after his mother's death. If Hirdey Nath had already separated from his father the latter would not have deposited Rs. 400 in the name of Hirdey Nath's daughter at the time when partition took place between Prem Nath and his brother Mohan Lal.

(13) After going through the documentary and oral evidence we are satisfied that the finding arrived at by the trial Court that Hirdey Nath and Prem Nath had not separated in S. 1989 is quite correct.

(14) Counsel for defendant 3 has pointed out a mistake committed by the District Judge in calculating the share of his client. The District Judge has remarked on p. 12 as follows:

"According to para. 316 of Mulla's Hindu Law a widowed mother is entitled to a share equal to that of a son in the joint property and according to sub-s. (2) of the same para the value of Istridhan received from her husband is to be deducted from her share. The daughter is not entitled to a share but is only entitled to maintenance and marriage expenses. Therefore, at the time of partition between sons these 70 Kanals and 19 marlas received by Chanda Rani are to be deducted from her share in the joint Hindu family property."

(15) The trial Court has divided one-half of 435 kanals and 15 marlas of land in village Palampura into three equal shares of 72 Kanals and 12 marlas each. Out of the share of Chanda Rani he has taken 70 Kanals and 19 marlas leaving 1 kanal and 13 marlas to her which she has to get over and above the land which she has already received as a gift. The learned counsel for defendant 3 has argued that the method adopted by the District Judge is erroneous inasmuch as the widow is getting not equal share with her sons but much less than the share of the sons which is not the intention of the law. He has drawn our attention to para. 316 of Mulla's Hindu Law which reads as under:

- (1) A mother cannot compel a partition so long as the sons remain united. But if partition takes place between the sons, she is entitled to a share equal to that of a son in the coparcenary property.
- (2) If the mother has received stridhana from her husband or father-in-law, its value should be deducted from her share.

(16) It is argued that if the mother has received stridhana she cannot be placed in a position of disadvantage and get a share which is much less than the shares received by her sons.

The mother according to the learned counsel should get along with the stridhana equal share with the sons. In support of this contention reliance is placed on a quotation in Hindu Law by Trevelyan on p. 317 in which it is laid down that if the wife has previously had separate property given to her by her husband or father-in-law, she takes so much as with such property would amount to that of one of the sons. In S. 136 of Hindu Law by Gour it is laid down that subject to any local law or usage to the contrary, the following female relations are each entitled to a share on partition :

(1) On a partition between the father and his sons, or between the sons, their mother and their grand-mother are entitled to a share which with the stridhan received from their husband or the father-in-law must equal a son's share.

(17) It is, therefore, clear that the mother on partition gets share in the joint family property equal to that of her son and in case she has already received stridhan that has to be accounted for in order to make up her share equal to that of the son. It stands to reason that at the time of partition the mother should not be in a worse position merely because she has received stridhan from her husband or from her father-in-law. The share of the mother together with stridhan should be equal to that of her sons. The same view has been taken in a Calcutta case reported as — 'Kishori Mohun v. Moni Mohun', 12 Cal 165 (A), wherein it has been laid down that on partition of the joint family property by the sons after their father's death, the widow is entitled to get a share equal to that of each of the sons, and if she has received any property either by gift or legacy from the father, she is entitled to so much only as with what she has already received would make her share equal to that of each of the sons.

(18) The District Judge has deducted from the share of the mother stridhan which she has already received from her husband and allotted to her only the balance of 1 Kanal and 13 marlas over and above the land which she has received as a gift. This calculation is erroneous. The widow, defendant 3, is entitled to one-third of 217 kanals and  $17\frac{1}{2}$  marlas which comes to 72 kanals and  $12\frac{1}{2}$  marlas. She has already received 70 kanals and 19 marlas as stridhan. The land received by her as stridhan is to be deducted out of the share allotted to her leaving 1 kanal and  $13\frac{1}{2}$  marlas. The deducted portion of 70 kanals and 19 marlas of coparcenary property which has been taken away from the share of the mother will have to be divided again equally between the mother & her sons, each coparcenary will receive 23 kanals & 13 marlas as one-third share. The sons, therefore, will get 72 kanals and  $12\frac{1}{2}$  marlas plus 23 kanals and 13 marlas i.e., 96 kanals and  $5\frac{1}{2}$  marlas each whereas the widow will get 70 kanals and 19 marlas which she has already got by way of gift and 25 kanals and  $6\frac{1}{2}$  marlas (comprised of 1 kanal and  $13\frac{1}{2}$  marlas plus 23 kanals and 13 marlas) out of the coparcenary property making her share equal to that of the sons i.e., 96 kanals and  $5\frac{1}{2}$  marlas.

(19) With the above modification in the shares, the plaintiff's appeal is dismissed. In view of the circumstances of the case the parties shall bear their own costs in this Court.

ORDER: This is a revision application directed against an order of the learned City Munsiff Srinagar dated 23rd Phagon 2008 whereby an ex parte decree passed against the defendant-applicant was set aside.

(2) Pandit Hirday Nath Dhar Advocate who argued this application with great ability and clarity made reference to a number of rulings in which it has been held that before an ex parte decree is set aside the Court must come to a definite finding that there was sufficient cause for making such an order. With this principle of law to which the learned counsel has drawn my attention, one will have no quarrel. Rather I am in respectful agreement with this principle enunciated therein. But there is one feature of this case which distinguishes it from the facts of the cases relied upon by Mr. Hirday Nath. In this case the discretion primarily for setting aside of the decree vested in the Munsiff. He has exercised the discretion and unless and until it is made to appear that the exercise of the discretion was arbitrary or unreasonable, I think this Court will not ordinarily interfere.

(3) Mr. Shyam Lal Defendant non-applicant's learned counsel has drawn my attention to — 'Hari Singh v. Moinuddin Khan', AIR 1944 Lah 397 (A) in which it has been held that:

"The exercise of the powers in revision is discretionary and it has been a long established practice of the High Courts in India that where substantial justice has been done between the parties powers of revision should neither be invoked nor exercised. Where the order of the trial court setting aside the ex parte decree and permitting the parties to fight out the case on its merits on payment of costs was eminently a just order the power of revision cannot be exercised to reverse that order".

(4) So far as the present case before me is concerned, I prefer to follow respectfully the Lahore ruling. But the costs that have been awarded in this case are very meagre. The applicant's learned counsel has shown to me that during the absence of the defendant-non-applicants he had to make as many as four appearances in the Court. I think a sum of Rs. 15/- as costs that has been awarded by the trial Court is much too small. I raise the amount of costs to Rs. 30/-. The decree will be set aside on condition that a sum of Rs. 30/- is paid by the defendant-non-applicants to the plaintiff-applicant. The parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Mst. Barkati v. State.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 99 of 2006, D/- 16 Jeth 2007.

Abducted Persons' Recovery and Restoration Act (1949) S. 1 — Applicability — Does not apply to Jammu and Kashmir State — Detention by officer in charge of camp in State not legal — (Criminal P.C. (1898) S. 491).

The Abducted Persons' Recovery and Restoration Act, 1949, has no application so far as the State of Jammu and Kashmir is concerned though camps for the reception and restoration of abducted persons have been established in that State also. The result is that there is no law which can authorise the officer in charge of a Receiving Camp in the State to keep an abducted person in detention and hence any such detention is illegal.

Anno: Cr. P. C., S. 491 N. 7.

Sultan Ali, Petitioner in Person; Mrs. Dhar, in charge Receiving centres for abducted women in Person; Asst. Advocate General, for the State.

ORDER: On 10-12-2006 Sultan Ali submitted a petition to this Court to the effect that on 30th Phagon 2006 the Special police staff raided his house in his absence and illegally carried away his wife Mst. Barkati against her will and kept her in detention in the Refugee Camp Mohalla Ustad Jammu. A prayer was made in the petition that the person of Mst. Barkati be removed from the custody of the Camp officer and brought before this court and set at liberty.

(2) A notice was issued by me to the officer-in-charge Muslim Refugee Camp Mohalla Ustad Jammu to produce before me Mst. Barkati daughter of Shukur Din. Barkati appeared before me on 15th Baisakh 2007 along with Mrs. Dhar who describes herself as in charge of the Receiving Centres. I took down her statement. In her statement Barkati deposed that Sultan Ali was her husband to whom she was lawfully married. She further stated that she lived with Sultan Ali as wife for a period of two months when she was forcibly separated from him. She has categorically declared her unwillingness to go to Pakistan and has expressed her firm resolve to reside in the Jammu & Kashmir State along with her husband Sultan Ali. It was also stated by her that she has attained majority and was free to go anywhere she pleased.

(3) Mrs Dhar, who is in charge of the Camp, has in her statement admitted that she was not cognizant of any law which authorised her to keep

Mst. Barkati in detention in the camp, but she has added in her statement that in the Indian Union an Act is in force which authorises officers-in-charge of Receiving Centres in India to detain recovered abducted women. She wanted time to produce copy of the Act which was granted to her. The case was fixed for the 13th of Jeth 2007 when a telegram was received from Mrs Dhar praying for adjournment, as she could not come to Kashmir on account of bad weather. The case was fixed up for hearing today.

(4) Mrs Dhar has produced the Act of the Indian Legislature before me today. This Act is called the Abducted Persons' Recovery and Restoration Act of 1949. This Act has a slight history behind it. On 23-9-1948 (as modified on 11-11-1948) an inter-Dominion agreement between India and Pakistan was made for the recovery and restoration of the abducted women in the two dominions. In implementation of this agreement the Indian legislature passed an Act known as the Abducted Persons' Recovery & Restoration Act of 1949. It received the assent of the Governor General on 28th December 1949. This Act makes provision for the establishment of camps, powers of the police to recover abducted persons and maintenance of discipline in Camps etc. According to s. 8 of this Act the detention of any abducted person in a camp in accordance with the provisions of this Act shall be lawful and cannot be called into question in any court; so far so good; but the question is: can this Act apply to this State? This aspect of the case requires some discussion. In the Union List this matter (Entering into treaties, agreements with foreign countries and implementing of treaties agreements & conventions with foreign countries) is covered by No. 14 & this has been included in the List of matters which under Art. 370 of the Constitution of India the President in consultation with the Government of Jammu & Kashmir has declared to correspond to matters specified in the instrument of Accession governing the accession of the State (to the Dominion of India, and with respect to which the Indian Legislature can make laws for this State.) (Vide S. 2 of the Constitution (Application to Jammu & Kashmir) O. 1950). Now the Indian Legislature, as already stated, has passed an Act (Abducted Persons' Recovery and Restoration Act), but according to S. 1 Sub-S (2) its extension has been limited to the United Provinces (Uttar Pradesh), the provinces of East Punjab States Union and the United State of Rajasthan. The State of Jammu & Kashmir does not figure in this list. It is therefore obvious that the Act known as the Abducted Persons' Recovery & Restoration Act of 1949 has no application so far as this State is concerned.

(5) A camp for the reception and restoration of abducted persons having been established in this State also, one would have expected a consequential amendment in the said Act, so as to have brought the establishment of such camps in the State within the purview of this Act. But this has not been done.

(6) The result is that at the present moment there is no law which can authorise the officer-in-charge of the Receiving Camp at Mohalla Ustad Jammu to keep Barkati in detention. I have asked the Learned Assistant Advocate General to show me if there is any law as in force in this State which can authorize the officer-in-charge of the camp at Ustad Mohalla to detain any person. He has frankly declared his inability to produce one, but he has in a faint-hearted manner argued that the detention cannot be said to be improper or illegal, as Barkati is very well looked after in the camp and has been detained there in implementation, of the Inter-Dominion Agreement. In bureaucratic days such an argument, as that the detenu is looked after well and should not therefore complain of his detention, might have passed for a good argument, but in these days of democracy and social freedom this Court has, in the absence of a law to the contrary designed to meet the peculiar requirements of a particular class of cases, to presume and to hold that everybody is born free and is entitled to pass his days in freedom and cannot be subjected to any restrictions, howsoever sweet the restrictions may be, as long as the person imposing the restrictions is not authorised to do so by any specific Law. Barkati may be very well looked after in the camp; she may be getting better food than she would have got at her home, but that by itself can be no reason to deprive her of the most precious object in life i. e., freedom. In this case the only freedom she wants is freedom to live with the choice of her life I mean her husband Sultan Ali.

(7) I, therefore, hold that the detention of Barkati is illegal and order that she be forthwith released and set at Liberty.

KILAM J.: This is a first appeal against a decree passed by the Learned City Judge Srinagar on 18th Katik 2008 and arises out of the following facts:—

(2) The plaintiff brought a suit for accounts against the defendant-appellant, L. Ganga Ram. For purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction he valued his suit at Rs. 1100/-. The learned City Judge after going through the accounts, passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 6938/10/. The defendant-appellant has now come up in first appeal to this Court.

(3) On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent a preliminary objection is taken that the defendant-appellant has chosen a wrong forum of appeal and that the appeal does not lie to this

Court and should have been preferred in the District Court. He has based his objection on the fact that the plaintiff has valued the suit for purpose of Court fee and jurisdiction at Rs. 1100/-. Under these circumstances the forum of appeal, in his submission, would be the District Court and not the High Court.

(4) The question to be determined by us now is as to what is, to be taken as the value of the suit for purpose of determining the appellate forum in such cases as the one before us in which the suit has been valued for purposes of court fee and jurisdiction at Rs. 1100/-, but in which the value as found by the trial Court is more than Rs. 6000/-. It is not denied by either side that in suits for accounts the plaintiff has liberty to put a tentative valuation upon his suit for purpose of court fee and this will be its value for purpose of jurisdiction as well. But in this case in which the Court finds that a larger amount is due to the plaintiff, we have got to see as to whether the appellate forum will be determined by the original valuation of the suit or by the value as found by the trial court. On this point, so far as the Indian High Courts are concerned, there is a conflict. According to the Lahore High Court the amount found due and decreed is the value of the suit and determine the appellate forum when it exceeds the amount of which relief sought in the plaint is valued. Reference may in this connection be made to — 'Kalu Ram v. Hanwant Ram', AIR 1934 Lah 488 which is a Full Bench judgment. In this case it has been laid down that if the Court finds in an account suit that a higher amount is due to the plaintiff than the one at which he has valued his relief in the plaint, the value of the subject matter found by the Court will be the value of the subject matter for purpose of determining the appellate forum.

The Bombay High Court in an earlier judgment — 'Ibrahimji Issaji v. Benjanji Jamsedji', 20 Bom 265 also took the same view. This was an account suit in which the plaintiff had valued his claim at Rs. 600/- and the Subordinate Judge had passed a decree for Rs. 30,830/9/2. The defendant appealed to the High Court and the objection that the appeal should have been preferred with the District Judge was over-ruled. The Bombay judgment — '20 Bom 265' was considered in a later ruling of the same High Court — 'Kavasji v. Dinshaji', 22 Bom 963. In the latter case the plaintiff had valued the suit at Rs. 130/-, but the Sub-Judge found the property in suit worth over a Lakh of rupees. The Sub Judge drew up a preliminary decree and directed that the defendant should pay this amount in Court within two weeks. Against this order the defendant appealed to the District Court. The District Judge returned the appeal for presentation to the High Court on the ground that the subject matter of the suit was found to exceed Rs. 5000/-. The High Court held that the appeal lay to the District Judge. The correctness of the decision in — '20 Bom 265' was doubted in — '22 Bom 963' (a Division Bench judgment) as would become evident by the learned observations of Parson J. who delivered the main judgment. His Lordship observed that:

"I have some doubt of its — '20 Bom 265' correctness, and would point out what seems to me an anomaly, viz., that though a plaintiff is allowed to place any value he pleases on his claim in order to select the forum in which he may file his suit, the permission does not extend beyond decree, the forum of appeal being governed not by that value but by the value decreed."

This point has been considered in a Division Bench judgment of this Court. In — Manohar Dass v. Birandari Sheiklupurain, 38 Pun L R (J & K) 88 it has been held that "The value of the subject-matter of a suit must be its valuation at the time of its institution and the amount or value of the subject matter as fixed in the plaint should determine the Court to which the appeal lies."

There are other Indian High Courts which have taken a similar view as this Court. In — Putta Kannayya Chetti v. Venkata Narasayya, AIR 1918 Mad 998 (2) (FB) which is a Full Bench judgment it has been held that

"Where a suit for accounts is instituted in a District Munsiff's Court, the plaintiff valuing the subject matter of the suit at an amount within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the District Munsiff, and a decree is passed for more than Rs. 5000/- the appeal from that decree lies to the District Court and not to the High Court."

The Allahabad High Court is also of the same view. In — Abdul Majid v. Ala Bux, A I R 1925 All 376 it has been held that

"In order to determine the proper appellate court what has to be looked at is the value of the original suit, i.e., the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit. The word 'Value' must be taken to be the value assigned by the plaintiff in his plaint and not the value as found by the Court unless it appears that, either purposely or through gross negligence, the true value has been altogether misrepresented by the Plaintiff."

In this case a Full Bench judgment of the Calcutta High Court — '34 Cal 954' which has been relied upon by the learned counsel for the appellant in the case before us was discussed and dissented from. In — Ijjatulla v. Chandra Mohan, 34 Cal 954 it was held that if the amount actually due exceeds Rs. 5000/- though the value of the suit was fixed at a lesser amount — an appeal would lie to the High Court and not to the District Court. But quite a different view has been taken in a later Full Bench case of the same High Court — Bidyadhar Bachar v. Manindra Nath Das, AIR 1925 Cal 1076 (FB). In this case it has been laid down that the forum of appeal in cases in which the plaintiff has the right to put in a tentative value of the subject matter of the suit is determined with reference to the value of the suit and not the amount decreed. Somehow or other, the previous judgment — '34 Cal 954' has not been referred to in — 'AIR 1925 Cal 1076'.

(5) From the above discussion it becomes clear that the weight of authority is in favour of holding that for determining the appellate forum in account suits wherein the plaintiff has the right to value his suit tentatively, the appellate forum will be determined not by the amount found due to the plaintiff or the defendant, but by the value which the plaintiff puts on the subject matter of his suit in the plaint. We, therefore, hold that the present appeal is not entertainable by the Court. The appeal will be returned to the plaintiff for presentation in a proper Court. The defendant-appellant shall pay Rs. 50/- as costs to the plaintiff-respondent in this Court.

Section 15-C of the Jammu and Kashmir Act, 2 of 1980 as amended by Act 7 of 2005 provides that the provisions of S. 15-A, Tenancy Act cannot apply to lands mortgaged with possession. Section 15-A deals with the definition of a protected tenant and also details the reasons on the basis of which a tenant can claim the status of a protected tenant. Therefore if a tenant has been admitted into cultivating possession of some land by a mortgagee landlord, such a tenant cannot claim the status of a protected tenant. (Para 1)

(b) Tenancy Laws — Jammu and Kashmir Tenancy Act (2 of 1980) as amended by Act 7 of 2005, S. 15-A — Person cultivating land and becoming tenant after the commencement of the Amendment Act 7 of 2005 — No question of his getting rights of protected tenant arises — He can at best be a mere tenant at will.

(Para 1)

(c) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 63-A — Claim for improvements — Party allowing decree ex parte — Claim cannot be entertained in appeal.

Where the defendants allowed the decree to be passed ex parte against them, their submission that some improvements have been effected by them in the land in dispute cannot be entertained in appeal. Improvement may or may not be a fact, but if the lower Court has not started any inquiry into that matter the defendants need thank themselves only and none else. They should not have allowed the decree to go ex parte against themselves.

(Note: But somehow or the other, it appeared to the High Court that the defendants may have made some improvements in the land. Taking into consideration all the factors involved in the case, Rs. 20/- were allowed as a compensation.) (Para 2) Anno: T. P. Act, S. 63-A N. 1 and 1a.

JUDGMENT: This is a defendant's first appeal in a Revenue matter. The land in dispute belonged to one Lassi Guru who in his turn had mortgaged it to one Arundatti. During the period when the mortgage was in force, Arundatti admitted the defendants into cultivating possession of this land. In the meanwhile, an Act by name 'The Restoration of Mortgaged Property Act, 2006' was enacted and brought into force, according to which power was given to the mortgagors to redeem their mortgaged land before the period fixed by the mortgage deed. Lassi Guru, taking advantage of the provisions of The Restoration of Mortgaged Property Act brought a suit and got a decree for redemption of this land. In fact, during the pendency of this suit, Arundatti and Lassi Guru entered into a compromise whereby a decree for redemption was passed in favour of Lassi Guru. The defendants Mohd. Baba and others who were in the cultivating possession of this land as tenants of Arundatti, refused to give possession of the land in dispute to the plaintiffs in whose favour a decree for redemption was passed. The defendants resisted the suit on the ground that they had acquired the rights of protected tenants in the said land. But, in this case, the status of a protected tenant could not be claimed by the defendants. Reference may in this connection be made to S. 15-C of the Jammu and Kashmir Tenancy (Amendment) Act in which it has been provided that the provisions of S. 15-A of the Tenancy Act cannot apply to lands mortgaged with possession. Section 15-A deals with the definition of a protected tenant and also details the reasons on the basis of which a tenant can claim the status of a protected tenant. From this it would follow that if a tenant has been admitted into cultivating possession of some land by a mortgagee landlord, such a tenant cannot claim the status of a protected tenant. So far as the present plaintiffs are concerned, the defendants became their tenants only last year. No question of their getting rights of a protected tenant therefore arises. The defendants are at their best mere tenants at will.

(2) The defendants in this case have allowed the decree to be passed ex parte against them. Their learned counsel, however, made a submission that some improvements have been effected by the tenants in the land in dispute. This may or may not be a fact, but if the lower Court has not started any inquiry into this matter, the defendants need thank themselves only and none else. They should not have allowed the decree to go ex parte against themselves. But somehow or the other it appeared to me that the defendants may have made some improvements in the land. Taking into consideration all the factors involved in the case, I order that Rs. 20/- may be paid as compensation to the defendants-appellants. This money has been paid to the defendant-appellant, Mohd. Baba, in open Court. The appeal is rejected, but in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case, parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

JUDGMENT: This appeal arises out of an ejectment suit which has been concurrently dismissed by the Courts below. The defendant had taken the house in dispute on rent on 11th Jeth 2000 on a monthly rental of Rs. 15/-. The plaintiff brought the present suit with the allegations that he required the house for his personal use, and that he had served a six months' notice upon the defendant to vacate the house as required by the provisions of the Rent Control Order. The defendant pleaded that the notice served upon him was not in order. The lower Court found in favour of the defendant and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. This order was upheld by the Senior Subordinate Judge in appeal. The plaintiff has now come in second appeal to this Court.

(2) Notice by the landlord plaintiff has been given on 6th Katik 2005, and by this notice the defendant-respondent was required to vacate the house within six months, i.e., on or before 6th Baisakh 2006. Both the Courts below are concurrent in the finding that six months should have ended with the end of the month of tenancy, i.e., on 11th Jeth 2006 and not on 6th Baisakh 2006, as has been done in the present case. The argument in a nutshell is that though "a local law to the contrary" has lengthened the period of notice, yet this period of notice must expire with the end of the month of tenancy as is laid down in S. 106, T. P. Act. In support of this proposition, the respondent's learned counsel has referred me to — 'Chuni Lal v. Chuni Lal', AIR 1923 Lah 659 (A), in which it has been held that:

"Where there is no contract, S. 106 (T. P. Act) applies to such cases. Section 106 merely lays down in a codified form what in fact has always been understood to be the general law on the subject. A condition in the lease that the landlord should give one month's notice if he wanted to have the premises vacated does not mean that notice could be given at any time and that it was not to expire with the end of the month of tenancy as required by S. 106".

A similar view has been taken in some other judgments also. Such as — 'Baidyanath Basak v. Onkar Mul', AIR 1938 Cal 656 (B), and — 'Utility Articles Manufacturing Co. v. Motilal Bombay Mills Ltd', AIR 1943 Bom 306 (C). Reference may in this behalf be made to S. 106 T. P. Act, which runs as follows:

"In the absence of a contract or local law or usage to the contrary, a lease of immovable property for agricultural or manufacturing purposes shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year, terminable on the part of either lessor or lessee, by six months' notice expiring with the end of a year of the tenancy; and a lease of immovable property for any other purpose shall be deemed to be a lease from month to month, terminable, on the part of either lessor or lessee, by 15 days' notice expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy."

According to the rulings which have just now been referred to above, it is clear that even if there is a contract between a lessor & a lessee that the notice should be of a shorter or a longer period than the one provided by S. 106, T. P. Act, yet the notice must expire with the end of the year or the month of tenancy as the case may be. In the case before me, there is nothing contrary to S. 106 in the contract of lease, but then we have a 'local law to the contrary' which increases the period of notice from fifteen days to six months. I mean proviso to R. 7 of the House Rent Control Order which lays down:

"Provided that the Court shall make an order for the recovery of possession if the landlord satisfies the Court that six months' notice to quit or notice of such period as may be required under the contract of tenancy, whichever be longer, has been served on the tenant."

(3) The question now before us is as to whether this proviso to R. 7 of the House Rent Control Order relieves a landlord from issuing a notice, the period of which shall expire with the end of the month or year of tenancy, as required by S. 106, T. P. Act. We have just seen that according to the Lahore and Bombay rulings referred to above, despite the fact that there is a contract to the contrary with regard to the period of a notice, yet the notice should end with the month or year of the tenancy as the case may be. In this case there is no provision in the contract of lease lengthening or shortening the period of notice, but there is "a local law to the contrary" which makes it necessary to give a six months' notice. The learned counsel appearing on behalf of the appellant argues that the only obligation which a landlord is placed under is that he should give a six months' notice according to the terms of the House Rent Control Order, and that the condition of a notice expiring with the end of a month of tenancy as laid down by S. 106, T. P. Act, has been abrogated by R. 7 of the House Rent Control Order. I am afraid I cannot agree with him. The House Rent Control Order does not abrogate S. 106, T. P. Act. It has only made provision for giving some relief to the tenants such as lengthening the period of notice etc. Beyond this it does nothing, and for other purposes not dealt with in proviso to R. 7 it leaves S. 106, T. P. Act, unaffected. Therefore if "the local law to the contrary" provides six months' notice in place of 15 days' notice to be given by a landlord to a tenant, for the latter's ejectment, it does not relieve the landlord from that condition which is provided by S. 106, T. P. Act and which is that the notice must expire with the end of the month of tenancy. The result of the present notice is that the defendant-respondent was required to vacate the house earlier than the law would otherwise entitle him to occupy it. This clearly makes the notice bad in law.

(4) I, therefore, do not find any force in this appeal which is rejected. In view of the fact that an important law point is involved in this case, I order that the parties shall bear their own costs in this Court.

ORDER: This is a revision application directed against the order of the Sessions Judge dismissing the application of Bk. Nonihal petitioner against the order of the City Magistrate, Jammu dated 16th Chet 2008.

(2) The facts which gave rise to this application briefly are these. On 4th Sawan 2006 Mst. Ram Lubhai applied in the Court of City Magistrate, Jammu for the grant of maintenance allowance for herself and for her daughter Mst. Shakuntala. The City Magistrate by his order dated 9th Jeth 2007 granted Rs. 50/- as maintenance allowance to Mst. Ram Lubhai and her daughter Mst. Shakuntala, against Bk. Nonihal the husband of Mst. Ram Lubhai. He came up in revision before the Sessions Judge but was unsuccessful. He came up in further revision to this Court and on 21st Baisakh 2008 the parties entered into a compromise by virtue of which Bk. Nonihal agreed to pay Rs. 25 to his wife, as maintenance allowance. He further stipulated that he will go on paying Rs. 20 to his daughter for a period of six months within which he would arrange to get his daughter married and will incur all the marriage expenses himself. On the basis of this compromise an order was passed by this Court modifying the order passed by the trial Court in terms of the statement made by the applicant. On 8th Sawan 2008, an application was made by Mst. Ram Lubhai and her daughter claiming maintenance allowance from 4th Sawan 2006 to 4th Sawan 2008. A notice was issued to Bk. Nonihal and he filed objections to the application made for the recovery of the arrears of maintenance allowance. The main objections taken by Bk. Nonihal are that he was not liable to pay maintenance allowance prior to the order passed by the High Court and that he had to pay maintenance to his daughter only for six months from the date of the High Court order. These objections were overruled by the executing Court of City Magistrate and he allowed Mst. Ram Lubhai and her daughter maintenance allowance from the date the maintenance allowance was granted by the City Magistrate and subsequently notified by the High Court. Against this order Bk. Nonihal went up in revision to the Court of Sessions Judge, Jammu but was unsuccessful. He has come up in further revision to this Court.

(3) The learned Counsel for the applicant has argued that his client did not get opportunity in the Court of City Magistrate to file all the objections against the claim for arrears of maintenance allowance. His main objections are that Mst. Shakuntala was more than 18 years old and could not come within the meaning of the word "child" as mentioned in S. 488, Cl. (1), Criminal P. C. He has further argued that the City Magistrate did not give any opportunity to his client to show sufficient cause for non-payment of the arrears of maintenance allowance.

(4) The first question for consideration is whether or not the applicant had opportunity to raise all the objections he wanted to take before the City Magistrate. From the perusal of the interlocutory orders it is abundantly clear that the case came up before the City Magistrate for a number of times. The counsel for the applicant had not put in any other objection except those which he took during the first hearings of the case. He had not asked for any opportunity for adducing any evidence to show that he had sufficient cause for non-payment of the arrears of maintenance allowance. The objection now taken by the learned counsel that he was not afforded opportunity to put in objections against the claim of maintenance allowance is without any force.

(5) The next question for consideration is whether Mst. Shakuntala, being over 18 years of age, is entitled to any maintenance allowance or not. My attention has been drawn to S. 488, Cl. (1), Criminal P. C. and it is argued that Mst. Shakuntala being more than 18 years of age was competent to maintain herself and so would not come within the meaning of the word "child" as mentioned in the above section. The word "child" mentioned in S. 488 (1) is not defined in the Criminal Procedure Code. In — 'U Ba Thaung v. Ma Aye', AIR 1932 Rang 94 (A) and — 'Subamma v. Venkata Reddi', AIR 1950 Mad 394 (B) it has been held that the word "child" in S. 488 is used to mean a minor child and if the child has attained majority he is not entitled to maintenance. If the Legislature meant minor child alone to be entitled to maintenance the word minor would have been specially mentioned along with the child in S. 488, Criminal P. C. The words used are "child unable to maintain itself" no matter whether that child is a minor or major. What the Courts, in my opinion, have to see is whether the child who claims maintenance is capable of maintaining itself or not. In case he is unable to maintain himself he is entitled to maintenance. In this case Mst. Shakuntala is a young girl and unable to maintain herself. There is nothing on the record to show that she has any other income out of which she can maintain herself. In these circumstances she is fully entitled to claim maintenance allowance from her father irrespective of the fact that she is more than 18 years of age. In support of this view reliance can be placed on a recent ruling of the Calcutta High Court reported as — 'W. L. Faria v. Anita Merlene Faria', AIR 1951 Cal 66 (C) in which it has been held that the word "Child" in S. 488 (1) has been used simply to mean the son or the daughter without reference to the age. The deciding consideration is whether the child is or is not able to maintain himself or herself.

(6) The contention of the Counsel for the applicant that Mst. Shakuntala being more than 18 years of age is not entitled to maintenance allowance is without any force.

(7) I see no reason to interfere with the order passed by the Sessions Judge, in revision and dismiss this application.

CASE CITED:

(A) ('16) AIR 1916 Oudh 155: 36 Ind Cas 770

JUDGMENT: This is a revenue first appeal against an order of the Collector Srinagar dated 8 Magh 2008, and arises out of the following facts:

(2) As early as 1st Magh 1999 the plaintiff appellant brought a suit in a revenue Court with the allegation that he was wrongfully dispossessed from the suit land of which he was the full owner though shown as a cultivator thereof in the revenue records. He prayed for the return of possession under S. 56, Tenancy Act. He succeeded in getting a decree from the Revenue Assistant on 9th Sawan 2001. The defendant preferred an appeal before the then Collector (Pandit Maharaj Krishen Dhar). The Collector set aside the decree of the trial Court on 23rd Chet 2001 and ordered that the plaint be returned to the plaintiff-appellant (respondent in that appeal) for presentation to a Court of competent jurisdiction. The then learned Collector (Pandit Maharaj Krishen Dhar) has based his order for the return of the plaint on the following facts which may be given in his own words. Says he:

"The plaint is clear that the plaintiff-respondent asserts his proprietary rights. He has re-affirmed this by means of an application and a clear statement today before me. A proprietor forcibly ousted by a trespasser cannot obtain any redress from a revenue Court. If he had admitted himself from the very start — i.e., in the plaint — to be a mere tenant, the revenue Courts could take cognisance of the case. But this is not what the respondent says. In view of these facts the only order that I can make is that the appeal be accepted and the case be sent back to the Revenue Assistant with the direction that the plaint be returned to the plaintiff-respondent for presentation in a Court of competent jurisdiction".

The plaintiff-appellant did not feel satisfied with the Collector's order dated 23rd Chet 2001 and he went in revision to the Revenue Commissioner. The Revenue Commissioner by his order dated 19th Har 2002 rejected his revision. Having failed in the revenue Courts, the plaintiff-appellant brought the present suit on 30th Sawan 2002. In this suit the plaintiff has claimed the status of a tenant and not that of a proprietor as in the previous suit and has prayed that possession of the suit land be restored to him under S. 56, Tenancy Act. The defendants-respondents resisted the suit on the ground of limitation. The present learned Collector (Kh. Ghulam Nabi) found in favour of the defendant and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff has now come up in first appeal to this Court.

(3) The plaintiff-appellant's learned counsel has argued that the trial Court should have given the plaintiff the benefit of the provisions of S. 14, Limitation Act according to which the time during which the plaintiff had been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal against the defendant shall be excluded in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit. The argument of the appellant's learned counsel is that the plaintiff appellant prosecuted in good faith another proceeding in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction was unable to entertain it, and as such the time spent in prosecuting the earlier proceeding should be excluded for computing the period of limitation. Concretising the argument of the learned counsel it comes to this: that the former suit of the plaintiff-appellant failed because the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon a suit which was based upon and involved the question of ownership and title, and as such his failure was due to the fact that the former Court was unable to entertain his suit because of defect of jurisdiction, and therefore the time spent by the plaintiff-appellant in prosecuting the former proceeding should be excluded in computing the period of limitation in the present suit. But the learned counsel has not taken into consideration another requisite of S. 14, Limitation Act which is to the effect that the former and the latter proceeding must be founded upon the same cause of action. It is true that if the cause of action is the same, the parties are the same, and the other conditions given in S. 14 are fulfilled, then in computing the period of limitation the time spent in another Court will be excluded if that "another Court" was, because of a defect of jurisdiction, unable to entertain it. Now let us see if the cause of action in the two proceedings is the same.

(4) It has been found in the former suit by both the Collector and the Revenue Commissioner that the plaintiff had based his suit upon his proprietary rights. But the plaintiff in the present suit does not assert his proprietary rights, nor does he base his suit on them, but comes forward on quite a different basis, i.e. upon his rights as a tenant. This would show that the cause of action is totally different in the present case from the one in the former, and if the cause of action is different, S. 14, Limitation Act, can in no way be invoked in support of the position taken by the plaintiff. Reference may in this connection be made to — 'Dondoo Singh v. Sheo Nara-in Singh', AIR 1916 Oudh 155 (A) in which it has been held that "The time spent by the landlord without avail in trying to get the holder of some of his lands ejected through the revenue Courts as tenant cannot under S. 14, Limitation Act, be excluded in a subsequent suit filed by the landlord in the civil Court for the purpose of having that ejected as trespasser."

From this it would become abundantly clear that the time spent by the appellant in carrying on an independent litigation founded on a different cause of action cannot be excluded in computing the period of limitation in the present suit.

(5) According to S. 56, Tenancy Act

"A tenant who has been ejected from his tenancy without his consent or otherwise than in execution of a decree, may within one year from the date of his dispossession or ejectment institute a suit for recovery of possession."

Now in this case the allegation is that the plaintiff-appellant was dispossessed of the suit land on 12th Poh 1999. He should have brought the present suit within one year from 12th Poh 1999, but then the present suit has been brought as late as 13th Sawan 2002, that is to say, much after one year. We have just found that the plaintiff in view of the fact that the former suit was founded on a different cause of action, cannot seek or derive any benefit from S. 14, Limitation Act. The present suit is, therefore, clearly barred by limitation.

(6) In view of the above, I do not find any reason to disagree with the view taken by the learned Collector. This appeal is rejected with costs.

ORDER: This is an application under S. 491, Criminal P. C. submitted by one Dina Nath who is this time detained in the Central Jail Srinagar in pursuance of an order of detention passed by the District Magistrate Udhampur on 15th Sawan 2009.

(2) The main ground on which the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the detenu has based his prayer is that the order of detention is mala fide and without jurisdiction. In his application the detenu has stated that his detention is the result of some reasons other than those mentioned in the order of detention. In particular he says that he had already undergone a term of detention pursuant to an order of the District Magistrate Udhampur and was released therefrom on 13th Sawan 2009. On 15th

Sawan 2009 he appeared in a case as an accused before the same District Magistrate where the detenu put in an application for the stay of proceedings on account of some adverse remarks made by the District Magistrate against a witness of the detenu who appeared in his (detenu's) defence. The application proceeds that no sooner was the application for stay submitted than the District Magistrate Udhampur who perhaps did not look with favour on the said application, passed the present order of detention.

(3) In order to convince myself as regards the truth or otherwise of the allegations made in the application, I ordered that concerned file in which the detenu figured as an accused be sent for. But in view of another argument which has been advanced today, I think no useful purpose will be served by waiting for the file, as the objection taken now goes to the very root of the order of detention, sufficient by itself for quashing the order. The argument advanced by the learned counsel for the detenu is that the order of detention made by the District Magistrate Udhampur is without jurisdiction as the order of detention has to take effect at a place beyond the jurisdiction of the District Magistrate, i.e., Central Jail Srinagar. The learned counsel has drawn my attention to council order No. 281-C of 1942 in which it has been laid down that "the Government are pleased to direct that the powers vested in the Government by sub-rr.

(1) and (2) of R. 24 of the Jammu and Kashmir Defence Rules shall, subject to the control of the Government, be exercised by all District Magistrates within their respective jurisdictions."

From this it would become abundantly clear that, firstly, the powers delegated to the District Magistrates by the Government are only under Sub-rr. (1) and (2) of R. 24 of the Jammu and Kashmir Defence Rules, and secondly, that these powers can be exercised by the District Magistrates only within their respective jurisdictions and not beyond them. Now Sub-rr. (1) and (2) of R. 24 deal only with the detention of a person or internment within a specified area or externment from one district to another or imposing of such other restrictions upon a person which the Government or the District Magistrates (if such powers are delegated to them) may think fit to pass.

(4) In this case the detenu was ordered to be detained under Sub-r. (1) of R. 24 of the Jammu and Kashmir Defence Rules. This the District Magistrate could certainly do. Under sub-r. 5 (b) of Rule 24

"It is the Government that can by any general or special order provide for the removal of any person and for the detention of such person in any area in the State."

As already stated, this power has not been delegated to the District Magistrate Udhampur. Therefore any order that is passed by the District Magistrate for the detention of any person beyond his jurisdiction is ultra vires of the powers delegated to him.

(5) The detenu's learned counsel has drawn my attention to — 'Bashan Madar v. Emperor', AIR 1949 Bom 37 (A) in which it has been found that where the District Magistrate of Sholapur passed an order under S. 2 (4) detaining a person in the Yaravade Jail in the Poona District, "the order is without jurisdiction, in view of the Notification No. 671, dated 26-4-47, under which the powers have to be exercised by the District Magistrates (of Bombay) within their jurisdiction." In this case a reference is made to another Bombay case — 'In re Baboo-rao Sripat Deshmukh', Cri. Applns. Nos. 660 to 662 of 1947 (B) which was decided on 2-12-47 by Chagla Ag. C. J. and Gajendragadkar J. In that case an order of detention was passed by the District Magistrate of East Khandesh and a copy of the order of detention was sent to the Superintendent of Nasik Jail. But it was held in that case that such an order was beyond the jurisdiction of the District Magistrate and that he had no power to detain him (the detenu) outside the territorial limits of his district. With great respect I quote in full a passage from their Lordships' judgment:

"In all these three cases the detenus have been detained by an order of the District Magistrate at the Nasik Jail. Nasik is not within the jurisdiction of the District Magistrate, East Khandesh, and therefore, in ordering their detention outside his jurisdiction he has exercised a power which was not delegated to him under the notification of 26th April 1947. There is no doubt that the Provincial Government can detain a person anywhere within the Province, but when that power is exercised by an authority to whom that particular power is delegated, the delegation is circumscribed by territorial considerations and the detention can only be within his own jurisdiction."

(6) Applying these principles to the facts of the present case, I find that the order made by the District Magistrate Udhampur for the detention of the detenu at a place beyond his jurisdiction makes his order obviously an illegal order. The learned Assistant Advocate General has frankly conceded that the order of detention made by the District Magistrate Udhampur is without jurisdiction. Taking all this into consideration, I find that the detention of Dina Nath s/o Kanshi Ram of Chenani is improper and invalid. I order that he be set at liberty forthwith unless required in some other case.

ORDER: Six persons were proceeded against under Rr. 68 (4), 118 of the Jammu & Kashmir Defence Rules in the Court of the Addl. District Magistrate Kathua, who after trial convicted all the six persons to six months' rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 100/- each. On appeal, the learned Sessions Judge Jammu acquitted two accused persons, by name, Chhaju Ram and Babu Ram, but maintained the conviction of the other four accused and reduced their sentence of imprisonment to the one already undergone. The learned Sessions Judge also remitted the sentence of fine in regard to Dharam Singh. As regards the remaining three accused, the learned Sessions Judge maintained their sentence of fine and he also maintained the order with regard to confiscation and forfeiture of ghee.

(2) The facts of the case, as found by the learned Sessions Judge are, that the accused persons with a view to smuggle out of the State certain quantity of ghee in contravention of the orders prohibiting export of this commodity, carried 64 tins of ghee in a truck No. J & K 1803 towards Jammu side and unloaded them at a place 8 or 9 miles from Lakhanpur towards Jammu side. There the tins were kept hidden underneath some bushes growing around. The finding further is that at about 4 o'clock in the morning of 15th Katik 2008 an empty military vehicle was seen coming from the Basantpur canal road and going towards Jammu side. Dewan Jia Lal Deputy Superintendent Customs who saw the military truck going towards Jammu side, suspected that this truck might be used for smuggling out ghee. Dewan Jia Lal, believing that the truck might return back with the tins of ghee, blocked the road with the idea that the vehicle carrying the ghee if at all it comes, would not be able to proceed further. In the meanwhile information was carried to Dewan Jia Lal that a number of tins of ghee that were kept hidden underneath the bushes at a distance of 8 or 9 miles towards Jammu side were being loaded on a military truck. After some time at about 5-30 A. M. he saw that a military truck was coming at a very high speed from Jammu side which in spite of signal being given, did not stop, but proceeded further and only stopped when it found its way blocked. The result was that the truck was brought back to Lakhanpur wherefrom 64 tins of ghee were recovered. A complaint was lodged against the accused persons with the above result.

(3) So far as the facts found in the case are concerned there can be no dispute. But the question is as to whether these facts constitute an offence under Rr. 68/118 of the Defence Rules. Rule 68 of the Defence Rules lays down that

"taking out of the State any goods the export of which has been stopped is an offence punishable under sub-rule (4) of the same rule."

Now export of ghee has been stopped under the Ghee Control Order of 1999. Under R. 118 of the Jammu and Kashmir Defence Rules any person who attempts to contravene the provisions of R. 68 or any other defence rule shall also be deemed to have contravened that provision. Now in this case we find that the ghee was not taken out of the State, and as such the offence of exporting cannot be said to have been committed. It is, however, argued that the action of the accused persons comes within the mischief of R. 118 of the Jammu and Kashmir Defence Rules which makes an attempt at contravention punishable. The question then arises as to whether the action of the accused persons comes within the purview of the definition of an attempt.

In this behalf I might with advantage quote from a judgment of mine reported as — 'Mt. Noor Bibi v. State', AIR 1952 J & K 55 (A) wherein I have held that "Before the commission of an offence, an accused has got to go through three preliminary stages: first that of intention to commit the offence, secondly preparation to commit and thirdly, attempt to commit it. Mere intention to commit an offence is not punishable. Nor is the preparation to commit it. It is only when the preparation merges itself in attempt that the act becomes punishable by law."

(4) The learned Assistant Advocate General argues that this action of the accused persons was clear attempt on their part to commit an offence under R. 68. I am afraid I cannot agree with him. The accused may have an intention to commit an offence of exporting ghee out of the State territory, but, as already stated, mere intention is not punishable at law.

(5) Then we have found that the accused persons were apprehended very far away from the Ravi Bridge, by crossing over which they would have reached the Punjab territory. They had not attempted to cross the border or even the bridge, & as such their going towards the bridge was merely a preparation to cross the bridge. Before they had reached the bridge, the possibility cannot be excluded that the accused might have repented of their intention and changed their mind and never attempted to carry the ghee across the forbidden line. Under these circumstances the accused are clearly entitled to benefit of doubt.

(6) In — 'Narayanaswami Pillai v. Emperor', AIR 1932 Mad 507 (B) the accused was found travelling in a bus to Tranquebar carrying 165 tolas of opium which somebody had given to him at Chidambaram with instructions to meet him at a place in French Territory and to give it to him. The accused in this case was charged under S. 7 read with S. 20, Dangerous Drugs Act. In this case it was held by Walsh J. that "there was no attempt to commit the crime but mere preparation for its committal." The learned Judge in the concluding portion of his judgment states that "It seems to me that he (accused) must be given the benefit of doubt that he might have repented of his intention before reaching the French Territory."

(7) This case is quite on all fours with the present case. The accused persons along with the ghee were apprehended in the State territory and not a step was taken by them towards crossing the border. The case would have been however, different if they were apprehended while crossing the border.

(8) I, therefore, have no hesitation in extending the benefit of doubt to the accused persons. I accept this Revision application and order that the accused persons be acquitted. Fine if paid, must be refunded. The order of forfeiture of ghee is also set aside.

Malicious prosecution — Essentials — Effect of dismissal of Criminal case.

There is no presumption with respect to criminal proceedings that they were wrongly taken, if the proceedings fail in a Court of law. It is therefore, necessary for the plaintiff in a suit for malicious prosecution to prove not only that he has been declared innocent, but that he must also show that there was no probable or reasonable cause for the complainant to have started proceedings in the case. (Para 3)

Ishwar Singh, for Appellants; Rupchand Nanda, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT: This is a plaintiff's second appeal directed against an order of the Sub-Judge Udhampur dated 29th Har 2009. The plaintiff had brought a suit for a sum of Rs. 100/- as damages for malicious prosecution. The trial Court of Munsiff Rassi granted a decree of Rs. 100/- in favour of the plaintiff. Against this order the defendant went in appeal to the Sub-Judge Udhampur who by his order referred to above upset the judgment of the trial Court and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The lower appellate Court has found that the judgment in the criminal case out of which the suit for malicious prosecution has arisen "was not satisfactory in regard to the question of possession over the land" which is the bone of contention in this litigation. The defendant's case both as complainant in the criminal Court and in the civil Court has been that the land was in his possession from a very long time, and when on the relevant date he visited the land, he found the accused already there, who abused him and assaulted him. The learned appellate Judge also found that the Munsiff had allowed himself to be guided by the findings of the criminal Court to come to the conclusion that the appellant was never in possession of the land.

(2) In an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff has to prove that he was innocent and was held so by the Court before whom charge was made against him. He has also got to show that there was want of reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution, and that the proceedings were started against him in a malicious spirit with an indirect and improper motive and not for the purpose of vindicating law. In view of the finding of the lower appellate Court that the criminal Court's conclusions with regard to the possession over the land were not satisfactory, I think that the plaintiff's suit has been rightly dismissed. I agree with the finding arrived at by the lower appellate Court which is based upon sound reasoning and material on record. All that has been proved by the plaintiff in this case is that he was acquitted of the charge by a criminal Court. He has not been able to show in the present case that the defendant had no reasonable cause for bringing the complaint against him.

(3) It has to be taken into consideration that there is no presumption with respect to criminal proceedings that they were wrongly taken if the proceedings fail in a Court of Law. It might be for a number of causes that a complainant might not have been able to prove his case, but if every complainant whose complaint is dismissed were to be proceeded against with an action for malicious prosecution, it would mean a great deal of hardship for all those who fail to prove their complaint. It is, therefore, necessary for the plaintiff in a suit for malicious prosecution to prove not only that he has been declared innocent, but that he must also show that there was no probable or reasonable cause for the complainant to have started proceedings in this case. I therefore, do not find myself in disagreement with the view taken by the lower appellate Court. This appeal is rejected. Taking into consideration the peculiar circumstances of the case, parties shall bear their own costs in this Court.

Anno: Penal Code, S. 363 N. 1; S. 376 N. 1.

Asst. Advocate General, for the State.

KILAM J.: Illam Din, accused appellant, has been convicted under Ss. 363 and 376, R. P. C. by the learned Sessions Judge Jammu. Under S. 363, R. P. C. he has been sentenced to undergo three years' rigorous imprisonment and under S. 376 to five years' rigorous imprisonment. Both the sentences have been ordered to run concurrently.

(2) The charge against Illam Din has been that he kidnapped a minor girl by name Atri and committed rape on her. The accused has denied the charge.

(3) The case of the prosecution is that Mst. Atri was kidnapped by Illam Din accused on 15th Jeth 2007. It is further alleged that he kept Atri with himself for two nights when Atri, taking advantage of the fact that the accused had fallen fast asleep, gave him a slip and ran away. The F. I. R. was lodged on 18th Jeth 2007. Mst. Atri was examined by Dr. Bodh Raj who stated that in his opinion she was between 10-13 years of age and that rape had been committed on her some time a week before she was examined by him. Besides Dr. Bodh Raj, the prosecution has produced the following witnesses:

(4) Mst. Atri, Puro, Somraj, Jalalud-Din and Amarchand.

(5) Atri describes as to how she had gone to a water mill on the evening of 15th Jeth 2007, when she was accosted by the accused and carried away. She also states that later on he committed rape on her.

(6) Puro P. W. 3 who is the owner of the water mill states that Atri came to his mill one day in the month of Jeth 2007 along with the accused. The mill was at that time closed and Atri left some grain there to be ground later on. Thereafter both the accused and Atri went away.

(7) Somraj states that both Atri and Illam Din came to his shop one day in the month of Jeth and purchased some cigarettes and matches from him.

(8) Jalal-ud-Din simply states that the mother of Atri had told him that her daughter was lost somewhere. According to this witness Atri's mother had suggested to him that she was taken by Illamdin.

(9) Amar Chand states that in the month of Jeth 2007 the accused and Mst. Atri came near his shop and busied themselves in preparing fire for cooking their meals, on the vacant site lying before his shop. Atri approached the shopkeeper Amar Chand for some Gur and while she was in the act of purchasing Gur from him, she told him that she was decoyed by the accused and further requested him to conceal her in his shop. The shopkeeper told her to wait and he himself went to call the Chowkidar who, however, was not to be found in the village. When he came back, he found both the accused and Atri gone.

(10) From the evidence — a synopsis of which has been recorded above — it becomes abundantly clear that the accused and Atri were together for a number of days and were seen going from one place to another. This also is proved by the statements of both Atri and the doctor that sexual intercourse was committed by the accused with Atri just a week before her medical examination had been conducted by the doctor.

(11) The learned Sessions Judge, has after discussing the evidence come to the conclusion that Atri was not an unwilling agent in having gone with the accused. He is also of the opinion which he formed after considering the evidence and the various circumstances of the case that even sexual intercourse was not had with Atri against her will. Such being the finding of the trial Court which has not been challenged by the learned Asst. Advocate General, the question of settling the age of the girl in definite terms became really very imperative. We were not at all satisfied with the statement of the doctor who had given quite a vague sort of statement when he had stated that the age of the girl was probably between 10-13 years. We therefore thought it proper to get this girl (Atri) examined by an X-Ray expert. She was examined by Dr. Ranjit Singh who is of the opinion that the age of the girl on the day when he conducted her examination was between 16½ and 17½. The X-Ray examination of the girl had taken place on 30th Assuj 2009 and the offence is said to have been committed on 15th Jeth 2007. If we take the average of the two age limits given by the Radiologist we might take the age of the girl as 17 on the day she was examined by him. Judging from all this, the age of the girl would be a trifle less than 15 years on the day when she is alleged to have been kidnapped. Even if we take her age at the lowest limit given by the Radiologist, i.e. 16½ years on the date of her examination, even then she would be more than 14 years on the day when rape is alleged to have been committed on her. Taking into consideration the finding of the learned Sessions Judge with which we are in agreement, we find that the offence of rape cannot be brought home to the accused. It is only in such cases where the age limit is less than 14 years that sexual intercourse will be rape even though it was with the consent of the girl. But if sexual intercourse takes place with a willing girl who is of more than 14 years of age, such sexual intercourse cannot come within the definition of rape. If, however, the girl is an unwilling agent, sexual intercourse will become rape irrespective of the age of the girl. The accused is therefore acquitted of the charge under S. 376 and the sentence passed on him under this section is set aside.

(12) But that the girl Atri was less than 16 years on the date of the alleged offence is amply proved. As such we are of the opinion that the offence of kidnapping under S. 363, R. P. C. is proved against the accused. We therefore maintain his conviction and sentence of three years under S. 363, R. P. C.

(13) The result is that the conviction and sentence of the accused under S. 376, R. P. C. are set aside, while his conviction and sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 363, R. P. C. are maintained.

(14) The appeal is accepted to the extent indicated above.

Penal Code (1860), S. 420 — Intention — Proof of — Breach of Contract.

Where a complaint of an offence of cheating is made on the ground that the accused has entered into a contract with the complainant to work for the latter and that he had not commenced work in spite of complainant making two payments as agreed, the complainant has to establish a preconceived intention on the part of the accused of not carrying out the terms of the agreement. Such an intention cannot be presumed from the mere receipt of money and not working subsequently according to the terms of the agreement. Mere receipt of money would not be cheating unless it is shown that it was received with the preconceived intention of denying it later on. If the intention is changed subsequently it would not be cheating. 159 Ind Cas 167 (1) (Pat) and AIR 1923 Lah 621, Rel. on. (Para 3)

ORDER: This is an application under S. 561-A, Criminal P. C. with the prayer that the criminal proceedings pending against the accused applicants in the Court of Sub-Judge Magistrate first class Jammu be quashed. The following facts have given rise to this application :

The accused applicants, Ths. Devia Ram and Beli Ram are alleged to have entered into an agreement with the complainant, L. Ram Chand, stipulating that they would engage 100 well-trained sawyers for sawing logs in Mar-mat jungle. It was further stipulated that by 15th Chet 2008 the work will be commenced which was to be completed by Maghar 2009. At the time of executing the agreement, the complainant advanced to the accused applicants a sum of Rs. 1000/-. According to the agreement, Rs. 2000/- more were to be paid to the accused-applicants in the month of Phagan 2008. The second instalment of Rs. 2000/- which was stipulated to be paid in the month of Phagan 2008 was however paid on 26th Chet 2008. It is alleged by the complainant that in spite of the fact that an advance of Rs. 3000/- was made to the accused applicants, they did not at all commence work as well stipulated by them. The complainant further affirms that the accused had fraudulent intentions from the very beginning pursuant to which they made false representations and thereby induced the complainant to part with a sum of Rs. 3000/-. It is further alleged by the complainant that in case he had known about the fraudulent intentions of the accused, he would not have parted with the money. On these facts a complaint was submitted on 3rd Bhadon 2009. Before proceeding further, it might be conducive to the right understanding of the dispute to give below a brief analysis of the facts on which the present complaint is based.

(a) A reference to the agreement would show that it has been signed only by Beli Ram accused applicant. Devia another accused applicant has not affixed his signature to this agreement. Beli Ram who styles himself as the Karta of the joint family of which Devia is also a member appears to have signed the agreement on Devia's behalf, as well. The sum of Rs. 2000/- which was advanced by the complainant was received by Beli Ram alone, as would become evident by a reference to the receipt of 26th Chet 2008 which too has been signed by Beli Ram alone. Under these circumstances I wonder how criminal liability could be fastened upon Devia at least. If any false representation has been made or if any fraudulent inducement has been held out, it was by Beli Ram. By no stretch of imagination can Devia be involved in an affair with which ostensibly he had no concern.

(b) Again a reference to the agreement would show that Beli Ram or Devia were not unknown figures to the complainant. Clause No. (6) of the agreement would show that Beli Ram and Devia were working for the complainant even before. Beli Ram in this agreement has stipulated that whatever amount from previous accounts will be found due from him to the complainant, he will get credit for that and that sum will be deducted from the amount found due to the applicants under the present agreement.

(c) Then again according to the agreement the applicants were to be paid Rs. 2000/- in the month of Phagan 2008. As against this, admittedly this amount has been paid to Beli Ram on 26th Chet 2008. This appears to be a clear breach on the part of the complainant

(d) According to the agreement, the work was to be started from 15th Chet 2008. The second instalment of Rs. 2000 was advanced to Beli Ram accused applicant on 26th Chet 2008 that is to say a month after it was due to be paid and 11 days after the work was to commence. The inference is obvious that in case the accused persons had not started work on 15th Chet 2008, there was no reason as to why an advance of Rs. 2000/- should have been made by the complainant to Beli Ram on 26th Chet 2008.

(e) A reference to the complaint would show that it has been drafted and presented in Court on 3rd Bhadon 2009. In case the accused persons had not at all worked even after getting a huge sum of Rs. 3000/-, there is no reason as to why the complainant should have remained silent for nearly six months. According to the agreement the third instalment of Rs. 7000/- was to be paid much earlier than the date on which the complaint was lodged, i.e., 3rd Bhadon 2009. This amount was to be paid in the month of Jeth 2009. The least that one would have expected of the complainant was that he would have served the accused persons with a notice explaining the reasons for withholding the third instalment.

(2) The above analysis of the facts of the case would make it clear that the whole affair is a case of breach of contract, pure and simple. Breaches seem to have been made both by the complainant and the accused.

(3) The learned counsel appearing for the complainant (Non-applicant) has argued that since the accused persons had received money from the complainant with no intention to carry out the terms of the agreement, it was a clear case of cheating. But the learned counsel has forgotten that a preconceived intention of not carrying out the terms of an agreement has to be established and not to be presumed from the mere receipt of money and not working subsequently according to the terms of the agreement. Mere receipt of money would not be cheating unless it is shown that it was received with the preconceived intention of denying it later on. If the intention is changed subsequently it would not be cheating. In — 'Sheosagar Pandey v. Emperor', 159 Ind Cas 167 (1) (Pat) (A) it has been held that :

"Mere breach of a contract cannot give rise to a criminal prosecution. The distinction between a case of mere breach of contract and one of cheating depends upon the intention of the accused at the time of the alleged inducement which may be judged by his subsequent act but of which the subsequent act is not the sole criterion. Where there is no clear and conclusive evidence of the criminal intention of the accused at the time the offence is said to have been committed and where the party said to be aggrieved has an alternative remedy in the civil court, the matter should not be allowed to be fought in the criminal courts."

(4) In — 'Ram Saran v. Crown', AIR 1923 Lah 621 (B) a petitioner was convicted of cheating on the ground that in spite of receiving from his debtor, the complainant, cash and cattle in payment of what he owed him he gave him notice later on for payment of the debt originally due and denied what he had already received. On these facts it was held that "there was nothing to show that the petitioner received payment with the preconceived intention of denying it later on. If he subsequently denied it, he cannot be said to have cheated the debtor though this conduct of him was highly reprehensible."

(5) Nor is there any explanation forthcoming as to why the second instalment was not advanced to the applicants in the month of Phagan 2008 as was stipulated. Again the significance of the fact can never be minimized that if the accused persons had not started work on 15th Chet 2008, why was an advance made to them on 26th Chet? Then again if after having taken this amount of Rs. 3000/- no work was done by them, why was not a notice given to them? Why did the non-applicant wait for six long months before the present complaint was brought? All these are very pertinent questions that cannot be lost sight of. It would also show that even complainants did not believe that the accused persons were guilty of cheating. I am, therefore, definitely of the opinion that the whole affair is a clear breach of contract. A breach of contract might involve a breach of faith, a betrayal of confidence, and might arouse moral indignation. But that would not convert it into a criminal offence. In — 'Chidambaram Chettiar v. Shanmugham', AIR 1938 Mad 129 (C) it has been held that:

"The High Court has inherent jurisdiction under S. 561-A, Cr. P. C. to pass any order necessary to prevent abuse of the process of any Court. In the world of business, things are often done which are betrayals of confidence and deceptions which arouse moral indignation, but are nevertheless civil wrongs which can be righted by Civil Courts and are not crimes which can be punished by a Criminal Court. Not every immoral act is criminal and it is an abuse of the process of a Court to attempt to create a new crime in order to compel men to conform to a high standard of probity in business dealings or to force them to execute their promises. And therefore the High Court, to prevent specious and spiteful criminal prosecutions for actions which, though strictly dishonourable yet do not amount to crimes, has jurisdiction to interfere."

(6) I am in respectful agreement with the enunciation of law made in these rulings.

(7) In the result this application has to be accepted, since the facts of the case do not disclose a criminal offence. Devia was a signatory neither to the agreement nor to any receipts. But even then he has been arraigned as an accused, which is a flagrant case of abuse of the process of court.

(8) I, therefore, order that the criminal proceedings pending in the Court of the Sub-Judge Magistrate First Class, Jammu against Ths: Devia Ram and Beli Ram be quashed. The order of the Sessions Judge, Jammu dated 15th Magh 2009 rejecting the revision application of the applicants is set aside. Bail bonds if any of the accused persons Devia and Beli Ram are discharged and they be set free.

(A) ('39) AIR 1939 Lah 257: 41 Pun LR 796

ORDER: Mohd. Yusuf and others brought a suit for possession of certain immovable property against Jamal Baba and others. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court of Senior Subordinate Judge, Srinagar. On appeal the District Judge found that the trial Court had decided the case on insufficient material. Therefore the decree passed by the trial Court dismissing the suit was set aside and the case was remanded to the trial Court with the direction that it shall frame fresh issues and allow the parties to adduce fresh evidence in regard to the issues raised and dispose of the case according to law. No directions were given by the lower appellate Court in regard to the refund of Court-fees. The plaintiffs made an application before the lower appellate Court under S. 151, Civil P. C., read with S. 13, Court-Fees Act, for the refund of the Court fees. That application was dismissed on flimsy grounds.

(2) The plaintiffs have come up in revision to this Court and it is argued that as the suit was remanded to the trial Court for fresh trial the court-fees should have been refunded. Strictly speaking, this remand order does not come within the purview of O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C. It is a remand order made by the lower appellate Court under its inherent powers. I have gone through the order passed by the District Judge and I find that the District Judge has come to the conclusion that the suit was decided on insufficient material before the trial Court. It has been held in — 'Firm Hari Ram & Sons v. H. O. Hay', AIR 1939 Lah 257 (A).

"Where there has been no real trial of the main issues involved in the case in both the Courts below, the appellant is entitled to refund of Court-fee paid by him in the lower appellate Court in memorandum of appeal."

In this case, as held by the District Judge, issue No. 1 was not properly decided by the trial Court and the case was remanded to it for fresh trial. In my opinion the District Judge should have ordered the refund of the court-fees to the plaintiff appellant.

(3) I, therefore, allow this application, set aside the order passed by the District Judge disallowing the prayer for the refund of Court-fees and direct that necessary certificate for the refund of court-fees should be issued in favour of the applicant.

First Appeal No. 29 of 2008 and First Appeal No. 4 of 2009, D/- 25-3-1953.

Jammu and Kashmir Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act (2007), Preamble, Ss. 4 (4), 5 (5), 20, 26 and 35 — Act is not ultra vires the legislative powers of the Yuvraj — Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act (1996), Ss. 4, 5, 72 — S. 5 is not abrogated by Proclamation of Yuvraj — Constitution of India, Arts. 370, 385, 254 and Part III — Applicability to Jammu and Kashmir — Repugnancy with Jammu and Kashmir Land Acquisition Act (10 of 1990), S. 6.

Jammu and Kashmir Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act (2007) is not ultra vires of the powers of Shree Yuvraj nor is it open to review by the Courts. (Para 28)

His Highness the Maharaja of Jammu and Kashmir's legislative, executive and judicial powers in relation to the State were not limited in the sphere outside the matters assigned to the Union. He could entrust all his rights and authority under Ss. 4 and 5 of the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act 1996 to any person whom he liked even to the extent of effacing himself altogether as the British Parliament can do and his proclamation dated 7th Har 2006 published in Extraordinary Gazette dated 20-6-1949 entrusting these powers to Yuvraj was perfectly valid and constitutional. (Para 3)

(Short background of the constitutional relationship that existed between the Jammu and Kashmir State and the British Crown before the partition of India and how it was affected by the Indian Independence Act of 1947 and by the subsequent execution of the Instrument of Accession by His Highness on the 26th October 1947, traced). (Para 3)

A Legislature whose powers are circumscribed by the superior authority which has created it can exercise legislative powers of the same nature as the superior authority itself and cannot be treated as its delegate or agent. Consequently, it cannot be contended that the Yuvraj, to whom full and plenary powers of legislation had been given by a sovereign authority which could do anything it pleased, was an agent or delegate of that sovereign authority and that there are any checks or restraints on his power. Therefore the Yuvraj is fully competent to exercise powers under S. 5 of the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996. (Para 4)

Article 385 does not in terms apply to the State of Jammu and Kashmir. It may also be observed that under Art. 370 only such provisions of the Constitution could be declared by the President, in consultation with the State Government to apply to the State of Jammu and Kashmir as related to matters specified in the Instrument of Accession. (Para 5)

1953 J. & K. /4 & 5

The Article has not been specifically excluded from the Second Schedule to the Constitution (Application to J. & K.) Order, 1950 only through an oversight or inadvertence. (Para 5)

The State Constitution Act is clearly saved under clause 8 of the Instrument of Accession and it remains materially unaffected by Art. 370 of the Indian Constitution. (Para 5)

The words in the Proclamation of 26-11-1949 by the Yuvraj that "the provisions of the said Indian Constitution shall, as from the date of its commencement, supersede and abrogate all other constitutional provisions inconsistent therewith which are at present in force in this State" can only be interpreted to mean such provisions of the Constitution as are really applicable to the State and not those provisions of the Constitution which were not and could not be applied to the State in accordance with the letter and spirit of Art. 370. The Yuvraj could make an Act inconsistent with Part III of the Constitution relating to Fundamental Rights. The Chapter on Fundamental Rights does not apply to the State of Jammu and Kashmir and no Act made by the Yuvraj can be questioned on this ground. In fact no legislation made by the Yuvraj outside the matters within the competence of Parliament can form the subject-matter of review in a Court of law just as no Act of British Parliament could be declared ultra vires by any Court. (Para 5)

Consequently, S. 5, Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996 is neither abrogated nor superseded by the provisions of the Indian Constitution, by virtue of the Proclamation of 26-11-1949. (Para 5)

The provisions contained in the J. & K. Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act do not relate to the acquisition of property for the State or for any other public purpose. They ordain extinguishment of the rights of the landlord, in the manner set forth in S. 4 of the Act and, therefore, these are not in conflict with S. 6, J. & K. Land Acquisition Act. (Para 6)

Even assuming that there is some clash between these Acts, Art. 254 of the Constitution cannot be invoked for the purpose. Article 254 is not really applicable to the State of Jammu & Kashmir. The condition precedent for the effective application of Art. 254 is that it should relate to a provision of law in the concurrent list with respect to which Parliament has power to make laws for the State. In the absence of such power and in the absence of the application of List III of the Seventh Schedule to the State, the question of any provision of law made by the State Legislature being repugnant to any provisions of a law made by parliament which parliament is not competent to enact for the State or to any existing law does not arise and the J. & K. Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act cannot be held ultra vires of the powers of Yuvraj on this ground. (Para 6)

There is nothing whatsoever in the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996 which limits the legislative power of the Ruler or the Yuvraj within the residuary sovereignty of the State. The Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996 did not lay down any Fundamental Rights which could not be abridged or taken away by the sovereign Legislature, i.e., the Ruler or the Yuvraj and his powers of Legislation are as wide and as plenary as those of the British Parliament and they cannot form the subject-matter of judicial review, nor can they be impugned on any such ground as non-payment of compensation. (Para 7)

Since the Yuvraj was not the delegate of His Highness and had as full and as plenary powers as His Highness himself and, therefore, he could make any law in the State, he could also delegate his powers of legislation to any person or body whom he thought fit to do so. (Para 8)

Even then the delegations made in most of the provisions of the Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act, (Ss. 4(4), 5(5), 20 and 35) relate to matters of detail permissible even under the Supreme Court ruling AIR 1951 SC 332 and do not part with essential legislative functions, namely, legislative policy & its formulation as a rule of conduct. Such delegation is perfectly valid. (Para 8)

But these restrictions which are implicit in the Constitution of India do not apply to the Ruler of the Jammu and Kashmir State who enjoyed full residuary sovereignty. (Para 8)

Section 26 of the Act, however, stands on a slightly different footing. Here the question of award of compensation has been left to be settled by the Constituent Assembly which could not be regarded as a subordinate authority. There was nothing wrong in leaving the decision of the question of payment of compensation to the expropriated landlords to a body which was to be convened for the purpose of drawing up the Constitution of the State. SHAHMIRI J.: This judgment shall dispose of two appeals — Civil First Appeal No. 29 of 2008 from the judgment and decree of Kilam J. dated 11th Magh 2008 and Civil First Appeal No. 4 of 2009 from the judgment and decree of the District Judge, Kashmir, dated 23rd Magh 2008. In the suit before the learned single Judge of this Court Magher Singh, appellant, prayed for a declaration that the Jammu and Kashmir Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act, 2007 is ultra vires of the powers of Shree Yuvaraj and therefore in spite of the passage of this Act the plaintiff continues to be the lawful owner of 811 Kanals of land, situate in villages Kadyal and Kotli Arjansingh, Tehsil Ranbirsinghpura, District Jammu. In the suit before the learned District Judge which was instituted by Badri Nath Munshi and another on their own behalf and on behalf of the Jammu and Kashmir Agricultural Association the appellants sought the declaration that the Jammu and Kashmir Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act, 2007 was invalid and the appellants and other landowners (members of the J & K Agricultural Association) in the State are and still continue to be in peaceful possession and enjoyment of their lands of which they were admittedly owners in possession prior to the enforcement of the Act in the State without any limitation and restrictions imposed by the provisions of the Act. The declarations were refused, the Act was held intra vires and both the suits were dismissed.

(2) In both the appeals the point for determination is whether the Jammu and Kashmir Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act 2007 is ultra vires of Shree Yuvaraj Karansingh who has made that Act in exercise of the powers vested in him under Section 5 of the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996 read with the proclamation issued by His Highness the Maharaja of Jammu and Kashmir published in an extraordinary issue of the Government Gazette dated 7th Har, 2006. Elaborate arguments have been addressed to us by the learned counsel for the parties. Section 4, Jammu and Kashmir Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act, 2007 runs as follows:

- "4. Extinction of the right of ownership in certain land. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force, the right of ownership held by a proprietor in land other than land mentioned in sub-s. (2) shall subject to the other provisions of this Act, extinguish and cease to vest in him from the date this Act comes into force.
- (2) Extinction of the right of ownership under sub-section (1) shall not apply to— (a) unit of land not exceeding 182 Kanals including residential sites, Bedzats and Safedzats;

The learned counsel for the appellants has impugned the Act on the following main grounds:

(1) His Highness the Maharaja of Jammu and Kashmir was not an absolute sovereign and therefore he could not entrust his legislative authority to any other person.

(2) Shree Yuvaraj being a delegate of his Highness was not competent to enact the Act under Section 5 of the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996;

(3) At any rate after the Constitution of India came into force Section 5, Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996 under which the Jammu and Kashmir Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act, 2007 was passed by Shree Yuvaraj was abrogated or superseded by Art. 385 of the Constitution of India.

(4) The Act is invalid inasmuch as it is in conflict with Art. 254 of the Constitution of India.

(5) The Act is also void because it aims at extinguishment of ownership in private property without making any suitable provision for compensation.

(6) Furthermore it is urged that even if the Act is intra vires some parts of it which contain provisions for delegated legislation are void.

(3) (a) In regard to the first point that His Highness the Maharaja was not an absolute sovereign it is urged by the learned counsel for the appellants that before the partition he was under the paramountcy of the British Crown and after he executed the Instrument of Accession in favour of the Dominion of India in 26-10-1947 he surrendered part of his sovereignty to the Dominion of India and therefore was a limited subordinated sovereign and consequently he could not delegate his legislative authority to Shree Yuvaraj.

In order to appreciate the position of His Highness it would be necessary to give a short background of the constitutional relationship that existed between the Jammu and Kashmir State and the British Crown before the partition of India, and how it was affected by the Indian Independence Act of 1947 and by the subsequent execution of the Instrument of Accession by His Highness on 26th October 1947. Previous to the partition there was no doubt that the Ruler of the Jammu and Kashmir State was under the suzerainty of the British Crown inasmuch as foreign relations were under the exclusive control of the Crown representative. But in so far as the internal sovereignty of the Ruler was concerned it was absolutely unlimited and there were no fetters on it. In this connection it would be relevant to reproduce Sections 4 and 5 of the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996 as they stood before the Act was amended in November 1951:

- "4. The territories for the time being vested in His Highness are governed by and in the name of His Highness, and all rights, authority and jurisdiction which appertain or are incidental to the Government of such territories are exercisable by His Highness, except in so far as may be otherwise provided by or under this Act, or as may be otherwise directed by His Highness.
5. Notwithstanding anything contained in this or any other Act, all powers, legislative, executive and judicial, in relation to the State and its Government are hereby declared to be and to have always been inherent in and possessed and retained by His Highness and nothing contained in this or any other Act shall affect or be deemed to have affected the right and prerogative of His Highness to make laws, and issue proclamations, orders and ordinances by virtue of his inherent authority".

(b) These provisions make it crystal clear that the territories comprised in the State of Jammu and Kashmir were vested in His Highness and governed by and in his name and all rights, authority and jurisdiction appertaining or incidental to the government of these territories was exercisable by His Highness except in so far as was otherwise provided under the Act or as it might otherwise be directed by him. Despite the fact that under the Act a Legislative Assembly, i.e. Praja Sabha, had been set up with certain circumscribed powers, all legislative, executive and judicial powers of His Highness in relation to the State and its Government were declared to be or to have always been inherent in and possessed by his Highness. In view of these clear provisions it is futile to argue that His Highness' powers to do what he pleased in relation to the State could be seriously questioned. So far as the internal sovereignty of the State was concerned the powers of the Ruler were similar to those of the British parliament. In this connection the following extract from the judgment of the late Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of India in The Delhi Laws Act, (1912), AIR 1951 S C 332 at p. 337 (A) may be aptly quoted:

"The important question underlying the three questions submitted for the Court's consideration is what is described as the delegation of legislative powers. 'A legislative body which is sovereign like an autocratic ruler has power to do anything. It may, like a ruler, by an individual decision, direct that a certain person may be put to death or a certain property may be taken over by the State. 'A body of such character may have power to nominate someone who can exercise all its powers and make all its decision'. This is possible to be done because there is no authority or tribunal which can question the right or power of the authority to do so".

There is no doubt whatsoever that the observations set out above fully apply to the powers of an Indian ruler like the Ruler of the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

In this connection reference may also be made to a Full Bench judgment of Pepsu High Court, — Gurdwara Sahib v. Piyara Singh, A. I. R. 1953 Pepsu 1 (B) cited by the learned Acting Advocate General. It is stated therein that sovereignty of a State has two aspects, i. e. "external" as independent of all control from without and 'internal' as paramount over all actions within. A State by ceding certain powers with regard to external affairs to another state does not cease to be sovereign if its powers with regard to internal matters remain unrestricted. It was held that the erstwhile Patiala State in the above sense was an independent and sovereign State, and its Ruler, so far as internal matters were concerned, exercised powers identical with those exercised by parliament in England. In short though in matters relating to external affairs and relations with states he was controlled by the British Government, and even in internal matters the paramount power had the right to interfere in certain contingencies, in internal matters his words had the weight and authority of law, and he exercised all the powers of a sovereign and discharged all his functions as such in matters judicial, executive and administrative. In his sovereign capacity he had the fullest control over his subjects and their property in his territories and could pass all kinds of orders. Therefore where in his capacity as the ruler of the Patiala State the Maharaja passed an executive order depriving a subject of his property and conferred the same on a Gurdwara Committee the Full Bench of the High Court held in the above case that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to question the legality of the order.

(c) While the Maharaja of Kashmir was under the Paramountcy of the British Crown before the partition of India from 15-8-1947 under Section 7, Indian Independence Act (10 & 11 Geo VI Ch. 30) passed by the British Parliament suzerainty of His Majesty over the Indian States lapsed and all functions exercisable by His Majesty at that date with respect to the State of Jammu and Kashmir, all obligations of His Majesty towards the Jammu and Kashmir State or the ruler thereof and all powers, rights, authority or jurisdiction exercisable by His Majesty at that date in relation to the State of Jammu and Kashmir by treaty or otherwise lapsed and the State became an independent and sovereign State in the full sense of the International Law. Thus whatever limits to the sovereignty of His Highness in relation to matters coming within the sphere of paramountcy existed before 15-8-1947, these ceased to exist and His Highness became an uncontrolled and absolute sovereign even in relation to such spheres from that. Now let us examine what was the effect of the execution of the Instrument of Accession by His Highness on 26-10-1947. This Instrument of Accession which was executed by the Ruler of the independent and sovereign State of Jammu and Kashmir was executed by him under Section 6, Government of India Act 1935, as adapted by the Indian (Provisional Constitution) Order, 1947.

By executing this Instrument of Accession the Ruler on behalf of the State acceded to the Dominion of India with the object that certain authorities specified in Section 6 (1) (a) shall, by virtue of the Instrument of Accession, 'but subject always to the terms thereof,' and for the purposes only of the Dominion, exercise in relation to the State such functions as would be vested in them by or under the Act. It is clear that, even if the Instrument of Accession had not made any specific reservations therein, the instrument read with Section 6, Government of India Act would leave the residuary sovereignty of the State entirely unaffected. But the Instrument of Accession does not leave this important matter to be determined by implication alone. Clause 8 of the Instrument of Accession runs as follows:

"8. Nothing in this Instrument affects the continuance of my sovereignty in and over the State, or, save as provided by or under this Instrument, the exercise of any powers, authority & rights now enjoyed by me as Ruler of this State or the validity of any law at present in force in this State".

In view of this clear and express reservation we see that no change whatsoever was affected in the residuary sovereignty of the State or the power of its Ruler so far as the succession of the State to the Dominion of India was concerned. It may not be out of place to mention here that on 5-3-1948 His Highness issued a proclamation by which he appointed a Cabinet to carry on the administration of the State. Sheikh Mohd Abdullah was appointed the Prime Minister and all other Ministers were appointed on his advice. The proclamation laid down that the Cabinet would act on the principle of joint responsibility. In the words of the Late Mr. Gopalaswami Ayyangar thus

"He instituted a kind of responsible government with a Prime Minister and colleagues who would own collective responsibility for their acts and regard themselves as jointly responsible for all the acts of the Government. (Vide Constituent Assembly debates dated 17-10-1949, Vol. X No. 10 at page 426).

This Proclamation did not in any way affect the sovereign powers vested in the Ruler. The only effect of this proclamation was that thenceforward His Highness exercised his executive and legislative powers in accordance with the advice given to him by his government, i. e. his Council of Ministers while he continued to exercise his judicial powers in accordance with the advice given to him by the Board of Judicial Advisers provided under Section 71, Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996. The inherent powers of the Ruler remained unchanged.

(d) Now the question to be examined is whether Article 370 of the Constitution of India which was embodied in the Constitution while the Indian Constituent Assembly was about to finalize its labours made any change in the constitutional relationship of the State as it existed between the State of Jammu and Kashmir and the Dominion of India. Article 370 of the Constitution of India runs as follows:

"370. (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution, (a) the provisions of Article 238 shall not apply in relation to the State of Jammu and Kashmir; (b) the power of parliament to make laws for the said State shall be limited to—

(i) those matters in the Union list and the concurrent List which, in consultation with the Government of the State, are declared by the President to correspond to matters specified in the instrument of Accession of the State to the Dominion of India as the matters with respect to which the Dominion Legislature may make laws for that State; and

(ii) such other matters in the said Lists as, with the concurrence of the Government of the State, the President may by order specify.

Explanation: For the purposes of this article, the Government of the State means the person for the time being recognized by the President as the Maharaja of Jammu and Kashmir acting on the advice of the Council of Ministers for the time being in office under the Maharaja's Proclamation dated the fifth day of March, 1948;

(c) the provisions of article 1 and this article shall apply in relation to that State;

(d) such of the other provisions of this Constitution shall apply in relation to that State subject to such exceptions and modifications as the President may by order specify:

Provided that no such order which relates to the matters specified in the Instrument of Accession of the State referred to in paragraph (i) of sub-clause (b) shall be issued except in consultation with the Government of the State:

Provided further that no such order which relates to matters other than those referred to in the last preceding proviso shall be issued except with concurrence of that Government.

(2) If the concurrence of the Government of the State referred to in para. (ii) of sub-cl. (b) of cl. (1) or in the second proviso to sub-cl. (d) of that clause be given before the Constituent Assembly for the purpose of framing the Constitution of the state is convened, it shall be placed before such Assembly for such decision as it may take thereon.

(3) Notwithstanding anything in the foregoing provision of this article, the President may, by public notification, declare that this article shall cease to be operative or shall be operative only with such exceptions and modifications and from such date as he may specify.

Provided that the recommendation of the Constituent Assembly of the State referred to in clause (2) shall be necessary before the President issues such a notification."

A careful examination of this article would show that it in no way altered the basis of relationship between the State and the Union of India. The residuary sovereignty of the State and the powers of its Ruler in matters other than those specified in the Instrument of Accession remained unaffected. The purpose for which Art. 370 was incorporated in the Indian Constitution is clear from the language of the article itself. This is also apparent from the speeches made by the prominent members of the Government of India who were responsible for drafting this article and piloting it through the Constituent Assembly. On 12-10-1949 this is what the late Sardar Patel, Deputy Leader of the Congress Party, Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister for States said in the Constituent Assembly on this subject:—
"In view of the special problem with which the Jammu and Kashmir Government is faced, we have made special provision for the continuance of the relationship of the State with the Union on the existing basis."

Reference may also be made in this connection to the following extracts from the speech of the late Mr. Gopalaswami Ayyangar which was delivered by him while moving Art. 370 (then Art. 306-A) in the Constituent Assembly:—

- (i) X X X X The States have been integrated with the Federal Republic in such a manner that they do not have to accede or execute a document of Accession for the purpose of becoming units of the Republic, but they are mentioned in the Constitution itself; and in the case of practically all states other than the State of Jammu and Kashmir, their constitutions also have been embodied in the Constitution for the whole of India. All those other States have agreed to integrate themselves in that way and accept the Constitution provided.
- (ii) In the case of the other Indian States or Unions of States there are two or three points which have got to be remembered. They have all accepted the Constitution framed for States in part I of the new Constitution and those provisions have been adapted so as to suit conditions of Indian States and Unions of States. Secondly, the Centre that is the Republican Federal Centre, will have power to make laws applying in every such State or Union to all Union and Concurrent Subjects. Thirdly a uniformity of relationship has been established between those States and Unions and the Centre. Kashmir's conditions are, as I have said special and require special treatment.
- (iii) At present, the legislature, which was known as the Praja Sabha in the State is dead. Neither that legislature nor a constituent assembly can be convoked or can function until complete peace comes to prevail in that State. We have therefore to deal with the Government of the State which, as represented in its Council of Ministers, reflects the opinion of the largest political party in the State.
- (iv) The second portion of this article relates to the legislative authority of Parliament over the Jammu and Kashmir State. This is governed primarily by the Instrument of Accession. Broadly speaking, that legislative power is confined to the three subjects of defence, foreign affairs and communications but as a matter of fact these broad categories include a number of items which are listed in the Instrument of Accession. I believe they number some twenty to twentyfive. Now, these items have undergone a change in description, in numbering, in arrangement, as amongst themselves, in List I and List III of the new Constitution, it is therefore necessary that the items mentioned in the Instrument of Accession should be brought into line with the changed designations of entries in Lists I and III of the new Constitution. So, clause (1) (b) of Art. 306-A says that this listing of the items as per the terms of the new Constitution should be done by the President in consultation with the Government of the State.
- (v) Clause (b) (ii) refers to possible additions to the List in the Instrument of Accession, and these additions could be made according to the provisions of this article with the concurrence of the Government of the State
- (vi) Then, there is the explanation, which defines what the Government of the State means. The Government of the State is defined both in the Constitution which is now supposed to be in force in the Jammu and Kashmir State as well as in the Proclamation which the Maharaja issued on the 5th March 1948. The terms of the Proclamation, to the extent that they are inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution Act of the State, will prevail over that Constitution Act and therefore it is that in this Explanation it is the proclamation which is referred to. Under the terms of that proclamation, the Maharaja constituted an interim popular Government, and he said—

'I hereby order as follows:

- (I) My council of Ministers shall consist of the Prime Minister and such other Ministers as may be appointed on the advice of the Prime Minister. I have by Royal Warrant appointed Sheikh Mohd. Abdullah as the Prime Minister with effect from the 1st day of March, 1948.

He proceeds—

The Prime Minister and other Ministers would function as a Cabinet and act on principle of joint responsibility.

Then there was no Legislature functioning and so he instituted a kind of responsible Government with a Prime Minister and colleagues who would own collective responsibility for their acts and regard themselves as jointly responsible for all the acts of the Government. Now, that is brought out in this Explanation.....

- (vii). "Clauses (a) and (d) refer to the provisions of the Constitution other than the matters listed in Lists I and III. These various provisions have been divided into certain categories. The first according to this draft is that Article 1 of the Constitution will automatically apply. As you know, it describes the territory of India, and includes amongst these territories, all the States mentioned in Part III, and Jammu and Kashmir is one of the States mentioned in Part III. With regard to the other provisions in the Constitution, these will apply to the Jammu and Kashmir State with such exceptions and modifications as may be decided on when the President issues an order to that effect. That order can be issued in regard to subjects mentioned in the Instrument of Accession only after consultation with the Government of the State. In regard to other matters the concurrence of that Government has to be taken.

- ....."
- (viii). "Then we come to clause (2). You will remember that several of these clauses provide for the concurrence of the Govt. of Jammu & Kashmir State. Now, these relate particularly to matters which are not mentioned in the Instrument of Accession, and it is one of our commitments to the people and Government of Kashmir that no such additions should be made except with the consent of the Constituent Assembly which may be called in the State for the purpose of framing its Constitution. In other words, what we are committed to is that these additions are matters for the determination of the Constituent Assembly of the State". (vide Constituent Assembly Debates, Vol. X No: 10. dated 17th October, 1949 at pages 424 to 427).

In relation to the State of Jammu and Kashmir in short the effect of this article to use the words of the late Mr. Gopalaswami Ayyangar is that "the Union Legislature will get jurisdiction to enact laws on matters specified either in the Instrument of Accession or by later addition with the concurrence of the Government of State" which is of course subject to the ratification by the State Constituent Assembly and the State would continue to be governed in the residuary field by its own laws and by its own Constitution.

(e) Accordingly I find that there is no substance whatsoever in the contention urged by the learned counsel for the appellants that His Highness' legislative, executive and judicial powers in relation to the State were limited in the sphere outside the matters assigned to the Union. He could certainly entrust all his rights and authority under Sections 4 and 5 of the Constitution Act to any person whom he liked even to the extent of effacing himself altogether as the British parliament can do in the words of Kania C. J. referred to above and his proclamation dated 7th Mar 2006 entrusting these powers to Yuvaraj was perfectly valid and constitutional.

(4) The second contention urged by the learned counsel for the appellants is that Yuvaraj being a delegate of His Highness the Act passed by him under Section 5, J. & K. Constitution Act, 1996, was bad because the powers under Section 5 were inherent powers of His Highness and could not be entrusted to the Yuvaraj. The learned Acting Advocate General has repelled this contention by taking his stand on the position that the Yuvaraj was in no sense a delegate of His Highness. He has strongly urged that the words of the proclamation published in the Gazette extraordinary dated 20-6-1949 clearly show that the Ruler during his absence from the State had transferred all the powers and functions exercisable by him in relation to the State and its Government to Yuvaraj and, therefore, the Yuvaraj was the replica or manifestation of His Highness and had as full and as plenary powers as His Highness himself. In order to appreciate this point it is desirable to give below the words of the Proclamation itself:

"Whereas I have decided for reasons of health to leave the State for a temporary period and to entrust to the Yuvaraj Shree Karansinghji Bahadur for that period all my powers and functions in regard to the Government of the State."

"Now, therefore, I hereby direct and declare that all powers and functions, whether legislative, executive, or judicial which are exercisable by me in relation to the State and its Government in including in particular my right and prerogative of making laws of issuing proclamations. Orders and Ordinances, of remitting, commuting or reducing sentences, and of pardoning offenders, shall during the period of my absence from the State be exercisable by the Yuvaraj Shree Karansinghji Bahadur".

It fully bears out that His Highness the Maharaja transferred all his rights, powers and prerogatives as contained in Sections 4, 5 and 72, J. & K. Constitution Act, 1996, as it stood before its being amended and the Ruler did not reserve any power to himself for this period. The Yuvaraj was given all the powers by an authority as sovereign as the British Parliament. A reference to — 'Empress v. Burah', (1878) 3 A. C. 889 corresponding to 4 Cal 172 (P. C.) (C) would show that even in the case of a Legislature whose powers were expressly limited by an Act of the British Parliament and which could obviously act only within the ambit of the powers so conferred it was held that in no sense it was an agent or delegate of the Imperial Parliament and within its scope it had plenary powers of legislation as large as those of the British Parliament itself. The following observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in this case may aptly be quoted here:

"The Indian Legislature has powers expressly limited by the Act of the Imperial Parliament which created it, and it can of course do nothing beyond the limits which circumscribe these powers. But when acting within these limits it is not in any sense an agent or delegate of the Imperial Parliament, but has, and was intended to have, plenary powers of legislation as large, and of the same nature, as those of Parliament itself."

In another case — 'Hodge v. The Queen', (1884) 9 A. C. 117 (D), similar observations were made in the case of the powers of the provincial Legislature of Ontario which has been created by the British North America Act. This runs as follows:

"It appears to their Lordships, however, that the objection thus raised by the appellants is founded on an entire misconception of the true character and position of the provincial Legislature. They are in no sense delegates of or acting under any mandate from the Imperial Parliament. When the British North America Act enacted that there should be a Legislature for Ontario, and that its Legislative Assembly should have exclusive authority to make laws for the province and for provincial purposes in relation to the matters enumerated in Section 92, it conferred powers, not in any sense to be exercised by delegation from or as agent of the Imperial Parliament, but authority as plenary and as ample, within the limits prescribed by Section 92, as the Imperial Parliament in the plenitude of its powers possessed and could bestow. Within these limits of subjects and areas the local Legislature is Supreme, and has the same authority as the Imperial Parliament."

From these authorities it would be clear that, while even a Legislature whose powers are circumscribed by the superior authority which has created it can exercise legislative powers of the same nature as the superior authority itself and cannot be treated as its delegate or agent, the contention that the Yuvaraj, to whom full and plenary powers of legislation had been given by a sovereign authority which could do any thing it pleased, was an agent or delegate of that sovereign authority and that there are any checks or restraints on his power, becomes groundless. In this connection the learned Acting Advocate General has also drawn our attention to — 'Deggamber Sain v. Lachhman Dass', AIR 1952 J. & K. 7 (E) in which the Board of Judicial Advisers have held:

"Under the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996, His Highness the Maharaja Bahadur has plenary power of Legislation. Under Section 5 of that Act all powers, legislative, executive & judicial in relation to the State and its Government are declared to be vested in His Highness. These powers have now devolved on Shree Yuvaraj Bahadur under the Proclamation above referred to. It is clear that the legislative machinery in the State is simple and legislation can be expeditiously made on the advice of those on whom the responsibility of day to day administration rests."

After this clear pronouncement on the subject by the highest Judicial authority in the State there can be no question that the Yuvaraj is not fully competent to exercise powers under Section 5, Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996.

(5) With regard to the point that Section 5, Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996 is abrogated or at least superseded by the provisions of the Indian Constitution it is urged on behalf of the appellants that the Yuvaraj by his proclamation dated 26-11-1949 has declared that the Constitution of India to be adopted by the Constituent Assembly of India shall in so far as it is applicable to the State of Jammu and Kashmir, govern the constitutional relationship between this State and the contemplated Union of India and that the provisions of the constitution shall as from the date of its commencement supersede and abrogate all other constitutional provisions inconsistent therewith which are at present in force in this State. Article 385 of the Constitution of India reads thus:

"Until the House or Houses of the Legislature of a State specified in Part B of the First Schedule has or have been duly constituted and summoned to meet for the first session under the provisions of this Constitution, the body or the authority functioning immediately before the commencement of this Constitution as the Legislature of the corresponding Indian State shall exercise the powers and perform the duties conferred by the provisions of this Constitution on the House or Houses of the Legislature of the State so specified."

This article has been made applicable to the State of Jammu and Kashmir by the President in consultation with the Government of the State under the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order 1950. It is argued that as under this article the legislative authority functioning in the State before the commencement of the Constitution could exercise only the powers and perform the duties conferred by the provisions of the Constitution on the House or Houses of the Legislature of the State, the Yuvaraj or even the Ruler himself could not pass a Law which the State Legislature could not pass under the Constitution of India.

The contention is that the Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act in fact expropriates lands in the State without making any provision for compensation or specifying the principle for doing so and no State Legislature in India can pass a law which takes away or abridges the right conferred by Part III of the Constitution and under Article 13 the same restrictions would be applicable to the Legislature in the State. In the first place it is not strictly correct that the Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act, 2007, did not provide any compensation for proprietors whose lands had been expropriated. Under Section 26 of the Act some payment to the expropriated Landlords was provided until the Constituent Assembly of the State settled the question of compensation. After the institution of suits the State Constituent Assembly decided that no compensation was to be paid to the persons whose lands had been expropriated under the Act. It may, therefore, be assumed for the sake of argument that the Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act did not make any real provision for compensation. Is this Act under these circumstances ultra vires of the then State Legislature, that is to say, the Yuvaraj? The learned Acting Advocate General has argued that the application of Article 385 to the State to quote his words is "imaginary and not real". He stressed that the whole history of the constitutional relationship of the State with the Union and the provisions of Article 370, which has been quoted in extenso in the earlier part of the judgment show that Article 385 does not "in terms apply to our State". He contends that it is clearly provided in Article 370 that the provisions of Art. 238 shall not apply in relation to the State of Jammu and Kashmir. This means that the provisions contained in Part VI of the Constitution of India, which provides for a constitution of what were formerly known as Indian States as distinguished from the provinces do not apply to our State. Article 168 which makes a provision for State Legislatures in all these States & is contained in Part VI has no application to our State. Not only this but List II—State List & List III—Concurrent List—of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution are omitted from the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order, 1950 and even cls. (2) and (3) of Art. 246 do not apply to this State. Clause (2) of Art. 246 refers to the Concurrent List and gives power to Parliament and the State Legislatures specified in part A and Part B of the First Schedule to make laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in the Concurrent List—List III. Clause (3) of Art. 246 gives exclusive power to the State Legislatures to make laws with respect to List II. Provisions of Art. 370 read with the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order, 1950, which has been made under it, clearly shows that the Instrument of Accession executed on 26-10-1947 is still the real basis of relationship between the Union and the Jammu and Kashmir State and the power of Parliament to make laws for the State is confined to matters which the President, in consultation with the State Government, declares to correspond to matters specified in the Instrument of Accession governing the accession of the State to the Dominion of India and in addition to Arts. 1 and 370 those provisions of the Constitution of India are to apply to the State which the President, in consultation with the Government of the State, declares as related to the matters specified in the Instrument of Accession of the State. The remaining matters outside those to which the power of Parliament to make laws for the State extends continue to remain within the exclusive power of the State Legislature and the residuary sovereignty of the State thus remains entirely unaffected. Of course the President can extend the power of Parliament to make laws with respect to a matter not specified in the Instrument of Accession with the concurrence of the Government of the State which has to be subsequently ratified by the Constituent Assembly. Similar provision is made with regard to the other provisions of the Constitution of India (Vide Second proviso to sub-cl. (d) of cl. (1) of Art. 370). Article 370 which contains the basic provision of the structure of constitutional relationship between the State and the Union leaves the State Constitution and the state sovereignty in relation to matters other than those specified in the Instrument of Accession and not covered by the provisions of Art. 370 entirely unaffected. No provision has, therefore, been made or was necessary to be made so far as the Constitution of the State was concerned. The State was to be governed by its own constitution till the Constituent Assembly of the State framed a Constitution for the State. That this was the basis of the relationship between the State and the union will be amply clear by what has been stated in para. 3 (d) of this judgment. The Constituent Assembly of the State was to have plenary powers inasmuch as it had to determine the Constitution of the State as well as the sphere of the Union jurisdiction over the state.

In this connection a further reference may be made to the speech of the Late Mr. Gopalaswami Ayyangar in the Indian Constituent Assembly on 17-10-1949 when Art. 370, then Art. 306-A, was adopted by it. The relevant passage is as under:

"Again the Government of India have committed themselves to the people of Kashmir in certain respects. They have committed themselves to the position that an opportunity would be given to the people of the State to decide for themselves whether they will remain with the Republic or wish to get out of it. We are also committed to ascertaining this will of the people by means of a plebiscite provided that peaceful and normal conditions are restored and the impartiality of the plebiscite could be guaranteed. We have also agreed that the will of the people, through the instrument of a constituent assembly will determine the constitution of the State as well as the sphere of Union jurisdiction over the State."

Article 385 is an interim provision for the recognition of legislatures in States in Part B of the First Schedule till new Legislatures in these States are duly constituted & summoned under the provisions of the Constitution of India. As the Jammu and Kashmir State had to frame its own constitution and the new legislature in the State was to be summoned under the State Constitution till a new constitution was framed by the Constituent Assembly and a fresh legislature was set up under it, the question of the application of this article to the State could have no meaning whatsoever. Again the existing legislature could not exercise powers and perform duties conferred by the provisions of the Constitution of India on the houses of legislature in part B States, because Art. 370 specifically provides that the provisions of Art. 238 and consequently Part VI of the Constitution which confers powers and duties on legislatures in Part B States shall not apply to the State of Jammu and Kashmir. Application of Art. 385 to the State of Jammu and Kashmir would, therefore, lead to the absurd result of creating perfect vacuum in the legislative machinery of the State. It would be against the letter and spirit of Art. 370 of the Constitution and would also run counter to the pledge given by the responsible leaders of Indian Government that the relationship existing between the State and the Dominion of India was to be continued between the State and the Union of India. The application of Art. 385 is, therefore, to be construed according to the elementary rule of construction that a thing which is within the letter of a statute will, generally, be construed as not within the statute unless it be also within the real intention of the framers of the statute (vide Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 1946 Ed. page 20), & every effort has to be made to harmonize this interpretation with the letter & spirit of Art. 370 which is the specific article in the Constitution providing basis of constitutional relationship between the State and the Union. The application of Art. 385 is further open to the objection that the framers of the Constitution of India could not have intended to exceed their jurisdiction. They had clearly admitted the right of the State to convene its own Constituent Assembly for the purpose of framing its constitution. They, therefore, could not have intended to provide an interim provision for a matter which was outside their purview and for which they could not and did not make any provision in the constitution. The Rulers of other Part B States had executed supplementary Instruments of Accession and had agreed to the application of Art. 238 to their States.

After a careful consideration of all the factors bearing on this matter I agree with the learned Acting Advocate General that Art. 385 does not in terms apply to our State. It may also be observed that under Art. 370 only such provisions of the Constitution could be declared by the President, in consultation with the State Government to apply to the State of Jammu and Kashmir as related to matters specified in the Instrument of Accession. Article 385 of the Constitution does not deal with any such matter. It clearly deals with a matter falling within the residuary sovereignty of the State which has been specifically reserved under cl. 8 of the Instrument of Accession. A provision of Constitution relating to a matter of this nature could only be applied with the concurrence of the State Government pending ratification by the Constituent Assembly. Its application to the State of Jammu and Kashmir under an Order of President in consultation with the Government is, therefore, not in accordance with the method provided by the Second proviso to sub-cl. (d) of cl. (1) of Art. 370. A reference in the judgment of the trial Judge, Kilam J. that the article has been applied to the State with the concurrence of the State Government is manifestly incorrect. A careful appraisal of the facts stated above would show that the article has not been specifically excluded from the Second Schedule to the Constitution (Application to J & K) Order, 1950 only through an oversight or inadvertence. Now assuming for the sake of argument that the article applied to the State, the only meaning it can have is that it recognizes that the Yuvaraj, i.e., the authority functioning immediately before the commencement of this Constitution as Legislature, continues to exercise his powers under the State Constitution, i.e., the Jammu & Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996. To place any other interpretation on this article would not be possible as it would lead to absurd conclusions. The State Constitution Act is clearly saved under cl. 8 of the Instrument of Accession and it remains materially unaffected by Art. 370 of the Constitution.

I will now turn my attention to the proclamation of the Yuvaraj dated 25-11-1949 Vide, (pages 371-372 of the white Paper on Indian States published in 1950). The operative and relevant paragraphs of the Proclamation are as under:

"That the Constitution of India shortly to be adopted by the Constituent Assembly of India shall in so far as it is applicable to the State of Jammu and Kashmir, govern the constitutional relationship between this State and the contemplated Union of India and shall be enforced in this State by me, my heirs and successors in accordance with the tenor of its provisions;

That the provisions of the said Constitution shall as from the date of its commencement, supersede and abrogate all other constitutional provisions inconsistent therewith which are at present in force in this State."

With regard to this proclamation the Acting Advocate General has stated that it has not been published in the State gazette. But whether it has been published in the State Gazette or not or whether it has the support of the State Government on whose advice the Yuvaraj was to act I do not think that it has any effect on the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act including S. 5 thereof. In the first operative paragraph it has been clearly stated that the Constitution of India shall in so far as it is applicable to the State of Jammu and Kashmir, govern the constitutional relationship between the State and the contemplated union of India. In the second paragraph the words "that the provisions of the said Constitution shall, as from the date of its commencement, supersede and abrogate all other constitutional provisions inconsistent therewith which are at present in force in this State" can only be interpreted to mean such provisions of the Constitution as are really applicable to the State and not those provisions of the Constitution which were not and could not be applied to the State in accordance with the letter and spirit of Art. 370. Nor has the argument urged on behalf of the appellants any force that the Yuvaraj could not make an Act inconsistent with Part III of the Constitution relating to Fundamental Rights. The Chapter on Fundamental Rights does not apply to the State of Jammu and Kashmir and no Act made by the Yuvaraj can be questioned on this ground. In fact no legislation made by the Yuvaraj outside the matters within the competence of Parliament can form the subject-matter of review in a Court of law just as no Act of British parliament could be declared ultra vires by any Court. A reference may be made to the remarks made by Kania C. J. reproduced in para. 3(b) of this judgment. In the result I agree with the learned trial Judge, Kilam J. that Art. 385 has no effect on S. 5, Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996, and that the Yuvaraj could certainly make laws in all matters other than those to which the power of parliament to make laws for the State extends. The matter in question is not one of the matters which are within the legislative competence of Parliament.

(6) With regard to the fourth point it is urged by the learned counsel for the appellants that the question of the payment of compensation arising out of the Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act, 2007, falls within entry No. 42 of the concurrent List, i. e. List III of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution. This entry reads as under: "42. Principles on which compensation for property acquired or requisitioned for the purposes of the Union or of a State or for any other public purpose is to be determined and the form and the manner in which such compensation is to be given."

It is submitted that under S. 6, Jammu and Kashmir Land Acquisition Act, 1990, no property can be acquired by the State for State purposes, unless compensation is paid for that property in the manner provided in the Act. It is urged that under Article 254 of the Constitution which has been made applicable to the State an existing law, i.e. section 6, Jammu and Kashmir Land Acquisition Act, 1990, must prevail and the Big Landed Estates Act should be declared void to the extent to which it is repugnant to that Act. In the first place it may be stated that the provisions contained in the Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act do not relate to the acquisition of property for the State or for any other public purpose. They ordain extinguishment of the rights of the Landlord in the manner set forth in S. 4 of the Act and, therefore, these are not in conflict with S. 6, Land Acquisition Act. But assuming for the sake of argument that there is some clash between the two Acts, can Art. 254 of the Constitution be invoked for this purpose? For the sake of convenience the provisions of Art. 254 may be quoted here:

"254. (1) If any provision of a law made by the Legislature of a State is repugnant to any provision of a Law made by parliament which Parliament is competent to enact, or to any provision of an existing law with respect to one of the matters enumerated in the Concurrent List, then subject to the provisions of clause (2), the Law made by Parliament, whether passed before or after the law made by the Legislature of such State, or as the case may be, the existing law, shall prevail and the law made by the Legislature of the State shall to the extent of the repugnancy be void.

(2) Where a law made by the Legislature of a State specified in Part A or Part B of the First Schedule with respect to one of the matters enumerated in the concurrent List contains any provision repugnant to the provisions of an earlier law made by parliament or an existing law with respect to that matter, then, the law so made by the Legislature of such State, shall if it has been reserved for the consideration of the President and has received his assent, prevail in that State:

Provided that nothing in this clause shall prevent Parliament from enacting at any time any law with respect to the same matter including a law adding to, amending, varying or repealing the law so made by the Legislature of the State".

An examination of this article would show that this article appears to have been applied to the State only as an anticipatory provision. Article 370 left it open to the State of Jammu and Kashmir to agree to the extension of the power of Parliament to make laws in matters other than those specified in the Instrument of Accession, in the Union List or in the Concurrent List. At the time when Article 370 was framed the Union and Concurrent Lists could evidently not have been examined with a view to see which of the entries in them would correspond to matters specified in the Instrument of Accession. It must have been considered that some entries in the concurrent List might also be found to correspond to some matter contained in the Instrument of Accession. But when these Lists might have been examined at the appropriate time, the Constitution. (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order, 1950, shows that no entry in the Instrument of Accession was found to correspond to any entry in the Concurrent List and, therefore no entry in the Concurrent List was applied to the State. List II has been advisedly omitted from the Schedule appended to the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order, 1950. Only certain entries of the Union List have been included in the Schedule. Furthermore, Article 246 (2) giving Parliament as well as State Legislature power to make laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List III Concurrent List does not apply to the State of Jammu and Kashmir. It has, therefore, been rightly contended by the learned Acting Advocate General that Article 254 is not really applicable to the State. It could apply to the State only if Parliament had power to make laws with respect to entry No. 42 in the Concurrent List. Not only Parliament has no power to legislate for the State in regard to that entry, but as we have seen it has no power to make any laws for the State in respect to any of the matters enumerated in that List. The condition precedent for the effective application of Article 254 is that it should relate to a provision of law in the Concurrent List with respect to which Parliament has power to make laws for the State. In the absence of such power and in the absence of the application of List III of the seventh Schedule to the State the question of any provision of law made by the State Legislature being repugnant to any provision of a law made by parliament which Parliament is not competent to enact for the State or to any existing law does not arise and I agree with the trial Court that the impugned Act cannot be held ultra vires of the powers of Yuvaraj on this ground.

(7) The fifth point taken by the learned counsel for the appellants comes to this that even if Part III containing Fundamental Rights is not applicable to the State, the Yuvaraj could not take away natural right of property of a class of citizens without providing compensation. It is urged that the right to property is a sacred and inherent right of citizens and they could not be deprived of it without compensation. Reliance has been placed by the learned counsel for the appellants on certain observations made by the Supreme Court in — State of Bihar v. Kameshwar Singh, A. I. R. 1952 S. C. 252 (F). I have gone through this case and I find that it is not relevant as the case hinged on Article 31 (2) of the Constitution which declares that no property could be taken or acquired for public purposes under any law unless the law provides for the compensation of the property so taken. As Part III of the Constitution containing Fundamental Rights does not apply to the State, the case law arising out of the interpretation of that article is not germane to our purpose. The learned counsel for the appellants has failed to cite before us any authority in which a law made by a sovereign authority such as the British Parliament has been held to be open to judicial review.

On the other hand the learned Acting Advocate General has cited before us — State v. Basdeo, AIR 1951 All. 44 (G) and — A. K. Gopalan v. State of Madras, AIR 1950 S. C. 27 (H). In — Tan Bug Taim v. Collector of Bombay, A. I. R. 1946 Bom 216 at page 233 (I) the following observations have been made:

“The Imperial Parliament has got the power to deprive a subject of his liberty of person and also of his rights of property in any manner whatever without assigning any reason whatsoever or without making any compensation for the same.”

‘A. I. R. 1951 All. 44 (G)’ quotes with approval the following passage from Dicey’s Law of the Constitution Ed. 9, page 39:

“The principle of Parliamentary sovereignty means neither more nor less than this, namely, that Parliament thus defined has, under the English Constitution, the right to make or unmake any law whatever; and further, that no person or body is recognized by the Law of England as having a right to override or set aside the legislation of Parliament.”

and after further discussion the ruling concludes thus

“Unless the Court can point its finger to a particular provision of Constitution Act which is violated by the Legislature through the enactment, it cannot rule out the enactment as ultra vires.”

In — ‘AIR 1950 S. C. 27 (H), Kania C. J. and Mahajan J. laid down:

“Courts are not at liberty to declare an Act void because in their opinion it is opposed to a spirit supposed to pervade the Constitution but not expressed in words. Where the fundamental law has not limited, either in terms or by necessary implication, the general powers conferred upon the Legislature, Courts cannot declare a limitation under the notion of having discovered something in the spirit of the Constitution which is not even mentioned in the instrument. It is difficult upon any general principles to limit the omnipotence of the sovereign Legislative power by judicial interposition except so far as the express words of a written Constitution give that authority.”

We have seen that there is nothing whatsoever in the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996, which limits the legislative power of the Ruler or the Yuvaraj within the residuary sovereignty of the State; Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996, did not lay down any Fundamental Rights which could not be abridged or taken away by the sovereign Legislature, i. e. the Ruler or the Yuvaraj and his powers of legislation as indicated above in paragraphs 3 and 4 of this judgment are as wide and as plenary as those of the British Parliament and they cannot form the subject-matter of Judicial review, nor can they be impugned on any such ground as is urged by the learned counsel for the appellants:

(8) With regard to the last point urged on behalf of the appellants, it is argued that even if the Act is intra vires, certain provision in the Act, namely, Sections 4 (4), 5 (5), 20, 26 and 35 are void as they authorise delegated legislation. The learned Acting Advocate General has brought it to our notice that this point was neither raised in the plaint nor in the arguments before the trial Court. This is admitted by the counsel for the appellants but he urges that the point is raised in paragraph 12 of the memorandum of appeal though reference to the particular sections of the Act has not been made therein. Counsel for the appellants attacks these provisions because of the principle of ‘delegatus non potest delegare’ on the ground that the Yuvaraj was only a delegate of His Highness. This aspect of the question has been exhaustively dealt with in para. 4 above and it has been held that the Yuvaraj was not the delegate of His Highness and that he had as full and as plenary powers as His Highness himself and, therefore, he could make any law in the State and also delegate his powers of legislation to any person or body whom he thought fit to do so. Even then reliance is sought to be placed on some of the observations made by some of the Judge of the Supreme Court in — ‘A. I. R. 1951 S. C. 332’ corresponding to — ‘1951 S. C. R. 747 (A)’. The general effect of the Supreme Court ruling is that in the view of their Lordships the doctrine of separation of powers was not rigidly imported into the Constitution of India and the maxim ‘delegatus non potest delegare’ was not applicable inasmuch as the Legislatures of the Union and of the States were not delegates of any authority but were sovereign legislative bodies, subject, of course, to the limitations imposed by the Constitution. The majority of the Supreme Court also held that though delegation of the powers of legislation as to matters of detail was a necessity under modern conditions and was permissible, the intention of the Constitution was that the legislative function must be exercised by the legislative authority itself and there could be no delegation of legislative authority to the extent of abdicating its functions and the outside agency to whom delegation was made could not become a parallel legislature. This majority view is mainly based on the principle that the Constitution has made elaborate provisions as to how and by whom the legislative power was to be exercised and such power should be exercised accordingly. If we examined the delegations made in most of the provisions of the Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act, we shall see that these relate to matters of detail permissible even under the Supreme Court ruling and do not part with essential legislative functions, namely, legislative policy and its formulation as a rule of conduct. But after a careful consideration of the relevant material I feel that these restrictions which according to their Lordships of the Supreme Court are implicit in the Constitution of India do not apply to the Ruler of the Jammu and Kashmir State who enjoyed full residuary sovereignty regarding which a good deal of case Law has been quoted in paragraph 4 of this judgment.

In the case of a Ruler of an Indian State there is plenty of authority including the observations of the Late Chief Justice of the Supreme Court in the very case to which reference has been made in this paragraph for the proposition that he had an absolute power to do anything he pleased within his residuary field of legislation. Such a Ruler could either legislate himself or nominate some one else who could exercise all his powers and make all his decision (Vide para 3 (b) above). He could even efface himself altogether if he chose to do so. In the light of these observations it is hardly necessary to go into the details of the provisions of the Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act which have been impugned on this ground. It may, however, be pointed out that the delegation covered by Sections 4 (4), 5 (5), 20 and 35 is made to subordinate authorities and relates to matters of detail which would be even covered by the majority view of the Supreme Court in—'AIR 1951 S. C. 332 (A)'. In any case it is fully covered by—'4 Cal 172 (P. C.) (C)', and other authorities mentioned in paragraph 4 of this judgment. With regard to Section 35 under which the Government could by notification further delegate its functions or powers to the Revenue Minister or any other officer of the Government to be specified in such notification, reference may be made to—'George Walkem Shannon v. Lower Main Land Dairy Products Board', A. I. R. 1939 P. C. 36 (J). Such delegation is perfectly valid and is covered by the following observation of their Lordships of the 'Privy Council at page 39':

"The third objection is that it is not within the powers of the Provincial Legislature to delegate so called legislative powers to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, or to give him powers of further delegation. This objection appears to their Lordships subversive of the rights which the Provincial Legislature enjoys while dealing with matters falling within the classes of subjects in relation to which the Constitution has granted legislative powers. Within its appointed sphere the Provincial Legislature is as supreme as any other Parliament, and it is unnecessary to try to enumerate the innumerable occasions in which Legislatures both Provincial Dominion and Imperial have entrusted various persons and bodies with similar powers to those contained in this Act."

If such delegation of powers was permissible to a Provincial Legislature which was a creation of an Imperial Act of the sovereign authority, namely, the British Parliament, the Ruler (or his replica, Yuvaraj) of a State like Jammu and Kashmir which retained all its residuary sovereignty in full, could make such delegation. Section 26, however, stands on a slightly different footing. Here the question of award of compensation has been left to be settled by the Constituent Assembly which could not be regarded as a subordinate authority. In paragraphs 3 (d) and 5 above it has been indicated that the Constituent Assembly to be set up in the State was to have plenary powers which was to frame a Constitution for the State and define the sphere of the Union jurisdiction in the State. We have seen that Yuvaraj being a sovereign authority like the British Parliament could efface himself and could also obviously set up a parallel legislature for a particular purpose. There was nothing wrong in leaving the decision of the question of payment of compensation to the expropriated landlords to a body which was to be convened for the purpose of drawing up the Constitution of the State.

(9) For the foregoing reasons the judgments and the decree of the trial Courts in the two cases are affirmed and the appeals are dismissed. The parties are, however, left to bear their own costs.

(10) WAZIR C. J.: These are two connected appeals and arise out of two suits, one instituted in the High Court in its original jurisdiction and the other before the District Judge, Srinagar, for declaration that the Jammu and Kashmir Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act of 2007 is ultra vires of the powers of Shree Yuvaraj and does not affect the ownership rights of the plaintiffs over the lands in dispute. The single Judge of this Court in the case of Magher Singh plaintiff held that the impugned Act was intra vires of Shree Yuvaraj and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The same view was taken in another case of Badri Nath Munshi and other plaintiffs by the District Judge and their suit was also dismissed. The plaintiffs in both these cases have filed separate appeals against the decrees of the trial Courts. As the points involved in these appeals are similar we heard these appeals together and this judgment shall dispose of both these appeals.

(11) The sole question for determination is whether or not the Jammu and Kashmir Big Landed Estates (Abolition) Act of 2007 is ultra vires of Shree Yuvaraj who passed that Act, in exercise of the powers vested in him under section 5 of the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996.

(12) It is contended on behalf of the appellants that His Highness the Maharaja Bahadur Hari Singhji was not an omnipotent sovereign but was a subordinate sovereign. His sovereignty, if any, was lost after the State's accession to India and he or his representative could not enact any Law under Section 5 of the Constitution Act and the impugned Act was, therefore, ultra vires of the powers of Shree Yuvaraj. This contention is based on a misconception of the true constitutional position of His Highness. An outstanding feature of our Constitution before Act No: 17 of 2008 was the transcendent supremacy of the Maharaja. He was the fountain of all powers, executive, legislative and judicial. He possessed all the essential attributes of absolute sovereignty and his position could well be compared to that of the British Parliament. He could make or unmake any law as he pleased and no person or body was recognised by law in the State as having any right to override or supersede any piece of legislation enacted by him. On account of his absolute supremacy no question of any constitutional invalidity of his enactments could be raised in any Court of law. A reference to Section 7 of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, will further make it clear that even the external sovereignty of His Highness reverted to him after the lapse of the paramountcy of the British Crown. His Highness thus became an omnipotent sovereign after the new Dominions (of India and Pakistan) came into existence.

(13) The contention of the learned counsel that His Highness lost his sovereignty after the State's accession to India has equally no force and cannot be accepted. A close study of Section 6, Government of India Act, 1935, (as adapted by the Indian Provisional Constitution Order, 1947) will reveal that the accession of Indian States which was made possible by Section 2 (4), Indian Independence Act, 1947, was subject always to the terms of the respective Instruments of Accession and the functions that vested in the Governor General, the Federal Legislature and the Federal Court under the said Government of India Act were to be exercised by them subject to the terms of the said Instruments of Accession. The scheme of the section shows that a Ruler of a State while becoming a member of the federation could limit the subjects within which powers were to be exercised by the federal bodies and could also impose such conditions and limitation which he desired. In Clause 8 of Instrument of Accession executed by His Highness and accepted by the Governor-General of India it has been specially provided that 'nothing in this Instrument affects the continuance of my sovereignty in and over the State, or, save as provided by or under this Instrument, the exercise of any powers, authority and right now enjoyed by me as Ruler of this State or the validity of any law at present in force in this state'.

This position has also been recognised both in Article 370 of the Constitution of India and the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order 1950. Article 370 of the Constitution does not affect the sovereignty of His Highness except to the extent to which he has himself surrendered a portion of the Sovereignty. It is, therefore clear that in spite of the State's accession to India His Highness retained his internal sovereignty & was free to do anything he liked within the sphere which was not covered by the ceded subjects. In this I am supported by a Full Bench ruling of the Pepsu High Court reported as — 'A. I. R. 1953 Pepsu 1 (F. B.) (B)', in which it has been held that a State by ceding certain powers with regard to external affairs to another state does not cease to be sovereign if its powers with regard to internal matters remain unrestricted.

(14) It has been argued on behalf of the appellants that Shree Yuvaraj could not legislate under Section 5 of the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996 inasmuch as His Highness did not & could not part with his inherent powers. His argument is that inherent powers are vested in His Highness alone due to his being a sovereign of the State and he could not part with those powers in favour of another person.

(15) It has been pointed out above that His Highness was an omnipotent sovereign and his sovereignty was not limited except in regard to those subjects which he had ceded. A perusal of Sections 4, 5 and 72, Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, 1996, as they stood before Act No: 17 of 2008 was passed, will make it clear that His Highness was supreme authority in the State and there was no limitation on his powers. His position was similar to that of the British Parliament. Section 4 of the Constitution Act provides that 'the territories for the time being vested in His Highness are governed by and in the name of His Highness, and all rights, authority and jurisdiction which appertain or are incidental to the government of such territories are exercisable by His Highness, except in so far as may be otherwise provided by or under this Act, or as may be otherwise directed by His Highness.' From this it is abundantly clear that His Highness could direct that the rights, authority and jurisdiction which appertain or are incidental to the Government of the territories of the State may be exercised by some one else as his regent. The expression 'all rights, authority and jurisdiction which appertain or are incidental to the Government' is wide enough to cover the legislative, executive and judicial functions of the Government. It may be pointed out here that His Highness by Proclamation of 7th Har 2006 which corresponds to 20-6-

1949, expressly ordained Shree Yuvaraj to carry on the Government of the State and entrusted all his powers, rights and prerogatives to the Yuvaraj for that purpose. Shree Yuvaraj was, therefore, fully competent to exercise powers and prerogatives which were exercisable by his Highness himself.

(16) Great stress was laid by the learned counsel for the appellants on the fact that His Highness being himself a delegate of the British Parliament could not further delegate his powers to the Yuvaraj. There appears some confusion in the mind of the learned counsel in regard to the principle 'delegatus non potest delegare'. This principle is not applicable to His Highness as he is not a delegate of the British Parliament but was supreme and enjoyed powers which were not limited by any legislation. His Highness was independent and powerful as British Parliament itself in so far as internal sovereignty of the State was concerned and he could direct anyone to carry out the same functions in respect of the Government as he could himself do. There have been some occasions previously when His Highness entrusted his powers to different persons or bodies for the purpose of carrying on his Government in his absence; for instance on 21-11-1944, when he went abroad in connection with his tour to the various war fronts he appointed a council consisting of three members and entrusted them with full powers to carry on the Government in his absence; (2) on 30-10-1947, when he appointed Sheikh Mohammed Abdulla to function as the Head of the Administration. Instances of such like entrustments of powers and prerogatives by the Crown are to be found in the English History as well. Reference in this connection may be made to Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. VI page 449 and Anson's Law and Custom of Constitution Vol. II part I.

(17) In a recent case reported as 'AIR 1952 J & K 7 (E)', in which it was held that all powers, legislative, executive and judicial in relation to the State and its Govt. have under His Highness' Proclamation devolved upon Shree Yuvaraj. This pronouncement of the Board of Judicial Advisers has set at rest all doubts and controversies on the point whether or not His Highness could entrust his inherent powers to Shree Yuvaraj. In a case which came up before the Supreme Court reported as 'AIR 1951 SC 332 (A)', the late Chief Justice Kania observed at page 337 as under:

"A legislative body which is sovereign like an autocratic ruler has power to do anything. It may, like a Ruler, by an individual decision, direct that a certain person may be put to death or a certain property may be taken over by the State. 'A body of such character may have power to nominate someone who can exercise all its powers & make all its decisions'. This is possible to be done because there is no authority or tribunal which can question the right or power of the authority to do so."

(18) It is, therefore, quite clear that by virtue of the proclamation made on the 7th Har 2006 Shree Yuvaraj became a replica of His Highness possessing rights, powers and prerogatives which were as ample and full as those enjoyed by His Highness himself.

(19) It is further contended by the counsel for the appellants that the impugned Act having been passed by Shree Yuvaraj under S. 5, Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, being abrogated by Art. 385 of the Constitution of India which according to the learned counsel had been wholly adopted by Shree Yuvaraj by his proclamation dated 25-11-1949, is invalid. This contention of the learned counsel is again devoid of all force. The Constitution of India, it will be observed, has got only a limited application to the State of Jammu and Kashmir. The main provision of the said Constitution so far as the State is concerned is Art. 370 which lays down that only such of the provisions of the Constitution of India shall apply to the State of Jammu and Kashmir as the president of India may, in consultation with the State Government, declare to be applicable. Shree Yuvaraj's aforesaid proclamation has to be interpreted in the light of Art. 370.

In para 1 of the proclamation Shree Yuvaraj observes that the Constitution shortly to be adopted by the Constituent Assembly of India shall, in so far as it is applicable to the State of Jammu and Kashmir, govern the Constitutional relationship between this State and the contemplated Union of India and shall be enforced in this State by him in accordance with the tenure of its provisions. In second paragraph he says that 'the provisions of the said Constitution shall, as from the date of its commencement, supersede & abrogate all other constitutional provisions inconsistent therewith which are at present in force in this State.' Reading the two paragraphs together and bearing in mind the rule of harmonious construction it will be obvious that the express provisions of the said Constitution can mean only those provisions which apply to the State and not those which have no application. Moreover a perusal of the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order, 1950 which was promulgated by the President on 26-11-1950 and which is, therefore, subsequent to Shree Yuvaraj's proclamation further makes it clear that the Constitution of India has only a restricted application to the State.

Reference has also been made by the counsel for the appellants to Art. 385 which is not quite germane. An analytical examination of Art. 370 of the Constitution of India and Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order will reveal that Art. 385 does not in terms apply to our State. It is provided in Art. 370 that the provisions of Art. 238 (which in turn makes the provisions of Part 6 of Constitution of India applicable to Part B States) shall not apply in relation to the State of Jammu and Kashmir. When Art. 238 itself is not applicable no Article contained in Part VI is applicable. Thus Art. 168 which provides for the legislatures of the State is also not applicable. The learned counsel for the appellants has argued that impugned Act could not have been passed by the Yuvaraj as legislature of the State was in existence and could be summoned to pass such an Act. There appears to be some confusion in the mind of the learned counsel in regard to this point. As pointed out above Art. 168 is not applicable; so the question of summoning the legislature under the provisions of Constitution of India as contemplated by Art. 385 could not arise. It will further be evident that Sch. 7 has been wholly omitted from applicability and cls. (2) and (3) of Art. 246 also do not apply to our State, i.e., there is no State list or concurrent list so far as our State is concerned. It is not, therefore, clear as to how the body or authority functioning as legislature in our State could exercise the powers or perform its duties when the Constitution of India did not confer any such powers. It appears that by some mistake or oversight Art. 385 has been included in Sch. 2 to the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order, 1950.

(20) Even assuming that Art. 385 is applicable let us see what would be its effect. The term of the Praja Sabha (State Legislative Assembly) had expired long before the Constitution of India came into force. There was no legislative Assembly functioning immediately before the commencement of the Constitution. The only body or authority functioning immediately before the commencement of the Constitution of India was the authority exercising powers of legislation under S. 5, Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act, i.e. Shree Yuvaraj. It bills down to this that Shree Yuvaraj who exercised the powers of legislation under the aforesaid proclamation of His Highness immediately before coming into force of the Constitution of India was to continue to legislate. Further Art. 372 of the Constitution of India provides that laws in force in any part of India will continue to remain in force until repealed by any enactment and it is to be noted that before Act No: 17 of 2008, Section 5 of the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act had not been repealed by any enactment. Thus there being no repugnance between our Constitution Act of 1996 and the Constitution of India, the former provision stood intact and Shree Yuvaraj continued to enjoy full powers of legislation.

(21) It is further contended that the impugned Act is invalid because it is repugnant to the Indian Land Acquisition Act and Jammu and Kashmir Land Acquisition Act. Reliance in this behalf is placed on Art. 254 of the Constitution of India which reads as under:

- (1) If any provision of a Law made by the Legislature of a State is repugnant to any provision of a Law made by Parliament which Parliament is competent to enact, or to any provision of an existing law with respect to one of the matters enumerated in the Concurrent List, then, subject to the provisions of clause (2) the Law made by Parliament, whether passed before or after the law made by the Legislature of such State, or as the case may be the existing law, shall prevail and the law made by the Legislature of the State, shall to the extent of repugnancy, be void.
- (2) Where a law made by the Legislature of a State specified in Part A or Part B of the First Schedule with respect of the matters enumerated in the Concurrent List contains any provision repugnant to the provisions of an earlier Law made by Parliament or an existing Law with respect to that matter, then, the law so made by the Legislature of such State, shall if it has been reserved for the consideration of the President and has received his assent, prevail in that State:

Provided that nothing in this clause shall prevent Parliament from enacting at any time any law with respect to the same matter including a law adding to, amending, varying or repealing the law so made by the Legislature of the State.

The argument with respect to repugnancy of the impugned Act to the Indian Land Acquisition Act is based on Article 254 Part (1). Article 254 (1) and (2) when examined in conjunction with other provisions of the Constitution of India will be found to have no real application to our State. The first sine qua non for the applicability of this Article is the competency of the Indian Parliament to enact a law to which the impugned Act is said to be repugnant, and secondly there must be a concurrent list so far as our State is concerned. The Indian Parliament has not got the same powers of legislation in relation to the State as it has got with regard to other Part B

States. The question of repugnancy can only arise if the law is repugnant to some other law which the Parliament is competent to enact, i. e., any law dealing with a matter contained in the First Schedule to the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order, 1950. The Indian Land Acquisition Act, being a Law with respect to a matter that is not enumerated in the said Schedule and there being no Concurrent List, the impugned Act is not hit by Article 254 (1).

(22) The question of repugnancy of the impugned Act to the State Land Acquisition Act cannot also be raised. Under Article 254 (2) it is necessary that the impugned Act should be with respect to some provision of an existing law which also relates to one of the matters specified in the Concurrent List. As already seen Schedule 7 to the Constitution of India and Article 246 (2) & (3) do not apply to our State. There being no Concurrent List so far as our State is concerned, application of Art. 254 (2) can have no meaning and reference to this provision is wholly irrelevant.

(23) It has been argued that the impugned Act is void because it aims at extinguishing the rights of ownership in private property without providing for compensation. It is contended that no property can be acquired without compensation and no law could be enacted which is repugnant to the fundamental rights. It may be pointed out here that Part III of the Constitution wherein are placed the various fundamental rights has not been made applicable to our State. It follows, therefore, as a corollary that fundamental rights of the people of the State have not been recognised so far. As Part III of the Indian Constitution is not applicable to the State we have to see if there is any provision in our Constitution which corresponds to Article 13 of the Constitution of India or whether there was any other check on our erstwhile Ruler's power of legislation in regard to the private property. We have already examined the power of the Ruler of the State under the Constitution obtaining in the State. His Highness was omnipotent sovereign and there was no law which he could not make or alter. So there was no restriction on the powers of the Ruler to make laws in respect of the private property of his subjects.

Although it may be very hard on the subjects not to possess fundamental rights and to be deprived of the private property without compensation under a law enacted by a competent authority yet the Courts cannot afford any relief to the subjects in case they find that the law, whether good or bad, is made by a competent authority and the executive has strictly acted according to that law. The function of the Court is to interpret the law as it is and not to suggest what the law ought to be. Since the fundamental rights have not been recognised in our State either in the form of moral precepts or in the form of guarantee enforceable in law, the Courts in the State cannot declare any law as unconstitutional on the ground of contravention of any supposed fundamental or natural right. In support of this principle reliance may be placed on the following authorities: — 'A. I. R. 1950 S. C. 27 (H)', and AIR 1951 All. 44 (G)', wherein it has been held that an Act cannot be declared void if it is merely supposed to be against the spirit pervading the constitution. The effect of this pronouncement is that we must lay our hand on some specific provision of the Constitution which renders the enactment as void.

(24) The learned counsel for the appellants has relied upon — 'A. I. R. 1952 S. C. 252 at page 271

(F)', wherein it has been laid down that the obligation for payment of just compensation is a necessary incident of the power of compulsory acquisition of property, both under the doctrine of the English Common Law as well as under the continental doctrine of eminent domain, subsequently adopted in America. But this authority is not helpful to the appellants inasmuch as it is based on particular words of Article 31 Clause (2) of the Indian Constitution.

(25) Lastly it has been argued that certain provisions of the impugned Act such as Section 26 are delegated piece of legislation which Shree Yuvaraj could not enact as a delegate of His Highness. Section 26 of the impugned Act is as under:

"There shall, until the Constituent Assembly of the State settles the question of Compensation with respect to the land from which expropriation has taken place under this Act, be paid by the Government to every proprietor who has been expropriated from any land under the provisions of this Act, an annuity in the following manner, namely:

- (a) for the first year after expropriation an amount equal to 3/4th of the land revenue assessed on the land from which expropriation has taken place,
- (b) for the 2nd year 2/3rd of such land revenue; and
- (c) for the 3rd and subsequent years 1/2 of such land revenue.

Provided that the amount so payable shall not in any case exceed a sum of Rs. 3,000 per annum:

Provided further that no such amount shall be payable in respect of any area held or appropriated by the proprietor from lands recorded as Shamilat-Deh.

(26) A perusal of Section 26 makes it clear that the legislature has not denied compensation but has referred its settlement to the Constituent Assembly. The first question is whether Shree Yuvaraj was a delegate of His Highness and the next question is whether he could delegate the power to the Constituent Assembly to settle the question of compensation. We have noticed above that Shree Yuvaraj is not a delegate of His Highness but was a replica of His Highness enjoying powers which in their nature, scope and amplitude coincide with those of His Highness. Shree Yuvaraj thus did not act as an agent or delegate of His Highness and the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants is without force. Even with respect to the Indian Legislature which derived its power of Legislation from the British Parliament it has been held that while enacting within the spheres of its powers it does not act as a delegate. Reference in this connection may be made to '4 Cal 172 at page 180 (P. C.) (C)', — 'Madho Saran Singh v. Emperor', A. I. R. 1943 All. 379 (F. B.) (K) and — 'United Provinces v. Mt. Atiqa Begum', A. I. R. 1941 F. C. 16 at page 24 (L). In — 'AIR 1941 All 44 (G) and — 'Veera-bhadrappa In re', A. I. R. 1950 Mad 243 (M) it has been held that the principle of delegata potestas non potest delegare is inapplicable to the Indian Legislature. If this principle is not applicable to the Indian Legislature which derived its power from the British Parliament much less could it be applicable to His Highness or his replica Shree Yuvaraj. The Ruler was fully competent to frame any law in any fashion he liked through any agency he liked. His position in this respect was that of British Parliament. Reference in this behalf may be made to a Privy Council ruling reported as — 'A. I. R. 1939 P. C. 36 (J)', in which it has been held that within its appointed sphere the provincial Legislature is as supreme as any other Parliament. It is within the power of the Provincial Legislature to delegate legislative powers to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, or to give him powers of further delegation.

(27) We have also been referred by the counsel for the appellants to an authority reported as — 'AIR 1951 S. C. 332 (A)', in support of the contention that legislative powers in regard to compensation could not have been delegated by Shree Yuvaraj to Constituent Assembly but a reference to Para 39 of this ruling will show that it is based on principle of separation of powers and implied prohibition against delegation of legislative functions contained in Articles 245 and 357 of the Constitution of India. While there is an implied prohibition against delegation of legislative function in India we have in our State Constitution neither any affirmative limitation nor any negative prohibition against such delegation. Shree Yuvaraj, therefore, was fully competent to leave the question of determination of the compensation to the Constituent Assembly.

(28) For the reasons given above it is clear that the impugned Act is not ultra vires of the powers of Shree Yuvaraj nor is it open to review by our Courts. The Courts below have rightly dismissed the suits filed by the plaintiffs and these appeals are, therefore, dismissed. The parties are left to bear their own costs in this Court.

KILAM J.: This appeal pertains to Kishtwar tehsil and arises out of the following facts:

(2) One Ahmad Sheikh died in the year 1994 leaving behind him a son by name, Wali Sheikh, and a daughter, by name, Safia. Safia claimed that she was a resident daughter (Khana Nashin). After the death of Ahmad Sheikh, the landed property left by him remained unmutated in the name of anybody till the year 2002. We have it in evidence that after all mutation was effected in the year 2002 in the name of Wali Sheikh, and the claims of Safia were not taken notice of by the revenue authorities. It so happened that in the year 2004 Wali Sheikh also died. After his death, mutation was effected in the name of his two daughters and in the name of Safia, who as already stated, was ignored at the time of the previous mutation effected on the death of Ahmad Sheikh, her father. It is found by both the Courts below that Safia came into possession of the property left originally by Ahmad Sheikh, somewhere in the year 2005. In Jeth 2005, Safia brought a suit seeking a declaration to the effect that she was a Khana Nashin daughter of Ahmad Sheikh, & as such she had acquired the status of a son and was entitled to share half and half with Wali Sheikh, her brother, the property that was left by Ahmad Sheikh. She also had averred in her plaint that according to custom a Khana Nashin daughter acquired the status of a son & was entitled to succeed equally with her brother. The trial Court of Munsiff Kishtwar found that Safia was not a Khana Nashin daughter, nor was the custom of making a Khana Nashin daughter in presence of male heirs of the last owner proved in the case. But the trial court held that Safia was a Muslim and as such was governed by Mohammedan Law, and even though she had not been able to prove herself as a Khana Nashin daughter, she could not be deprived of her rights which vested in her as a Muslim according to Mohammedan Law. It therefore, passed a decree to the extent of 1/3rd share (to which a daughter is entitled according to Mohammedan Law) in favour of Safia in the property left by Ahmad Sheikh. On appeal, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge Jammu arrived at the conclusion that since Safia had based her suit upon custom which she had failed to establish, therefore her suit deserved dismissal. He therefore, ordered dismissal of the plaintiff's suit. He has based his finding upon a passage which occurs in a judgment of this court reported as — 'Mst. Zebi v. Reeha Mir', 4 J and K LR 254 (A) which runs as follows:

"It was further contended on behalf of the appellant that even if she were not a Khana Nashin daughter she would be entitled to a share under the Mohammedan Law. It was common case of the parties that succession was governed by custom under which a Khana Nashin daughter succeeded to the entire property. Succession could be governed either by a custom or by personal law because there cannot be two different and inconsistent rules of succession or inheritance. It was admitted by the parties that a Khana Nashin daughter would succeed to the entire property. The plaintiff is not a Khana Nashin daughter and according to the custom stated above she would not inherit the property at all."

(3) We wish that the learned Senior Sub-judge had read the next following paragraph occurring in the same judgment. This paragraph runs as follows:

"It appears that some confusion exists as to whether a person who sets up a custom relating to succession can inherit under the Mohammedan Law. It is only when a custom is set up by a plaintiff which is not admitted by defendant and the plaintiff fails to prove the existence of the custom that the plaintiff would be entitled to succeed under the Mohammedan Law .....

(4) In this case the custom alleged by Safia was denied by the opposite party and the trial court itself came to the conclusion that no custom of the variety pleaded by Safia was proved. Therefore according to the very judgment upon which reliance has been placed by the learned Senior Sub-judge, there is no reason as to why Safia should not be allowed to fall back upon the provisions of ..... Mohammedan Law.

(5) It may be pointed out here that the custom of making a resident daughter is prevalent generally in Kashmir province. In Kashmir province the law of succession among agriculturist classes has been greatly modified by custom. According to the custom prevalent generally in Kashmir province "Daughters inherit only when they reside with their husbands in their father's house and are made Dukhtar Khana Nashin, otherwise not (Vide Code of Tribal Customs by Sant Ram Dogra). This custom has been recognized by courts, so far as Kashmir province is concerned all along. If in Kashmir province a daughter failed to prove herself that she was a resident daughter, she would fail to get any share in the property left by her father, since she would succeed only if she were made a Khana Nashin daughter according to the custom just referred to. But as already stated, no such custom has been proved to exist in Kishtwar as obtains in Kashmir whereby daughters are excluded from inheritance unless they are made Khana Nashin daughters. Nor has one been pleaded, much less proved in the present case. At the most that can be said, so far as the present case is concerned, is that Safia tried to establish that she had acquired by custom a better status of Khana Nashin daughter than that of an ordinary daughter as governed by Mohammedan Law. But though she has failed to prove her better status, i.e., failed to prove that she was a Khana Nashin daughter and equally failed to prove that there was a custom which would make it possible for a daughter to become a Khana Nashin daughter in the presence of a male issue of the last owner yet we are of the opinion that there is no reason as to why and how she could be deprived of her rights which accrued to her by virtue of her original status, i.e., that of a daughter governed by Mohammedan Law. There is ample authority for this proposition, and reference may in this connection be made to —'Lassi Ganai v. Reshi Mir', 8 J & K LR 117 (B) in which it has been held that "if a daughter failed to establish a custom under which she claimed as a Dukhtar Khana Nashin nominated by her mother, she is entitled to fall back upon Mohammedan Law and claim a share to which that law entitles her unless, of course it is proved that by custom she is excluded by some other heir and that Mohammedan Law has been superseded by such custom to that extent."

(6) Taking all this into consideration, we hold that since the custom of making a Khana Nashin daughter in the presence of a male successor has not been established in the present case, the plaintiff is fully entitled to fall back upon Mohammedan Law.

(7) There is yet another ground on which the suit of the plaintiff has been ordered to be dismissed by the first appellate court. The lower appellate court has held that the suit is time barred. In the opinion of the lower appellate court the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff on 16th Chet 1993 which according to the lower appellate court is the date and the year in which Ahmad Sheikh, father of Safia, died. We may state here that Ahmed Sheikh has not died on 16th Chet 1993. 16th Chet 1993 is the date and year when Safia was married. In fact Ahmad Sheikh has died somewhere at the close of Chet 1994. This would show the slipshod manner in which the courts below go through the record of cases, with the result that glaring mistakes are committed with telling effects.

(8) Now we have already seen that from 1994 no mutation of the property left by Ahmad Sheikh was effected till the year 2002. It was in the year 2002 when Safia was excluded from mutation being effected in her name that a cloud appears to have been cast on her title, though it may not be lost sight of that Safia says that she had no notice of that mutation and the mutation record also does not show that Safia was present on spot. In the year 2005 another mutation was made by the revenue authorities and this time after the death of Wali Sheikh which took place in the year 2004. In this mutation Safia was also entered in the revenue records as one entitled to share the property with the daughters of Wali Sheikh. Again it is in evidence that Safia came into possession of the land in the year 2005. Under these circumstances the suit cannot be in any way barred by time. The case of Safia is that her title was denied by the heirs of Wali Sheikh in Baisakh 2006. So it is clear that according to the averment made by Safia the cause of action would arise in the month of Baisakh 2006. At its worst the cause of action would have arisen for Safia to bring a suit for declaration in the year 2002 when mutation was effected in the name of Wali Sheikh and Safia was excluded from inheritance. Even then the present suit is within six years which is the period of limitation prescribed for bringing a suit for declaration. The lower appellate court was, clearly wrong in holding that Safia's rights to the property had got extinguished since she was out of possession for more than the statutory period prescribed for bringing a suit for possession of immovable property, i.e., 12 years. Safia's father died in Chet 1994 and Safia came into possession of the property in Rabi 2005, that is to say, within a period of 11 years which is much less than the statutory period for which it is necessary to be out of possession, so as to bring about extinction of the right to seek possession. We, therefore, hold that Safia's suit is within time.

(9) The result of all this is that Safia is entitled to succeed to the property left by Ahmad Sheikh as a daughter entitled to get a share according to Mohammedan Law. We, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court. This appeal is accepted with costs.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 103 — Criminal trial — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367).

Though the evidence, both for the prosecution and for the defence, has, at some stage of the case, to be weighed, in criminal cases the evidence has not to be weighed in golden scales, and there must be great preponderance of weight on the side of the prosecution before the accused can be found guilty. The fact that the witness was declared hostile by the Court at the request of the prosecuting counsel and he was allowed to cross-examine the witness furnishes no justification for rejecting en-block the evidence of the witness. His evidence has to be read and considered as a whole with a view to find out whether any weight should be attached to the same. (Para 16)

IQBAL AHMED MEMBER: While fully alive to the salutary rule that enjoins respect for the estimate of oral evidence made by the trial Judge and, in particular, to concurrent findings on questions of fact recorded by the Courts below, the Board, in the present case, for reasons that will presently appear, is unable to endorse the finding about the guilt of Pt. Badri Nath Jalali recorded by the Courts below and to affirm his conviction.

(2) In or about Bhadon 2005 (August 1948) Pt. Bari Nath Jalali hereinafter referred to as the appellant, was temporary Tehsildar at Uri. Till December 1947, the area round about Uri was in possession of raiders, but they were dispossessed from the same and civil administration was established in or about the beginning of 1948. The exigencies of the situation, however, dictated the desirability of military control over the area for some time to come and, accordingly, the civil administration had, for the time being to function in collaboration with the military authorities.

(3) It is common ground that one Ghulam Rasul, who was Zaildar of Islamabad and surrounding villages, had gone over to Pakistan side and this fact, after the establishment of civil administration, necessitated the appointment of another Zaildar, the more so as the revenue for the S. year 2004 (1947) was in arrears. On 15th Bhadon 2005 (30-8-1948) some Zemindars of Islamabad and neighbouring villages presented a petition Ex. P. A. to the appelt. praying that one Mutwali Mir (PW 1) be appointed Zaildar of the illaqa in place of Gulam Rasul. On the same date, in pursuance of the order of the appellant, Dina Nath Patwari (P. W. 2) recorded the statement of a number of Zemindars who stated that

"Mutwali Mir has shown sympathy towards us and we request that it will meet the ends of justice if Mutwali Mir is appointed Zaildar of our illaqa".

It appears from the evidence of Dina Nath that the Chief Administrator, Pir Mohd Maqbul (P. W. 17) was present when the application just referred to was presented and when the joint statement of Zemindars was recorded by Dina Nath. Dina Nath further stated that "the Administrator ordered verbally that since he (Mutwali Mir) had done good work in military he may be appointed as Zaildar." At that time he passed the order verbally. It is also a matter of admission that after the departure of Gulam Rasul, Mutwali Mir was playing the role of Zaildar and was, to all intents and purposes, a de facto Zaildar.

(4) The application Ex.-P. A. was disposed of by the appellant on 7th Assuj 2005 (22-9-1948) by his order Ex. P. B. in which after noting that

"Mutwali Mir has rendered great help to the Military and had worked with great enthusiasm at the time of Qabali raids and the Zamindars too gave a statement on their part in favour of this man's appointment as Zaildar," he went on to observe that "under the present emergency conditions this man is fit and suitable of Zaildarship." He, however, added in the order that

"since this illaqa is under military operation at this time, therefore, at this time the appointment of Zaildar cannot be made according to the rules ..... therefore he is appointed Zaildar for the time being for conducting the work and afterwards necessary action under rules will be taken."

In view of the reasons just set out the appellant ordered that, subject to confirmation by the Chief Administrator (Pir Mohd Maqbul), "Mutwali Mir is appointed Zaildar of the aforesaid villages for the time being as an emergency measure."

(5) A period of about three weeks elapsed between the date of application Ex. P. A. and the passing of order Ex. P. B. and the case for the prosecution is that the appelt. deferred passing order on the application Ex. P. A. till his demand for a canister of Ghee and payment of Rs. 25/- as illegal gratification was complied with by Mutwali Mir. Indeed it is alleged that on some date between 28-31st Bhadon S. 2005 (12 to 15 Sept. 1948) a canister of Ghee was taken by Mutwali Mir and eventually delivered to the appellant, and further a sum of Rs. 25/- was also paid the very next day by Mutwali Mir to the appellant.

(6) The evidence shows that in the meantime information had reached the Chief Administrator that the appellant had received a sum of Rs. 50/- from Atta Mohd Numberdar (P. W. 7) as illegal gratification for recommending the remission of the Government revenue for the instalment of Magh 2004 and accordingly, the Chief Administrator passing order Ex. (P. W. 6) on 25-9-1948, directing that Atta Mohd be summoned "for the sake of an enquiry so that proper proceedings may be taken after an enquiry from him." Within four days of the last mentioned order the Chief Administrator on 29-9-1948, passed orders Ex. P. W. 8 in which, after pointing out that "there is sufficient proof to believe that you have accepted Rs. 20/- and Rs. 30/- as illegal gratification from one Atta Mohd ..... to do away with the revenue of Kharif 2004", he called upon the appellant to submit his explanation within two days "to complete the case and to proceed further". The appellant forthwith submitted his explanation Ex. P. W. 9, which apparently was not acceptable to the Chief Administrator, with the result that the latter passed an order on 15-10-1948 suspending the appellant (vide statement of Gulam Nabi P. W. 16 on p. 47).

(7) After the suspension of the appellant, and the lapse of more than a month after the order for appointment of Mutwali Mir as Zaildar was passed, Mutwali Mir on 26-10-1948 submitted a petition Ex. P. C. to the Chief Administrator that "the ex-Tehsildar has taken one tin of Ghee and Rs. 25/- in cash from me in connection with my appointment as Zaildar. There is evidence existing and proceeding may be taken."

Thereafter the Governor of Kashmir, on 19-1-1949, called upon the appellant (vide Ex. P. W. 1) to submit his explanation with respect to 3 charges viz. (1) about the receipt of Rs. 50/- from Atta Mohd, (2) the receipt of one tin of Ghee and Rs. 25/- as bribe from Mutwali Mir and about a 3rd charge which is not material for our present purposes. The appellant thereupon submitted his explanation (Ex. P. W. 2) to the Governor on 24-1-1949. The explanation did not satisfy the Governor and, accordingly, he forwarded the case to the Government for necessary action. Thereafter the Anti-Corruption Department, having secured the necessary sanction for prosecution of the appellant, launched the prosecution which has culminated in the present appeal.

(8) Before the trial Magistrate the appellant was called upon to stand his trial for acceptance of illegal gratification on three counts viz. (1) acceptance of one tin of Ghee and Rs. 25/- from Mutwali Mir in consideration of recommending him for Zaildarship, (2) acceptance of Rs. 50/- as illegal gratification from Atta Mohd. for recommending postponement or remission of land revenue and (3) that he had accepted Rs. 47/- by way of bribe from Jumma Shah, Malik Mohd. etc. etc.

(9) The appellant was discharged with respect to 3rd charge but was convicted by the Magistrate with respect to first and second charges. On appeal, the learned Sessions Judge acquitted the appellant with respect to the second charge but maintained his conviction with respect to the first. On an application in revision by the appellant, the High Court upheld the conviction of the appellant with respect to the first charge above referred to. The appellant then was granted special leave to appeal to His Highness.

(10) It would thus appear that the evidence in the case relating to the first charge was, in the opinion of the learned Judges of the three Courts below, sufficient to bring that charge home to the appellant, and this fact, standing by itself, counsels great caution in interference with the finding recorded by those Courts. A perusal of the judgments of the Courts below, however, reveals that those Courts seriously misdirected themselves in one respect. Those Courts approached the consideration of the case from a point of view which was appropriate for adjudication of a civil matter, but wholly inapplicable to a case in which a public servant was charged with the offence of accepting illegal gratifications. What the Courts below virtually did was to compare the probability or otherwise of the respective stories for the prosecution and for the defence, and holding that the story for the prosecution was more probable and convincing, recorded the order of conviction. In other words the Courts below put the evidence for the prosecution in one scale and the evidence for the defence in another and, after weighing the same, held that the scale containing the prosecution evidence was heavier and, accordingly, convicted the appellant. It is hardly necessary to observe that in criminal cases, unlike civil cases, the evidence has not to be weighed in this manner. In a criminal trial, an accused starts with presumption of innocence in his favour, and this presumption holds the field till the prosecution succeeds in establishing the guilt of the accused beyond all reasonable doubt. Unlike civil cases, the burden that rests on the prosecution in criminal cases does not shift from time to time, howsoever flimsy or unreliable the evidence for the defence may be.

The prosecution is not relieved of the burden of satisfying the judicial conscience of the Court from the evidence led by it about the guilt of the accused. In short, in criminal trials, in which the accused does not invoke to his aid any of the exceptions embodied in a criminal Statute in justification of the act of commission or omission with respect to which he is charged, the Court is bound to keep the evidence for the prosecution and for the defence in two water-tight compartments, and has first to consider whether or not the guilt of the accused has been established beyond all reasonable doubt by the prosecution evidence. If the answer to the question, just referred to, is in the negative, there is an end of the matter. If, however, the Court is of the opinion that the prosecution discharged the onus that rested upon its shoulders, it has then to turn to the defence evidence in order to find out whether that evidence does or does not rebut the prosecution evidence and either negatives the guilt of the accused or makes his guilt doubtful. It is true that, in one sense, the evidence, both for the prosecution and for the defence, has, at some stage of the case, to be weighed, but it is well known that in criminal cases the evidence has not to be weighed in golden scales, and there must be great preponderance of weight on the side of the prosecution before the accused can be found guilty.

(11) It may be, and possibly is a fact, that the evidence in the case disclosed facts that justified strong suspicions against the appellant, but this could be no justification for his conviction unless and until the prosecution succeeded in excluding every reasonable possibility of the appellant's innocence. In this connection it is well to bear in mind the following observations of the Federal Court in H. T. Huntley v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1944 F. C. 66 (A):

"A charge under S. 161 is one which is easily and may often be lightly made, but is in the very nature of things difficult to establish, as direct evidence must in most cases be meagre and of a tainted nature. These considerations cannot however be suffered to relieve the prosecution of any part of the burden which rests upon it to establish the charge beyond reasonable doubt. If after everything that can legitimately be considered has been given its due weight, room still exists for taking the view that however strong the suspicion raised against the accused every reasonable possibility of innocence has not been excluded, he is entitled to an acquittal."

There is yet another circumstance that points to the desirability of an independent and thorough examination of the evidence by the Board. It appears that certain facts, which were indicative of the innocence of the accused & facility of the prosecution case, were not referred to or touched by the Courts below and this, in the opinion of the Board, vitiated the conclusion arrived at by these Courts.

(12) It would be recalled that the charge against the appellant was that he accepted as illegal gratification a tin of Ghee from Mutwali Mir between 12 and 15-9-1948 and further received a sum of Rs. 25/- from him the very next day. This charge readily divides itself into two parts viz. (1) the receipt of one tin of Ghee and (2) the receipt of Rs. 25/-. Not a little confusion was caused by the omission of the Courts below to separately consider and record separate findings with respect to these two counts.

(13) Apart from the so-called circumstantial evidence, to which reference shall be made in due course, the conviction of the appellant with respect to this charge was based on the evidence of P. W. 1, (Mutwali Mir) P. W. 2, (Dina Nath) P. W., (Bansilal) and P. W., (Ahad Joo) and P. W. 5, (Gulam Mohd Kuli).

(14) It would be convenient first to deal with the second part of the charge viz. about the receipt of Rs. 25/- by the appellant. There is only the evidence of P. W. 4 Ahad Joo, P. W. 1 and Mutwali Mir, as regards this part of the case. Ahad Joo was a peon posted in Tehsil Uri and gave evidence against the appellant as regards the charge of acceptance of Rs. 50/- by the appellant from Atta Mhod. as well. His evidence as regards that charge was, however, not accepted by the Sessions Judge and the appellant was acquitted with respect to that charge. The fact of the rejection of the evidence of this witness, as regards the charge just referred to, laid his evidence with respect to the charge under consideration open to the obvious comment that he was not a witness of truth. No reference, however, to this aspect of the matter was made in the course of their judgments either by the Sessions Judge or by the High Court. Ahad Joo deposed that, when after delivering Ghee Mutwali Mir returned and had not gone far off,

"the accused told me to tell him that this Ghee will not do and that some money should be paid for a pair of boots. I went and told this to Mutwali Mir. He replied that he had no money with him at that time."

It is manifest that it is easy to make a statement like this and it is difficult to test its veracity by appropriate cross-examination. There is one circumstance, however, that demonstrates that this part of the prosecution case was an after-thought.

One could understand that, on receipt of the application for the appointment of Mutwali Mir as Zaildar, the appellant dictated his terms. Dina Nath P. W. 3, however, stated that after the receipt of the application he was asked by the appellant to tell Mutwali Mir to supply a tin of Ghee. Dina Nath makes no mention of any demand by the appellant for a pair of boots or the price thereof. The demand for illegal gratification piecemeal is, to say the least, extremely extraordinary. In all the circumstances we are not prepared to accept the evidence of Ahad Joo on the point. The result is that one is left with the solitary statement of Mutwali Mir as regards this part of the case, and the Board has no hesitation in rejecting the same. Reference has already been made to petition Ex. P. C. which was presented by Mutwali Mir to Chief Administrator on 26-10-1948. The alleged delivery of Ghee and payment of Rs. 25/- to the appellant by Mutwali Mir, according to the prosecution case, was round about 15-9-1948 and the application Ex. P. C. was not presented till after the lapse of about six weeks from that date. No explanation, good or bad or indifferent, as regards the delay in the presentation of the application was offered by Mutwali Mir. This application was presented after the appellant had been suspended. That false complaints against officers, in the situation in which the appellant found himself, are recklessly made after they are relieved of their office and are crest-fallen, is by no means a phenomenon of unusual occurrence.

Indeed the statement of Mutwali Mir in cross-examination strongly points to the conclusion that the application Ex. P. C. did not originate from Mutwali Mir but was the handi-work of someone who was busy in manufacturing evidence against the appellant. Mutwali Mir stated that "I have got the application marked Ex. P. C. written by a man whose name I do not know nor he is an acquaintance of mine. He is the resident of Uri".

Comment on this statement will be superfluous, but it may be observed in passing that Mutwali Mir was presumably unable to name the scribe of application Ex. P. C. for the simple reason that the application was got prepared not by Mutwali Mir but by some one else. The prosecution case as regards payment of Rs. 25/- to the appellant must therefore be rejected.

(15) The evidence as regards the receipt of a tin of Ghee by the appellant as illegal gratification is equally unconvincing. Reference has already been made to the evidence of Dina Nath P. W. 2 which shows that, on the presentation of the application by Zamindars, Pir Mohd. Maqbul—Chief Administrator (P. W. 17) ordered verbally that Mutwali Mir be appointed Zaildar. The Chief Administrator had the last voice in the matter and, therefore, it is extremely improbable that, after the receipt of his verbal order, the appellant could have summoned courage to ask for bribe as a condition precedent to the appointment of Mutwali Mir as Zaildar. Apart from this it is abundantly clear by the order Ex. P. B. passed by the appellant, which has been quoted above, that the appointment of Mutwali Mir as Zaildar was only as a temporary measure, and that he was "appointed Zaildar for the time being for conducting the work and afterwards necessary action under rules will be taken." This fact also negatives the probability of the demand of bribe.

(16) All that appears from the evidence of Dina Nath is that "he told Mutwali Mir to get a tin of Ghee for the Tehsildar I told him that the accused had demanded a tin of Ghee. Mutwali Mir did not give any reply at that time."

Dina Nath did not commit himself to the statement that the Ghee was demanded by the appellant as consideration for the appointment of Mutwali Mir as Zaildar. The evidence of Bansilal P. W. 3 negatives the truth of the prosecution case. The witness was declared hostile by the Court at the request of the prosecuting counsel and he was allowed to cross-examine the witness. This fact, however, furnishes no justification for rejecting en-block the evidence of the witness. His evidence has to be read and considered as a whole with a view to find out whether any weight should be attached to the same. In the course of his evidence Bansilal stated

"I told the accused that Mutwali Mir had brought the Ghee and the accused told me that he would send the price and that he had got the Ghee. I called out to Mutwali Mir and told him that the Tehsildar says that the price will be sent. Mutwali Mir showed by signs from a distance that it was all right."

The prosecuting counsel, when allowed to cross-examine this witness, however, put no question to the witness regarding the statement just quoted.

(17) Reasons have been assigned above for rejecting the evidence of Ahad Joo. The result is that there remains the solitary statement of Mutwali Mir P. W. 1, in support of this part of the prosecution case. Most of the reasons assigned above for not accepting the evidence of Mutwali Mir as regards the payment of Rs. 25/- by him to the appellant equally hold good so far as Mutwali Mir's evidence as regards delivery of Ghee is concerned.

(18) The so called circumstantial evidence relied upon by the Courts below consists of the following links:

(1) The interval of 3 weeks between the presentation of the application Ex. P. A., the recording of the evidence of the Zemindars and passing of order Ex. P. B. by the appellant,

(2) the acceptance of Ghee by the appellant without weighing the same and settling its price;

(3) the delay in the alleged payment of the price of the Ghee by the appellant.

(19) The circumstances just referred to, do not, in the opinion of the Board, clinch the matter and demonstrate the guilt of the appellant. The fact of the receipt of the Ghee was throughout admitted by the appellant, and the only serious question for consideration was whether the same was received as illegal gratification. It is clear from the evidence in the case that Mutwali Mir dealt in Ghee. It is also clear that the military was in control of the area at that time. In view of the fact that problems of varying intensity must then have been engaging the attention of the civil authorities there is no occasion for surprise if the appellant did not dispose of the application Ex. P. A. for three weeks. His hands must have been full with works and duty of various description. When one pictures to one-self the utter confusion that must have reigned supreme at that time, one hesitates to disbelieve the assertion of the appellant that a Military Officer had asked for the Ghee and, as that officer had moved to Srinagar, the Ghee was sent there, but the officer could not be traced. Supplies could not have been arranged and received in a business-like manner at that time. The non-weighment of Ghee or the settlement of its price is therefore not a matter to which any weight can be attached. Each one of three links in the so called circumstantial evidence, tested by itself, leads one to nowhere and their cumulative effect is nil, for the simple reason that Zero multiplied by Zero is still Zero.

(20) On the whole, the Board have arrived at the conclusion that the guilt of the appellant was not established and, accordingly, the Board will humbly advise His Highness that this appeal be allowed, the conviction of and the sentence passed upon the appellant be set aside and he be acquitted, and the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Wali Dar, Appellant v. State.

Criminal Appeal No. 2 of 1952, D/- 9-8-1952.

Penal Code (1860), S. 300 — Benefit of doubt — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 3.)

No convincing motive for murder brought home to accused — Testimony of eye-witness regarding discovery of dead body shattered by evidence of investigating officer — Mystery surrounding two reports made to police, in that, one drawn up by Numberdar and Chowkidar did not mention names of eye-witnesses and the other drawn up by husband of deceased, from which conclusion was irresistible that report was outcome of conspiracy against accused who was regarded as a village bully — Also it was impossible to record definite finding on question of scene of murder — Held there was room for grave doubt in truth of prosecution story — Accused held was entitled to benefit of doubt. (Paras 20, 21)

Anno: Penal Code, S. 300 N. 44; Evidence Act S. 3 N. 5.

H. N. Dhar, Amicus Curiae; Raja Jaswant Singh Acting Advocate General, for the State.

SIR IQBAL AHMAD, MEMBER: This is an appeal by Wali Dar against his conviction under S. 302, R. P. C. and the sentence of death passed on him. The charge against the appellant was that, on the night intervening between the 3rd and 4th of Jan. 1952, he caused the death of his sister Mst. Fazi by strangulation. The fact that on the night in question Mst. Fazi was strangled to death is proved from the medical evidence in the case, and the sole question for consideration in the case is whether or not the charge under S. 302, R. P. C. was brought home to the appellant.

(2) It is one of those cases in which it is not possible to be dogmatic but, after making due allowance for the fact that there are grounds for grave suspicion against the appellant the Board, in view of certain extraordinary features of the case and the extremely unsatisfactory nature of the evidence, is unable to share the conviction of the Courts below as regards the guilt of the appellant.

(3) The case for the prosecution is that in the dead of night Wali Dar entered the room in which Fazi was sleeping, alone with Mst. Jainti, the wife of Wali Dar and certain children and there he strangled her to death by fastening and tightening a rope round her neck. Thereafter he lifted the dead body on his shoulders and proceeded to the courtyard of Abdullah (P. W. 3) and put the same there.

(4) On a perusal of the evidence recorded by the Sessions Judge, it was manifest that certain matters having vital bearing on the case were left in a state of absolute obscurity and the Board, accordingly, summoned some of the important witnesses for further examination and recorded their evidence.

(5) Wali Dar & his sister Fazi originally resided in village Shalhal. Fazi was married to one Jabbar Mir, resident of village Lachh. Fazi had two children by Jabbar Mir viz., Ali Mir (P. W. 5) a lad of about nine or ten years of age and Sona Mir who is about 5 or 6 years old. Jabbar Mir died in or about the year 1948. Jabbar Mir had 139 kanals of land in village Lachh, and after his death, at the request of Mst. Fazi, Wali Dar with his wife Mst. Jainti came to and began to reside in village Lachh with Mst. Fazi, and looked after the cultivation of the land. About two years after the death of Jabbar Mir, Mst. Fazi married Rasul

Wani (P. W. 1) son of Abdullah (P. W. 3) who also is resident of village Lachh and was the neighbour of Jabbar Mir. Rasul Wani's first wife Mst. Mehtabi is still alive and Rasul Wani has 4 children by her. It is, however, a fact that Mst. Mehtabi is a cripple.

(6) The case for the prosecution is that the marriage of Mst. Fazi with Rasul Wani was bitterly opposed by Wali Dar, but this is disproved by the statement made before the Board by Rasul Wani's father Abdullah (P. W. 3). Indeed the evidence recorded by the Board puts it beyond doubt that Wali Dar joined the marriage and partook of the feast given by Abdullah on the occasion of the marriage of Rasul Wani with Mst. Fazi. In view of this evidence the evidence tending to show that after the second marriage of Mst. Fazi there was bickering between her and Wali Dar, must be rejected.

(7) It would be noted that the period intervening between Fazi's marriage with Rasul Wani and the murder of Mst. Fazi was about 8 months and, even though Mst. Jainti (P. W. 4) the wife of Wali Dar tried to prove that during this period there used to be quarrel between Fazi and Wali Dar, and the latter at times beat Fazi, the evidence, as a whole, negatives the truth of this statement and points to the conclusion that the brother and sister amicably lived together, and the brother throughout had a controlling hand in the management of the land originally owned by Jabbar Mir.

(8) To begin with, therefore, the prosecution is up against difficulty of failing to attribute a motive to Wali Dar for the alleged commission of the dastardly crime by him. It was vaguely alleged that Wali Dar desired Mst. Fazi to transfer the land to him or, at any rate, to let him have a share out of the same. This, to say the least, is improbable, for the simple reason that, during the minority of her two children, Mst. Fazi had no right to give away the land that belonged to the two children. Again it was further sought to be made out that Wali Dar entertained the apprehension that sooner or later he will be deprived of the land of Jabbar Mir and possession of the same will be taken by Rasul Wani. This part of the prosecution case, however, receives a rude shock from the statement made by Rasul Wani (P. W. 1) before the Board. He stated that no interference whatsoever was made by him in the control of the management of the land by Wali Dar, and that Fazi was agreeable to and held out a promise to let Wali Dar have one third share in the land on her two children attaining majority.

(9) In view of what has been just stated, it is imperative to approach the consideration of the evidence in the case in the light of the cardinal fact that no convincing motive for the commission of the crime by Wali Dar has been brought home to him.

(10) It is common ground that on the night in question Mst. Fazi and her two children were sleeping in a room in Jabbar Mir's house alone with Mst. Jainti and her two babies, and the room was bolted from inside. Wali Dar was sleeping in an adjoining verandah. It is also a fact that on the morning of Jan. 4, the dead body of Fazi was first seen by Abdullah lying in the courtyard of Rasul Wani's house and the sole question for decision in the case was whether Wali Dar was responsible for the murder.

The conviction of Wali Dar has been based by the Courts below wholly and solely on the testimony of Mst. Jainti (P. W. 4) and Ali Mir (P. W. 5) who profess to be eye-witnesses of the murder. In order to assess the value to be attached to the testimony of these two witnesses it is necessary to refer briefly to the events that, according to the prosecution evidence, followed the discovery of the dead-body.

(11) It appears from the evidence of Abdullah (P. W. 3) that, no sooner he noticed the dead body of Fazi, he jumped to the conclusion that Wali Dar had murdered her, and his neighbours, to whom he immediately conveyed the news about the discovery of the dead body, also straightway said that Wali Dar was responsible for the murder. Soon after the Numberdar, the Halqa President, etc. appeared on the scene and Wali Dar was taken into custody. It is important to bear in mind in this connection that till then there was not even a whisper either by Mst. Jainti or Ali Mir that they had witnessed the commission of the crime.

(12) A report Ex. G. was then drawn up and the same was signed by Mohd. Sultan Numberdar and Jabbar Chowkidar of the village. Mohd. Sultan was not called as witness in the case Jabbar (P. W. 6) however, stated that he and Sultan got the report written by one Aziz Mir. The report was taken by the Numberdar & the Chowkidar and delivered at Police Station Handwara. Prem Nath, Sub-Inspector, (P. W. 12), who investigated the case, has stated before the Board that this report reached Handwara Police Station at about 3 p. m. It further appears from his evidence that the distance between village Lachh and Handwara by road is about six miles and by a short-cut foot path is about 4 miles, and that this distance could be covered on foot in about an hour and a half. It is, therefore, permissible to presume that the Numberdar and the Chowkidar did not leave village Lachh with the report till about 1 p. m. In other words, there was an interval of about six hours between the discovery of the dead body and the despatch of the first report from the village. The report merely mentions the fact of the discovery of the dead body and is conspicuous by an entire absence of any reference to any suspicion being harboured against Wali Dar. The report is, therefore, proof positive of the fact that till the despatch of the report neither Jainti nor Ali Mir had disclosed that they had witnessed the commission of the crime.

(13) It is said that Rasul Wani was absent from the village on the night in question and had gone to village Yamlaht, which is 3 miles away, to attend some Niaz ceremony at the house of one Nura Mir. It is alleged that on 4th Jan. at about 9 a. m. one Shams Gujri, a servant of Abdullah, conveyed the news to Rasul Wani about the discovery of the dead body of Fazi. It is further alleged that Jamal Wani, the brother of Rasul Wani was also absent from the village on that night. The simultaneous absence of these two brothers from village Lachh is, to put it mildly, a bit extraordinary, and therefore the omission by the prosecution to call Nura Mir and Shams Gujri as witnesses to testify to the absence of Rasul Wani from village Lachh on the night of the murder is significant.

(14) The case for the prosecution is that Rasul Wani, on receipt of the information, proceeded to his native village, saw the dead body, and then truth came to the surface with startling rapidity. Rasul Wani deposed that on reaching his village he forthwith enquired from Ali Mir and the latter then told him that Wali Dar had tied a rope round the neck of Fazi and strangled her to death and, thereafter, removed the dead body from the room and put the same in the courtyard of Abdullah. It is said that Rasul Wani then immediately proceeded to the Police Station and there lodged a report Ex. P. A. In the report the alleged information given by Ali Mir to Rasul Wani is set forth. But there is no mention in the report of any enquiries having been made from Mst. Jainti. Ghulam Qadir, the Halqa President, (P. W. 7), however, stated before the Board that on the arrival of Rasul Wani in the village & on enquiries being made by him both Ali Mir and Mst. Jainti straightway disclosed the fact that Wali Dar had committed the murder. On this point it is impossible to reconcile the evidence of Rasul Wani with the evidence of Ghulam Qadir.

(15) It has already been stated that it is common ground that on the night in question Fazi slept with her two sons and Mst. Jainti in one & the same room. It is, therefore, manifest that, on the discovery of the dead body, Abdullah, the Numberdar, the chowkidar, the Halqa President and all concerned must have made close enquiries from Jainti and Ali Mir about this mysterious murder. Further if these two persons, who now pose as eye-witnesses of the incident, had then said what they say now, the fact that Wali Dar was responsible for the murder would have been mentioned in the report lodged by the Numberdar and Chowkidar. The conclusion, is therefore irresistible that till late in the afternoon of the 4th of Jan. neither Ali Mir nor Jainti disclosed any fact pointing to the guilt of the appellant. If Ali Mir, who is a lad of 9 or 10 years of age, had witnessed the murder of his mother, it is difficult, if not impossible, to believe that he would not have in the morning, on enquiries being made from him, disclosed the fact to the villagers. The story about the studious silence of Ali Mir till the alleged arrival of Rasul Wani from village Yamlehr and then prompt disclosure by him of the prosecution case in all its details appears to the Board a little too refined and a little too ingenious and has very much the complexion of fabrication.

(16) Be that as it may, the case for the prosecution, resting as it does on the testimony of the two alleged eye-witnesses, can succeed only if implicit reliance can be placed on their evidence. The evidence of these witnesses, however, does not command such reliance. The Board had the opportunity of watching Ali Mir in the witness-box. He is an extremely young and simple lad incapable, on his own initiative, of testifying in detail about various processes by which her mother was done to death and the dead body was lodged in the courtyard of Abdullah. Indeed, the Board is of the view that he is got-up witness and was well drilled to narrate the story that he did in Court.

(17) There remains the evidence of Mst. Jainti, and the Board has no hesitation in rejecting her evidence. It is patent from her evidence that she is extremely hostile to the appellant. On every possible point, she attempted to stretch points against the appellant and went to the length of stating that the appellant was a dangerous character. Such being her attitude towards the appellant one would have expected her to come out with the story, that she now narrates, at the earliest possible moment when the villagers assembled round the dead body. One, however, finds that in the report Ex. P. A. there is no mention of any enquiry having been made by Rasul Wani from Jainti nor is there any suggestion in that report that Jainti supported the alleged statement of Ali Mir about the appellant being responsible for the murder.

(18) Apart from this, it is impossible to overlook the improbabilities in the story given out by Jainti. To begin with she stated that the room being locked, the appellant jumped into the same through an aperture in the wall, and when he committed the crime shrieks were raised not only by Fazi but also by Jainti. It may be, that in the dead of night, those shrieks did not reach the ears of the neighbours, but what is curious is that even though Jainti and Ali Mir, according to their statements, were lulled into silence by the threat of being put to death, they unhesitatingly broke their silence on the arrival of Rasul Wani in the village. The story about the removal of the dead body by the appellant single-handed is also a bit curious. Jainti first deposed that the body was taken from the room through the aperture in the wall. She, however, presumably appreciating the absurdity of this portion of her statement, corrected herself, and said that the appellant unbolted the door of the room and then took the dead body out and after depositing the dead-body in the courtyard came back to the room and bolted the same from inside and thereafter went out of the room through the aperture in the wall.

(19) The conduct of the appellant on the morning of the 4th January, as disclosed by Mst. Jainti, shakes confidence in the truth of her statement. She admitted that, on coming to know of the fact of the murder of Fazi, the appellant clung to her body and was bitterly weeping. This, to say the least, is not the conduct of a person who, a few hours before, had mercilessly murdered his own sister who was a source of livelihood to him, his wife and his children.

(20) It is clear from the evidence in the case that Wali Dar was, rightly or wrongly, regarded by residents of Lachh as the village-bully. This accounts for the fact that not one single resident of that village lent a helping hand to Wali Dar during the trial of the case and Jainti, his wife, went to the length of appearing as an eye-witness against him. Abdullah (P. W. 3) has stated that on the discovery of the dead body the suspicion of the villagers fell upon Wali Dar, and circumstances point to the conclusion that by hook or crook, the villagers managed to induce Ali Mir and Jainti to implicate the appellant. The story told by Rasul Wani that he reached village Lachh at about 10. a. m. and then Ali Mir told him that the appellant was responsible for the murder is falsified by the evidence of the investigating Officer, Prem Nath. It is clear from his evidence that till 1. p. m. nobody had connected the appellant with the commission of the crime. The mystery surrounding the two reports in the Police Station is not solved by the evidence in the case and the conclusion is irresistible.

ble that the 2nd report lodged by Rasul Wani was the outcome of a conspiracy between and belated decision by the villagers to implicate the appellant. On the evidence in the case, it is impossible to record a definite finding on the cardinal question as to whether Fazi was murdered in one of the rooms of Ali Jabbar's house or the scene of murder was some other place. It follows that this must remain a case of undetected crime.

(21) On a consideration of the entire evidence in the case, the Board has come to the conclusion that there is room for grave doubt in the truth of the prosecution story and the appellant is entitled to the benefit of that doubt.

(22) For the reasons given above, this appeal must be allowed, the conviction of and the sentence of death passed upon the appellant must be set aside and he should be acquitted, and the Board will humbly advise His Highness accordingly.

Jamal Soofi and others Appellants v. Mohd. Sidqi and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 4 of 1952, D/- 10-9-1952.

(a) Suits Valuation Act (1877), S. 9 — Rules under — (J and K), R. 16 — Forum of appeal — (J and K) Suits Valuation Act (1997) — (J. and K. Civil Courts Act (1977), S. 34).

In regard to suits for pre-emption in relation to houses, the forum of the Court of appeal is determined not by valuation laid in the plaint but by the valuation determined by the judicial decision.

(b) Right of Prior Purchase Act (1993), Ss. 24(1) and 26(a) — Price to be fixed.

The right of prior purchase can only be exercised on payment of price fixed in good faith by the vendor or the vendee, or on payment of the price determined by the Court on the basis of market value. In determining the market value the price actually paid may be taken into consideration but it cannot form an independent ground for the exercise of the right of prior purchase. The view that the pre-emptors are entitled to exercise the right of prior purchase on payment of price which the appellant has succeeded in proving is not correct and it is necessary to determine the market value of the property taking into consideration, among other matters, the payment of price which the appellant has succeeded in proving to the satisfaction of the Court. (Para 10)

H. N. Dhar, for Appellants; S. N. Dhar, for Respondents.

DAR, MEMBER: This is an appeal against the judgment and the decree of the High Court dated Assuj 4, 2008 by which the judgment and the decree dated 16th Poh. 2007, of the City Judge of Srinagar was modified.

(2) On Baisakh 24, 2005, respondents 3 and 4 executed a sale deed of a house and land situated in Mohalla Syed Hamidpora in the City of Srinagar in favour of the appellants for an ostensible consideration of Rs. 5000/-. Respondents 1 and 2 who are the owners of the adjoining property claim to exercise right of prior purchase in regard to this sale and the main question for the consideration of the Board in this appeal is on payment of what price this right can be enforced by them.

(3) Prior to the sale there was an agreement of sale dated Baisakh 24, 2005 which recites that at the time of agreement, a sum of Rs. 2000/- was paid by the appellant to respondents 3 and 4. The sale deed of Baisakh 30, 2005 further recites that a sum of Rs. 1500/- was paid at the time of the execution of the sale deed and further a sum of Rs. 500/- was paid at the time of its attestation. On Baisakh 30, 2007 the date when the sale deed was executed a bond was also executed for the payment of Rs. 1000/- by the appellant to respondents 3 and 4 and this bond was also attested by the Registrar. Prima facie the ostensible consideration of Rs. 5000/- of the sale deed is thus duly supported by documents two of which are registered.

(4) Respondents 1 and 2, however, challenged this consideration to be fictitious to the extent of Rs. 3000/- and they also valued their suit for the purpose of jurisdiction at Rs. 2000/-. The respondents did not dispute that a sum of Rs. 1500/- was paid at the time of the execution of the sale deed and a further sum of Rs. 500/- was paid at the time of its attestation. But they denied the payment of Rs. 2000/- at the time of the agreement and the payment of any money in satisfaction of the bond of Rs. 1000/-.

(5) The trial Judge found that a sum of Rs. 700/- was paid at the time of the agreement, and no payment has been duly proved in regard to the bond, the ostensible consideration therefore was not fixed in good faith and could be disregarded. He then found the market value of the property to be Rs. 3000/- and granted a decree to respondents 1 and 2 on payment of that amount.

(6) Against this decree the appeals were taken to the High Court both by the appellants and respondents 1 and 2 and after filing these appeals, at the hearing, a question was raised by the appellants about the competency of the appeal to the High Court. That Court has come to the conclusion that the appeals were competent and that the sale consideration which has been proved to have been paid, was Rs. 2700/- and respondents 1 and 2 are entitled to enforce the right of prior purchase on payment of that sum only. As a result the decree of the trial Court was modified to that extent.

(7) The 34th section of the Civil Courts Act 1977, no doubt provides that an appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge shall lie to the District Judge where the value of the original suit in which decree was made did not exceed Rs. 2500/- and as the value of the suit in the plaint was set out to be Rs. 2000/-, the appeal against the decree of the trial Court prima facie lay to the District Judge and not to the High Court. But by the 9th section of the Suits Valuation Act 1977 the determination of value of certain suits has been left to the High Court and in exercise of the powers conferred by this section the High Court has made certain rules with the sanction of the Government and Rule 16 of these Rules provides that the valuation of the suits for pre-emption in respect of houses shall depend upon judicial decision. The proper construction of these provisions, therefore, must be that in regard to suits for pre-emption in relation to houses, the forum of the Court of appeal is determined not by valuation laid in the plaint but by the valuation determined by the judicial decision and in this view of the matter the High Court has rightly held that the appeal to it was competent.

(8) On the question of consideration the High Court has taken the view that respondents 1 and 2 are entitled to exercise the right of prior purchase on payment of price which the appellant has succeeded in proving to have been paid to respondents 1 and 2.

(9) Section 24(1), Right of Prior Purchases Act, 1993 provides:

"(1) If in the case of sale the parties are not agreed as to the price at which the person having right of prior purchase shall exercise his right, the Court shall determine whether the price of which the sale purports to have taken place has been fixed in good faith or paid and if it finds that the price was not so fixed or paid, it shall fix as the price for the purposes of the suit the market value of the land or property."

Section 26(a) further provides:

"For the purpose of determining the market value, the Court may consider the following among other matters as evidence of such (a) the price or value actually received or to be received by the vendor from the vendee or the amount really due on the footing of mortgage as the case may be;"

(10) Both the Courts below have concurrently found that out of the sale consideration of Rs. 5000/- the appellants have succeeded in proving consideration to the extent of Rs. 2700/- only. From this finding it follows that the price at which the sale purports to have taken place, has not been fixed in good faith or paid, and therefore, it is the duty of the Court under S. 24(1) to determine the market value of the property and fix its price for the purpose of the suit. In determining the market value under S. 26(a) it can take into consideration inter alia the price actually received by the vendor from the vendee but it is not bound to do so and the Statute does not give a right to the pre-emptor to pre-empt the property on payment of the price which the vendee succeeds in proving to the satisfaction of the Court or which the vendee has actually paid to the vendor. The right of prior purchase can only be exercised on payment of price fixed in good faith by the vendor or the vendee, or on payment of the price determined by the Court on the basis of market value. In determining the market value the price actually paid may be taken into consideration but cannot form an independent ground for the exercise of the right of prior purchase. The view of the High Court, therefore, that respondents 1 and 2 were entitled to exercise the right of prior purchase on payment of price which the appellant has succeeded in proving cannot be sustained and it is necessary to determine the market value of the property taking into consideration, among other matters, the payment of price which the appellant has succeeded in proving to the satisfaction of the Court.

(11) The trial Court has found the market value to be Rs. 3000/- and the High Court has not expressed any opinion upon this point. It becomes, therefore, necessary for the Board to consider the question for itself and it has come to the conclusion that the finding of the trial Court in this matter is correct and should be affirmed.

(12) The Board will, therefore, humbly advise His Highness that this appeal be allowed in part and that the variation made in the decree of the High Court from the decree of the trial Court be set aside and that the decree of the trial Court be restored. The appellant will have 3 months time from this date to deposit the purchase money if it has not already been made and the appellant will bear his own cost and will pay half costs of the respondents before the Board and the High Court.

Kutch J. C.'s Court

A. I. R. 1953 KUTCH 1

VAKIL, J. C.

Khanmamad Rehemam and others, Accused
Nos. 1 to 4, Applicants v. The State of Kutch.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 18 of 1952, D/-
12-9-1952.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 439 — Concurrent findings of fact — No interference. (Para 3)

Anno: Cr.P.C., S. 439 N. 15.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 221 and 223 — Criminal trespass — Charge — (Penal Code (1860), S. 447).

In an offence under S. 447, I. P. C. it is sufficient to state in the charge that an accused person committed criminal trespass, on or about a particular day, at or about a particular time, by entering into or upon or by illegally remaining on the land (to be described) then in possession of a certain person. Specification that the intention was to commit theft or to insult, annoy or intimidate without mentioning the way in which the intimidation was made or the annoyance was caused does not make the charge defective. (Para 5)

Anno: Cr.P.C., S. 221 N. 14; S. 223 N. 5;
Penal Code, Ss. 441 and 447 N. 20.

(c) Penal Code (1860), S. 75 — Charge under, when to be framed — Incorrect proceeding not prejudicing accused — (Criminal P. C.
(1898), Ss. 221 (7) and 255-A).

It is not correct to say that additional charge under S. 75, Penal Code, should be framed after recording conviction of the accused. The additional charge under S. 75, I. P. C. has to be framed with the main charge. This is clear from the provisions of S. 221 (7) read with S. 255-A, Criminal
P. C. What is required is that evidence in proof of previous conviction be led only after a judgment recording conviction is pronounced. Where the trial Court heard evidence after he concluded that the accused was guilty it is an incorrect procedure.

Defect in procedure held did not however prejudice the accused. AIR 1944 Lah
25 (FB), Ref. (Para 5)

under S. 447 — Previous conviction not under 1953 Kutch/1

Chapter 12 or 17 of Penal Code, but under Sections of Kutch Penal Code corresponding to under S. 75, held improper when it was not intended to exceed limits of punishment.

conviction can be taken into account in determining sentence, even though additional charge under S. 75 could not be framed — Considerations when such conviction should be taken into account stated. AIR 1929 Mad 306 and ORDER: This is an application for revision of an order of conviction and sentence for an offence punishable under Section 447, I. P. C. by the Magistrate, First Class, Anjar, confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge, Kutch.

(2) The prosecution case against the four applicants held proved by the courts below was that the applicants, armed with sticks and axes went to a field of the complainant Devjee for three successive nights with intent to intimidate him as the latter had dispensed with the services of applicant No. 2 and they abused and gave threats to him.

(3) Much was urged against the conviction of the applicants on merits but in view of the concurrent findings of the courts below no interference on a question of fact is called for.

(4) It was urged that the charge against the applicants was defective. The charge framed was that the applicants committed criminal trespass by entering into the field of the complainant with intent to commit theft or with intent to insult, annoy or intimidate the person in occupation of the field. It was complained that the charge was vague inasmuch as it was not stated that intimidation was made or annoyance was caused in a particular way. In an offence under S. 447, I. P. C. it is sufficient to state that an accused person committed criminal trespass, on or about a particular day, at or about a particular time, by entering into or upon or by illegally remaining on the land (to be described) possession of a certain person. The trying Magistrate had specified that the intention was to commit theft or to insult, annoy or intimidate. The charge was therefore quite proper. It was not defective.

(5) It was urged on behalf of the applicants in the lower appellate Court that as evidence of previous convictions of applicant No. 2 was led in the trial Court, he was prejudiced. It appears that after the case was heard but before the judgment was delivered, evidence of previous conviction was led and then the applicant No. 2 was further charged under Section 75, I. P. C. with having previous convictions. The learned Sessions Judge remarked that the proper course for the trial Court was to frame the additional charge only after recording a conviction of the applicant No. 2 on the original charge. It was further remarked that the defects in procedure and conception of law had not occasioned any prejudice to the applicant No. 2. It is not correct to say that additional charge should have been framed after recording conviction of the applicant No. 2. The additional charge under Section 75, I. P. C. has to be framed with the main charge. This is clear from the provisions of Section 221 (7) read with Section 255-A, Criminal P. C. vide — ‘Emperor v. Dalip Singh’, AIR 1944 Lah 25 (FB). What is required is that evidence in proof of previous conviction be led only after a judgment recording conviction is pronounced. If the additional charge was framed at the stage stated above, the applicant No. 2 would have pleaded guilty to it with the result that it would not have been necessary to lead evidence in proof of it. The trial Court heard evidence after he concluded that applicant No. 2 was guilty. Thus by following incorrect procedure, the trial Court clearly demonstrated that it was not prejudiced. The lower appellate Court was therefore right in not accepting that contention.

(6) Thus the only question that remains for consideration is about sentence. The offence under section 447 I.P.C. is punishable with imprisonment for 3 months or fine or both. The trial Court sentenced applicants 1, 3 and 4 to one month's rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 25 each and applicant No. 2 to 2½ months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 50/-. The learned Sessions Judge observed that the trial Court had given good reasons for giving sentence and that he did not find any grounds for interference. First thing which becomes apparent is that the trial Court had discriminated the case of applicant No. 2 from other applicants. The trial Court remarked that though applicants 1, 3 and 4 had no axes of their own to grind against the complainant, that fact did not make the offence committed by them less serious. Yet their case was discriminated from the case of applicant No. 2. There was thus apparently no reason for discrimination. But the trial Court discriminated the case of applicant No. 2, in view of his previous convictions. As stated in the preceding para an additional charge under section 75 I.P.C. was framed. This was unnecessary and uncalled for as it was not intended to exceed the limits fixed by the Code for the offence. Moreover, the offences for which applicant No. 2 was previously convicted were not offences under chapter XII or XVII of the Penal Code. They were offences under the Kutch Penal Code, corresponding to sections Nos. 323 and 186 I.P.C. It was therefore an error to have resorted to section 75 I.P.C. and

(7) Though an additional charge under section 75 I.P.C., should not and could not have been framed, previous convictions, apart from the provisions of that section, could be taken into consideration in determining the question of sentence. Vide — ‘Suban Saheb v. Emperor’, AIR 1929 Mad 306 and — ‘Emperor v. Nga Ba Shein’, AIR 1928 Rang. 200 (FB). The offences in respect of which previous convictions can be considered, apart from the provisions of Section 75 I.P.C. are not necessarily those mentioned in chapter XII or XVII I.P.C. The reason is that antecedents of a convicted person are taken into consideration in determining the question of sentence. If the offences in respect of which an accused person is previously convicted are either trivial or do not involve any great mortal turpitude, they may not be regarded as sufficient evidence of character or antecedents, so as to induce a court to impose punishment more severe, though within limits prescribed by law, than what would normally be imposed having regard to other facts and circumstances established in the case. Applying the principle of law stated above, the offence of simple hurt and disobeying an order of a public servant, committed 4 years before the offence tried, cannot be accepted as such evidence of antecedents or character, so as to lead to a conclusion that an accused person deserves punishment which is almost the maximum provided by law. In fact, in this case previous convictions should not have been considered in deciding the question of sentence. There was thus no reason to discriminate the case of applicant No. 2.

(8) The other circumstances are that applicant No. 2, a dismissed employee of the complainant, called to his succour other applicants, his friends or relatives, and they all, armed with weapons, went to the field of the complainant for three successive nights abusing and threatening him with intent to intimidate him. The seriousness of the offence is obvious and it cannot be said that the trial Court did not exercise its discretion properly in awarding a sentence of one month and a fine of Rs. 25/- to each of the applicants Nos. 1, 3 and 4. So far as these applicants are concerned, the learned Sessions Judge was right in holding that no interference was called for. As there is no reason to discriminate the case of applicant No. 2, the sentence imposed on him will be reduced to that extent.

(9) The application of all the applicants against their conviction and the application of applicants 1, 3 and 4 against their sentences is dismissed. The sentence imposed on applicant No. 2 is reduced to one month's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 25/-. Applicants to surrender to their bail and serve out their sentences. A fine of Rs. 25/- if paid in excess of what is confirmed be refunded to him.

B/R.G.D.

Order accordingly.

VAKIL, J. C.

Sha Doshabhai Panachand, Defendant-Appellant v. Sha Manilal Khengar, Plaintiff-Respondent.

First Appeal No. 15 of 1951, D/- 11-9-1952.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34 R. 7 — Order merely directing accounts to be taken, is not preliminary decree — No appeal lies.

Except in a case provided in section 16 of the Bombay Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879), a suit by a mortgagor against his mortgagee solely for accounts is not contemplated by law. (Para 8)

Under Order 34, Rule 7 C. P., a court can either order that an account be taken of what would be due to the mortgagee as provided in clause (a) of sub-rule (1) or declare the amount due; but in either case, it should proceed to ascertain the amount due on the date which is to be fixed for payment and specify consequences of payment or non-payment thereof. If it merely directs that an account be taken of what was due to the mortgagee, its order would be nothing more than an interlocutory order. (Para 8)

Such an order has not got the effect of a decree against which an appeal under Section 96, Civil P. C. would be competent. AIR 1925 All 707 and AIR 1924 Oudh 140, Relied on. (Para 9)

JUDGMENT.: This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Respondent for avoiding a mortgage, effected in Samvat 1955, by one Jamnabai in favour of one Soni Bhagwanjee, for 7001 Kories on the property in suit and to obtain possession of the said property or in the alternative for redemption of the said mortgage.

(2) The plaint was based on the averments that the property in suit was sold in Samvat 1965 in execution of a decree for payment of money against Jamnabai and was purchased by one Kanjee. Jamnabai had effected a mortgage on the property in suit in favour of her son-in-law Bhagwanjee in Samvat 1955 to defeat or delay her creditors. The Respondent purchased in Samvat 2002 the property from Bhabhubai, widow of Kanjee and applied on the strength of the sale certificate for possession. The appellant resisted delivery of possession claiming to be in possession under the mortgage as transferee of the rights of the mortgagee. The Respondent's application to remove the resistance was dismissed by the executing Court. The Respondent therefore sued to obtain the reliefs stated in para one above.

(3) The appellant by his written statement resisted the suit on various grounds. The trial Court held that the Respondent was not entitled to the principal relief claimed. It further held that Respondent was entitled to redeem. It, therefore, made following preliminary decree:-

"Plaintiff is entitled to redeem the suit property. The suit to proceed further for inquiry about the mortgage amount legally due to the defendant and about Kharkharajat legally due and on completion of inquiry, a final decree be made;

Plaintiff's suit for declaration that the document of Samvat 1955 is void and to get possession is dismissed. Order as to costs will be made at the time of the final decree."

(4) The appellant preferred this appeal against the first part of the 'preliminary decree'. The Respondent preferred a cross-appeal against the second part of the 'preliminary decree'.

(5) The Respondent raised a preliminary objection that the appeal was not competent as there was no preliminary decree provided by law against which an appeal could be preferred. It was contended that there was only a direction to take accounts on a finding that plaintiff was entitled to redeem.

(6) The Respondent had claimed in the suit a principal relief and a relief in the alternative. The trial Court held that the Respondent was entitled to the alternative relief but not the principal. It is not necessary to consider whether the second part of the 'preliminary decree' was a decree as defined by the Code. Where a principal relief and a relief in the alternative are claimed and a court grants the alternative relief, a decree for the alternative relief granted has to be made. The question that may arise is whether in such a case it is necessary to make a decree for the principal relief not granted. That question would have arisen for consideration in the cognate appeal. But the respondent withdrew that appeal stating that there was no decree. As the appeal was withdrawn, it was unnecessary to decide that question in it. Though the appellant was interested in maintaining that the second part of the 'preliminary decree' was a decree as defined by law, it became unnecessary to decide that question in view of the withdrawal and in view of the fact that the appellant has not preferred the present appeal from that part of the decree. So the question is whether the first part of the 'preliminary decree' is a decree as defined by law.

(7) A preliminary decree for redemption is provided by Order 34, Rule 7 C. P. C. The said rule provides that if in a redemption suit, the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a preliminary decree provided in clauses (a) or (b) and (c) of Sub-rule (1). A plaintiff succeeds when the Court holds that he is entitled to redeem. It is not necessary to provide that the plaintiff is entitled to redeem. That is a finding which, if, incorporated in a decree, is superfluous. Clause (a) provides for an order that an account be taken of what was due to the defendant at the date of such decree for the principal and interest on the mortgage, costs of the suit awarded to the mortgagor and for other costs etc., called 'Kharkharajat'. If it is found convenient, account as stated above be taken first and the amount found due be declared under clause (b). In simple matters it is convenient to declare the amount due. Then under clause (c) plaintiff is to be directed to make payment within a time to be fixed and consequences of payment or non-payment are to be stated. This is what is provided as a preliminary decree for redemption under Order 34, Rule 7, C. P. C. The trial Court declared that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the suit property. This was superfluous. It directed taking of account as provided in clause (a). According to the conception of the trial Court, this amounted to a preliminary decree. Provisions made in clause (c) which are the very 'sine qua non' of a preliminary decree for redemption were ignored. It is thus evident that there was a mere direction to take account on a finding that the Respondent was entitled to redeem. The so-called 'preliminary decree' made by the trial Court was not a preliminary decree for redemption as defined and provided by law.

(8) What the trial court did was to make a preliminary decree for accounts. It envisages making of another preliminary decree for redemption. Such a decree cannot be made under the provisions of Order 20, Rule 16 C. P. C. Reason is that except in a case provided in section 16 of the Bombay Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879), a suit by a mortgagor against his mortgagee solely for accounts is not contemplated by law. It is true that a decree is a formal expression of an adjudication, which so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit. It is also true that under clause (a) of Order 34, Rule 7(1), an order directing account to be taken can be made. The question is one of form. The law contemplates only one preliminary decree for redemption. This is imperative and an order directing accounts to be taken cannot be regarded as a preliminary decree for redemption.

In — 'Naunihal Singh v. A. G. Skinner', AIR 1925 All 707, the Allahabad High Court observed that a court could not pass an interlocutory order for accounts. In — 'Mohkam Singh v. Chandra Pal Singh', AIR 1924 Oudh 140, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Oudh held that under Order 34, Rule 7, C. P. C., a court could either order that an account be taken of what would be due to the mortgagee as provided in clause (a) of sub-rule (1) or declare the amount due; but in either case, it should proceed to ascertain the amount due on the date which is to be fixed for payment and specify consequences of payment or non-payment thereof. If it merely directed that an account be taken of what was due to the mortgagee, its order would be nothing more than an interlocutory order.

(9) It is thus evident that the trial Court did not comply with the imperative provisions of law for making a preliminary decree for redemption and the 'preliminary decree' made by it was not in accordance with law. It has not got the effect of a decree against which an appeal under section 96 C. P. C. would be competent.

(10) Result is that the first part of the 'preliminary decree' made by the trial Court is set aside and the suit is remanded back to the trial Court for making a preliminary decree for redemption in accordance with the provisions of Order 34, Rule 7, C. P. C. after taking account and declaring the amount due to the mortgagee. No order as to the costs of the parties in appeal except and to the extent (?) court-fees paid on the memo of appeal is refunded.

(a) Custom (Kutch) — 'Digest of Local Customs' — Binding force of customs mentioned in.

In the absence of statutory provision on a subject, the local customs mentioned in the book titled 'Digest of Local Customs' in the province of Kutch published under the authority of H. H. the Maharao of Kutch are regarded as authoritative and of legally binding force. (Para 4)

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 58(d) — Usufructuary mortgage — Characteristics of — Vatantar transaction in Kutch amounts to usufructuary mortgage.

The characteristics of a usufructuary mortgage are as follows:

(1) possession of the mortgaged property is delivered to the mortgagee,

(2) the mortgagee is to appropriate rents and profits of the property in lieu of interest or of principal or of both,

(3) the mortgagor does not incur any personal liability to repay the money,

(4) the mortgagee is not entitled to fore-close or to sue for sale. (Para 7)

The vatantar transaction in Kutch has all these characteristics and thus amounts to a usufructuary mortgage. (Para 7)

Anno: T. P. Act, S. 58 N. 35 Pt. 1.

(c) Custom (Kutch) — Digest of Local Customs, S. 645 — Vatantar transaction — Nature of — Amounts to a usufructuary mortgage — (Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 58).

Section 645 of the Digest of Local Customs says that in a vatantar transaction, a person lends money on (security) immovable property; the property remains in possession of the lender; the lender uses the property or enjoys its rent or profit in lieu of interest; the property is returned to the borrower on payment of the principal amount borrowed. These characteristics of a vatantar prima facie show that it is a mortgage transaction. Vatantar is thus a transfer of interest, as distinguished from ownership, in specific immovable property as security for loan and is not a transaction called mortgage by conditional sale as property is not ostensibly sold.

Further, a vatantar has all the principal characteristics of a usufructuary mortgage and thus amounts to a usufructuary mortgage. (Paras 4-7)

Further, a vatantar has got all the principal characteristics of a usufructuary mortgage, though in some vatantar transactions, time limit called Bandhi is provided; it is not universal, and cannot therefore be regarded as a characteristic of the transaction. It is merely a covenant entered into by the parties to those particular transactions, and such a term does not make a usufructuary mortgage an anomalous one. Case law referred. (Para 8)

(d) Debt Laws — Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act (28 of 1939), Ss. 2, 4 — Vatantar transaction in Kutch — Amounts to usufructuary mortgage — Application for adjustment under S. 4 lies.

The transaction known as Vatantar in Kutch is a usufructuary mortgage, which comes within the purview of the inclusive part of the definition of the term 'debt' given in section 2 of the Bombay Act and the money for which the transaction was effected is a 'debt' for the adjustment of which an application under section 4 of the Act can be made. (Para 6)

(e) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 60 'Due' — Meaning of, in respect of usufructuary mortgage.

Where there is no question of enforcing payment, the word 'due' used in section 60 means, due for payment by the mortgagor on expiry of the time during which he authorised retention by the mortgagee of possession and enjoyment of usufruct or rent and profits of the property. In a usufructuary mortgage, money becomes due to enable the mortgagor to redeem though it may not enable the mortgagee to sue for its realisation by sale or otherwise. This is due to the fact that a usufructuary mortgagee has to remain in possession till redeemed by his mortgagor. (Para 9)

ORDER: This is an application for revision of an order dated 24-9-51, made by the Joint Civil Judge, Anjar, in consolidated debt adjustment application No. 300, confirmed by the District Judge, Kutch, in Civil Appeal No. 168 of 1951.

(2) The opponents filed the aforesaid debt adjustment application, under section 4 of the B. A. D. R. Act (hereinafter referred to as 'the Act'), on extension of the provisions of the Act to this State, for adjustment of a debt due from them to the applicant under a transaction called 'vatantar', effected in Samvat 1931 for 11000 Kories, on the allegation that the said transaction was a mortgage. The applicant resisted the application contending that 'vatantar' was a peculiar kind of conveyance which was not a mortgage and as there was no debt, the opponents were not entitled to maintain the application. The question came for consideration before the trial Court at the stage of deciding the statutory preliminary issues. The trial Court held that vatantar was a mortgage transaction and found the statutory issues in favour of the opponents. The lower appellate Court, on appeal confirmed the findings of the trial Court. The applicant has therefore preferred the present application for revision of the said order made by the trial Court.

(3) The only question that arises for consideration in this application is whether the vatantar transaction which is the subject-matter of the application is a usufructuary mortgage. If vatantar is a usufructuary mortgage, it will come within the purview of the inclusive part of the definition of the term 'debt' given in section 2 of the Act and the money for which the transaction was effected will be 'debt' for the adjustment of which an application under section 4 of the Act can be made. It is not necessary to refer to the particular terms and stipulations of the transaction in question as all vatantar deeds have got common salient characteristics. The question has assumed considerable importance in this State as large number of vatantar transactions are effected in the State and they will be affected by the decision of the question under consideration. As the question is to be decided in a general way, reference has to be made to the incidences and characteristics of a vatantar in general.

(4) It was contended on behalf of the applicant that vatantar was not a mortgage much less a usufructuary mortgage. A mortgage is transfer of an interest in specific immovable property for the purpose of securing payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan. A vatantar is explained in section 645 of a book titled Digest of Local Customs in the Province of Kutch published under the authority of H. H. the Maharao of Kutch. In the absence of statutory provision on a subject, the local customs mentioned in this book were regarded as authoritative and of legally binding force. It is important to note that S. 645 is included in Chap. 18 which is captioned 'About dealings on securities'. In the First Section of that chapter, it is stated that where in a transaction of lending and borrowing, property is given in security for repayment of debt or is given in mortgage, the said transaction is called a dealing on security. Such dealings are classified into four parts. Part II is called vatantar or Gasgarne and is explained in section 645. The section says that in a vatantar transaction, a person lends money on (security) immovable property; the property remains in possession of the lender; the lender uses the property or enjoys its rent or profit in lieu of interest; the property is returned to the borrower on payment of the principal amount borrowed. These characteristics of a vatantar prima facie show that it is a mortgage transaction.

It was contended that vatantars were virtually sale transactions with an agreement to reconvey but due to certain beliefs, deeds selling the property out-right were not executed. It was urged that this was manifest from the long period provided as time limit in such deeds. It is apparent that when a transferee has to enjoy usufruct or appropriate rents or profits of a property in lieu of interest, a time limit for a long period shows that at least for that period, the transferee would remain in possession of the property as if he was an owner. It is therefore not surprising that such transferee may become accustomed to look upon the property conveyed to them as owners. But when property is conveyed as security for a loan advanced, the transfer is only of an interest in the property and not of the ownership in it and that interest is called interest of a mortgagee. It is not unusual to see mortgage transactions in which mortgagees agree that they would not redeem for a long period and such a term by itself is not regarded as a clog on the equity of redemption. Reference was made to section 655 and it was urged that according to that section, one view was that if the property was destroyed due to act of God, the transferor was not liable for the debt. The section itself says that according to other view, it is doubtful that the transferor is relieved of the liability and on principle of equity the transferor would be held liable unless he furnished some other security. Another contention was that according to the terms of some of such transactions, structures could be constructed on property transferred and the transferees would become entitled to add the costs incurred to the principal money, indicating that they could deal with the property as owners. This is due to a special contract. Reliance was placed on section 685, which provides that Courts would not award interest on costs incurred for minor repairs and about other costs incurred, interest would be awarded, if there was a contract to that effect. It does not mean that transfer of ownership is made. In the absence of specific provision of law or contract to the contrary, the courts did not favour the idea of awarding interest when a transferee would enjoy benefit of the repairs made.

(5) There can thus be no doubt that vatantar is a transfer of interest as distinguished from ownership in specific immovable property as security for loan. It is true that provisions of the T. P. Act are not exhaustive as regards different kinds of transfers and it is possible to effect a transfer not provided in the T. P. Act. But I cannot conceive of a transfer which is neither a sale nor a mortgage but somewhat in between the two. Even assuming that such a transaction could be contemplated, transfer made as security for loan is a transfer of interest in the property and not transfer of something less than ownership. Reliance was placed on section 658, which provides that if the property transferred was reduced in value, the transferee was not entitled to sue the transferor. It is provided by the same section that the lender would be entitled to sue the borrower in case the property was reduced in value due to fault of the borrower. Where there is transfer of ownership or of something less than that, there is no question of suing a transferor for the amount for which transfer is effected, if due to his fault, the property was reduced in value. On the other hand, as value of security is reduced, the right accrues to sue the transferor for the amount for which the property was transferred. It shows that the transfer was in respect of interest in property as security for loan. In fact, as will be shown hereafter, the vatantar has all the essential characteristics of a usufructuary mortgage. There are two principal kinds of mortgages stated in the Digest. One is called Chitham. It is just like a simple mortgage except that when the amount due is not paid on the date fixed, the mortgagee becomes entitled to get possession of the property and enjoy it as a vatantar. This is not a transaction called mortgage by conditional sale as property is not ostensibly sold. When possession is taken and is to be enjoyed as a vatantar, it does not become a mortgage by conditional sale as it is essential that the property must be transferred absolutely. It is therefore difficult to accept the contention that vatantar is not a mortgage transaction.

(6) Next question is whether vatantar is a usufructuary mortgage. The question arises this way. Every mortgage implies existence of a debt. Under a usufructuary mortgage, a mortgagee cannot call upon his mortgagor to pay the debt except under certain circumstances. Nor can he sue for sale or foreclosure. It was therefore held in —: 'Lachhman Singh v. Natha Singh', AIR 1940 Lah 401 (FB) that in case of a usufructuary mortgage, there was no debt. The legislature, therefore, out of caution, amended the definition of the term 'debt' in section 2 of the Act and made it inclusive of principal money payment of which was secured by a usufructuary mortgage. If, therefore, vatantar is a usufructuary mortgage, it does not become necessary to decide the question whether the principal money for the payment of which vatantar is effected, is a debt as originally defined by the Act. In fact, there is much to be said in favour of the view held by the Lahore High Court as there can be no 'debt', if a creditor is not entitled to enforce it against his debtor. Having regard to the weight of authority, it is evident that the opponents would have a very poor case, unless they could show that vatantar is a usufructuary mortgage. Treated as any other kind of mortgage, it would be difficult to urge that it implied a debt when it could not be enforced. It is thus that the question whether vatantar is a usufructuary mortgage assumes importance.

(7) Now, the characteristics of a usufructuary mortgage are as follows:

- (1) possession of the mortgaged property is delivered to the mortgagee;
- (2) the mortgagee is to appropriate rents and profits of the property in lieu of interest or of principal or of both;

(3) the mortgagor does not incur any personal liability to repay the money;

(4) the mortgagee is not entitled to foreclose or to sue for sale.

In a vatantar transaction, characteristic No. 1 exists. As regards characteristic No. 2, rent and profits are to be appropriated or usufruct is to be enjoyed in lieu of interest. There is no personal liability except under certain circumstances and the vatantar transferee cannot sue for sale or foreclosure. He must continue to remain in possession till the principal money is paid back to him and possession of the property is taken.

(8) Thus a vatantar has got all the principal characteristics of a usufructuary mortgage. Now in some vatantar transactions, time limit called Bandhi is provided. This is not universal. It cannot therefore be regarded as a characteristic of the transaction. It is a covenant entered into by the parties to those particular transactions. The contention is that if there is time limit for payment, it implies liability to pay and hence a vatantar transaction providing time limit is not a usufructuary mortgage. In that case, such a transaction becomes usufructuary san (?) implying existence of debt. If that is so, the opponent would be entitled to maintain the application. I, therefore, do not see how this contention can be of any benefit to the applicant. Again, the question under consideration depends upon the nature of the stipulation made. It will be seen that under a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagor authorises the mortgagee to retain possession until payment of the mortgage money. The mortgagor may agree that the mortgagee may retain possession for a specified number of years. Such a term will not make a usufructuary mortgage an anomalous one. The Madras, Patna, Calcutta and the Lahore High Courts have held it accordingly and I agree with the view so held vide — 'Narayanamurthy v. Appalarasimhulu', AIR 1921 Mad 517; — 'Rameshwar Narain v. Pani Ram', AIR 1934 Pat 217; — 'Kishan Singh v. Nathu Ram', AIR 1939 Lah 235; — 'Akshoy Kumar v. Naba Kumar', AIR 1940 Cal 346. If, however, the stipulation is to make payment at the end of the period fixed, accepting thereby liability to pay, the mortgage will be an anomalous one vide — 'Umabai v. Bhau Balwant', 34 Bom 358. The observation in — 'Tukaram v. Ram Chand', 26 Bom 252 that such a transaction might come within the category of an anomalous mortgage was not necessary for the decision of the case.

(9) It was contended that in a vatantar transaction, the money did not become due and hence there was no right of redemption as provided by section 60 of the T. P. Act. This contention, if accepted, would mean that a vatantar is not a mortgage. It cannot be denied that a usufructuary mortgagor is entitled to redeem. In other words, the money becomes due in a usufructuary mortgage at once or on expiry of the time limit discussed in the preceding para. The word 'due' was used in S. 60 of the T. P. Act, as distinguished from the word 'payable'. It was contended that it could not be said that money became due and at the same time the person in whose favour it became due was not entitled to enforce its payment. Money under a mortgage is payable but its payment cannot be enforced nor redemption on payment could be sought till the period provided for payment and redemption expired. Where there is no question of enforcing payment, the word 'due'

used in section 60 means, due for payment by the mortgagor on expiry of the time during which he authorised retention by the mortgagee of possession and enjoyment of usufruct or rent and profits of the property. In a usufructuary mortgage, money becomes due to enable the mortgagor to redeem though it may not enable the mortgagee to sue for its realisation by sale or otherwise. This is due to the fact that a usufructuary mortgagee has to remain in possession till redeemed by his mortgagor. If the mortgagor agrees not to redeem for a specific period, he is contracting himself out of his right to a certain extent and to that extent money becomes due later.

(10) The other contentions urged related to differences in the rights and liabilities of a mortgagor and mortgagee under the T. P. Act and of a vatantardar under the Digest. They do not affect the main questions discussed so materially as to alter the nature of the transaction. It is therefore held that a vatantar is not only a mortgage but it is a usufructuary mortgage. The money payment of which is secured by the usufructuary mortgage is immovable property and the opponents are debtors as defined by the Act. The findings on preliminary issues recorded by the trial Court and confirmed by the appellate Court are correct. Result is that the application is dismissed with costs. Papers and proceedings in the case will go back to the lower appellate Court for transmission to the trial Court for proceeding further with the case.

ORDER: The applicant was convicted by the Magistrate, First Class, Anjar for an offence under Section 325, I. P. C. and was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year and to pay a fine of Rs. 250/-. The conviction, on appeal, was confirmed by the Additional Sessions Judge, Kutch, but sentence was reduced to 6 months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100. The applicant has, therefore, approached this Court for revision of the order of conviction and sentence.

(2) There was evidence to show that the applicant voluntarily caused hurt to Rakhya. The trying Magistrate as well as the Additional Sessions Judge on appeal have believed the evidence. In view of the concurrent findings on this question of fact, this Court will not interfere in exercise of its power in revision. Hence, the contention that the evidence was scanty and unbelievable and therefore the conviction be set aside cannot be accepted.

(3) For showing that the hurt voluntarily caused was grievous, as defined by section 320, I. P. C., the prosecution alleged that there was fracture of nasal bone and relied on medical evidence in proof of it. Rakhya, no doubt stated that his nasal bone was broken but he could not have said so as a matter of what he had personally seen. The Medical Officer, examined for the prosecution, only referred to the certificates given by him and stated that Rakhya remained in the Hospital as an indoor patient from 18-5-51 to 11-6-51. The trial Court relied on these certificates which showed that Rakhya had sustained eight injuries on different parts of his body of which there was one on the bridge of the nose caused by some hard blunt substance with swelling around and that on examination, after the swelling subsided, it appeared that the nasal bone was broken.

It was contended on behalf of the applicant before the Additional Sessions Judge that the Medical certificates did not constitute substantive evidence and in the absence of any substantive evidence on record, the trying Magistrate erred in holding that the hurt voluntarily caused was grievous. The Additional Sessions Judge felt the force of this contention as number and nature of injuries could be proved by the medical witness saying so in his evidence and not by giving reference to the certificates issued by him. The certificates issued may be used by the medical officer for refreshing memory and may be relied on by the prosecution as evidence to corroborate the medical evidence. But there cannot be corroboration of evidence not given. The Additional Sessions Judge deplored that ends of justice were not secured by leading evidence properly. At the same time, he concluded that there was defect and not lacuna and unless the applicant was prejudiced, he was not entitled to the benefit thereof. As the medical witness was questioned on behalf of the applicant about injury on the nose, the Additional Sessions Judge, held that the applicant was not prejudiced.

(4) It seems to me that the learned Additional Sessions Judge did not properly appreciate the contention urged before him. There was no question of prejudice or estoppel in this case.

The prosecution had to show beyond doubt that nasal bone was broken and hence injury caused was grievous. In other words, the medical witness ought to have stated in his evidence (and that would be the only material evidence in the case) that there was swelling of the dimensions to be mentioned on the bridge of the nose with a fracture of nasal bone below the seat of the injury. There can be no substitute for this evidence by production of certificates issued by the medical officer. A statement by a medical witness on oath that he had issued the certificates shown to him does not furnish the requisite proof. It proves the certificates which can only be used as corroborative evidence.

In — 'Perumal v. South India Ry. Co.', AIR 1937 Mad 407 the Madras High Court observed as under:

"The evidence of experts must be given in the ordinary way. Subject to certain exceptions, —these exceptions being amongst others, the certificates of the Imperial Serologist touching the matter of blood stains and of the Chemical examiner, which are made admissible in evidence by themselves—it is quite obvious that the opinion of an expert must be given orally and that a mere report or certificate by him cannot possibly be evidence. Unless he goes into the witness box and gives oral evidence, there can be no cross examination of the expert at all."

These observations apply to the evidence of medical witnesses in respect of the injuries seen and noted by them as they apply in respect of their opinion. It is not enough to say that "I had noted injuries and stated opinion in the certificates issued by me and they are the same as shown to me."

(5) When substantive evidence in the manner stated above is not given, there is want of evidence to prove a particular fact. Where there is absence or want of evidence, it cannot be said that a fact alleged is proved and no question of prejudice arises. There is thus no medical evidence to show number and nature of injuries on the person of Rakhya. It is therefore surprising that the learned Additional Sessions Judge, while accepting the force of the contention, should have dismissed it on the ground that the applicant was not prejudiced. If the law could thus be circumvented, the prosecution would never be alive to the necessity of proving nature and number of injuries by examining the medical witness in respect of each of them. Even the medical witness was not examined in the matter of his opinion as to how the injuries could possibly have been caused.

(6) What the medical witness had stated in his certificate was that the nasal bone on the left side appeared to have been broken. Thus, even in the certificate issued, the medical witness was not definite. He could not be definite because no X-ray examination was made. Yet the learned Additional Sessions Judge remarked that there was definite medical opinion that the nasal bone was broken in the centre. Thus there was no substantive evidence to show that the injury caused was grievous. The learned Public Prosecutor relied on the fact, as stated by the medical witness that Rakhya was treated as an indoor patient from 18-5-51 to 11-6-51 and it was contended that the case fell under Cl. 8 of S. 320, I. P. C. On behalf of the applicant it was contended that the charge which the applicant was called upon to meet was that he had caused grievous injury by breaking the nasal bone and therefore he could not be convicted for an offence of causing grievous hurt falling under clause 8 of section 320, I. P. C. Under Section 221, Cr. P. C., it would have been sufficient if it was stated in the charge that the applicant had caused grievous hurt as the law creating the offence gives it a specific name. It will give notice to the applicant that he will have to meet a case in one or more of different ways mentioned in section 320. But when the case specified in the charge was that grievous hurt was caused by breaking nasal bone, the prosecution could not have obviously relied on the fact that the hurt was grievous under clause 8 of section 320, I. P. C. In the absence of specification, the applicant was expected to meet the case under all clauses. When specification was made, the applicant was not expected to meet a case under any other of the eight clauses of section 320, I. P. C. Thus the prosecution was not entitled to rely on clause 8 of Section 320, I. P. C.

(7) Moreover, the only evidence on record is that the applicant was treated as an indoor patient from 18-5-51 to 11-6-51. The medical witness did not state that during the period, Rakhya was suffering severe bodily pain or was unable to follow his ordinary pursuits. The mere fact that Rakhya was treated as an indoor patient for more than 20 days was not sufficient. Proof of being in a hospital for the space of 20 days cannot be taken as equivalent to proof of grievous hurt — 'Queen Empress v. Vastachela', 19 Bom 247 and — 'Khair Din v. Emperor', AIR 1931 Lah 280.

(8) Thus this application must be allowed in part and applicant's conviction be altered from Sections 325 to 323, I. P. C. The applicant's sentence on appeal was reduced to 6 months' Rigorous Imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100. Though the conviction of the applicant is altered to one under section 323 and though there is no evidence about the nature and number of injuries except what Rakhya stated in his evidence, there is evidence that Rakhya remained in hospital for more than 20 days receiving treatment. The grievousness of the injury caused to him can thus be gauged. I think that ends of justice would be met if the applicant is sentenced to 3 months' rigorous imprisonment. Hence, the following order is made.

Jeevandas Ibji and others, Appellants v. Jadeja Karubha Dujajee, Respondent.

First Appeal No. 5 of 1951, D/- 6-9-1952.

(a) Custom (Kutch) — Vatantar transaction — Nature of — Has all the characteristics of usufructuary mortgage — (Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 58 (d)). (Para 7)

Anno: T. P. Act, S. 58 N. 35.

(b) Custom (Kutch) — Vatantar transaction — Piece-meal redemption of — When allowed — (T. P. Act (1882), S. 60).

According to the usage as stated in S. 668 of the book titled a 'Digest of local customs and usages', published under authority of His Highness the Maharao of Kutch and regarded as having force of law, when some of the co-mortgagors extend the period of a vatantar, other co-mortgagors are entitled to redeem to the extent of their share. The provision is based on the principle that integrity of the mortgage is broken. It follows that the mortgagors extending the period will also be entitled to redeem their share separately.

Held further that as the mortgagee had acquired 60 per cent of share in the mortgage security, they could not object to the piecemeal redemption of his share by the mortgagor. (Para 8)

Anno: T.P. Act, S. 60 N. 42, 44.

(c) Custom (Kutch) — Suit for redemption of his share of vatantar by some mortgagors — All Bhayats not parties — Contentions in the nature of paramount title cannot be considered in the suit — (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34 R. 1).

(Para 9)

Anno: C.P.C., O. 34 R. 1 N. 5.

(d) Hindu Law — Widow — Alienation — Legal necessity — Proof of — Alienation more than 50 years old — Presumptions may be made in favour of recital.

After a long period has elapsed between the alienation and the suit, when all those who could have given evidence on the relevant points have grown old or passed away, a recital consistent with the probabilities and circumstances of the case assumes greater importance and presumptions are permissible to fill in details which have been effaced by time. AIR 1951 Nag 357(1), Relied on.

Held that the statement in the mortgage that the amount was necessary for the expenses of the marriage of the daughter of the executant widow should be accepted as evidence of necessity. (Para 10)

(e) Custom (Kutch) — Suit for piecemeal redemption of vatantar — Question of rendering accounts — Other co-sharers not necessary parties — (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34 R. 1).

Where owing to the acquisition by the mortgagee of a share in the mortgaged property redemption piece-meal can be had of a Vatantar and the mortgage who has to render account is on the record, it is not necessary to make the other co-sharers parties though interested in the proper taking of accounts, as the mortgagee, who has by acquiring share of a mortgagor enabled the other mortgagors to sue for redemption piece-meal, cannot complain that he would have to lead the same evidence and get the said question determined again when other mortgagors sue to redeem their shares. (Para 11)

Anno: C.P.C., O. 34 R. 1 N. 6.

(f) Custom (Kutch) — Suit for redemption of vatantar — Claim for mesne profits — Not maintainable — (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34 R. 7).

Possession of a possessory mortgagee so long as his right to possession subsists is not wrongful except when valid tender under S. 84 of the T. P. Act is made or when it is found that the mortgage was satisfied on the date of the suit. No order for mesne profits can therefore be made against the mortgagee in a suit for redemption of a vatantar in Kutch. (Para 12)

JUDGMENT: This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Respondent and his son Tanubha, for redemption of their 21-3/7 per cent of share in the village Bharapar, on the allegations that the said village, owned by Bhayats of Kera, was mortgaged by them in the year Samvat 1912, for 49025 kories, with the predecessor-in-title of the appellants, for 21 years and that, the appellants predecessor-in-title, having obtained an extension of the period of the mortgage for 25 years in Samvat 1936 from the Respondent's predecessors-in-title, to the extent of their 21-3/7 per cent share in the security, broke the integrity of the mortgage, thereby enabling the Respondent and his son, to sue for redemption of their share, on payment of proportionate mortgage amount and costs (Kharajat) incurred on the mortgage security.

(2) The appellants resisted the suit contending that the Respondent was not entitled to redemption piecemeal; all Bhayats were necessary parties to the suit; the Respondent had got 16½ per-cent share only; one Faijiba, widow of Bhayat Punjajee, owning 2½ per cent share, had further extended the period of the mortgage by 51 years to the extent of that share; a suit for partition should have been filed; and that the applicants were entitled to 194545½ Kories as Kharajat.

(3) During the pendency of the suit, the appellants obtained a further extension of the period of the mortgage from Tanubha, son of the Respondent, who had joined with him as a co-plaintiff, to the extent of his share. Tanubha was transposed as a co-defendant. The appellants contended that the Respondent was not entitled to redeem to the extent of the share of Tanubha. The Respondent contended that the alienation made by Tanubha was affected by the doctrine of lis pendens.

(4) On these pleadings several issues were raised in the trial Court. It is necessary to refer to the issues framed and found with a view to ascertaining the contentions in appeal and the cross appeal No. 4 of 1951. Issue No. 1 raised was whether a partition amongst the Bhayats of Kera had taken place. This issue seems to have been raised on the contention of the appellants. It was found in the affirmative. This finding is not disputed in appeal. Second issue was about trial Court's jurisdiction as at the time the suit was instituted, Jadeja Court was functioning. This issue did not survive at the time of the trial. Third issue was about redemption piece-meal. The trial Court found this issue in the affirmative. This contention survives in appeal. Fourth issue was about Respondent's 21-3/7 per-cent share in the village. The trial Court found this issue in the affirmative. That contention is not raised by the appellants in their memo. It appears that respondent's father had made a testamentary disposition of his property by which the respondent was given only a right of maintenance. As it was joint family property, the testator had no right to make testamentary disposition in respect of it. That contention is not raised in appeal. Issue No. 6 was about inadequacy of Court fees. That contention is not raised in appeal. Issue No. 7 was about want of necessary parties. That contention is raised by the appellants in appeal. It is unnecessary to refer to issue Nos. 8 to 12 which the trial Court did not find necessary to decide.

It appears that a branch of Bhayats had further extended the period of the mortgage in Samvat 1967 for 81 years. It was therefore contended that the suit was premature and this contention was made subject matter of issue No. 12. As this contention is raised in appeal, it may be stated that it was a different branch and the period was extended to the extent of their share. It is for this reason that the trial Court found it unnecessary to record a finding on that issue. The trial Court found that the Respondent was liable to pay 16463 Kories as Kharajat for redemption of his share which was exclusive of his son's share viz.  $21\frac{3}{7} \times \frac{1}{2}$ : 10-5/7 per cent.

(5) Thus the contentions in appeal are as follows:—

1. Whether the Respondent was entitled to redemption piece-meal?
2. What share the Respondent and his son have got in the village?
3. Whether the Respondent was entitled to redeem the share of Punjajee in respect of which period was extended for 51 years in Samvat 1952?
4. Whether the suit was bad for want of necessary parties?
5. Whether Respondent was entitled to mesne profits?

(6) As the respondent was allowed redemption to the extent of 10-5/7 per-cent of share, he has preferred cross appeal No. 4 of 1951. The only question that arises for consideration in that cross appeal is whether the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the share of his son.

(7) The village was mortgaged in Samvat 1912 by all the then owners for 21 years. The mortgage was Vatantar. A Vatantar has all the characteristics of a usufructuary mortgage. The mortgagee was to remain in possession and enjoy rents and profits of the village for 21 years. The period of 21 years was not to be inclusive of famine years. Thus the period of 21 years did not expire till Samvat 1936, when respondent's predecessors-in-title executed a deed in favour of the mortgagee, for extension of the period for 25 years. It was stated in the deed that the executants had  $21\frac{3}{7}$  per cent share in the village. The respondent and his son, as members of a joint Hindu family, are the only persons representing that share on the date of the suit. As the period of 25 years expired long ago, the suit under appeal was brought for redemption.

(8) Apparently the respondent was suing to redeem piece-meal the mortgage of Samvat 1912. He was not entitled to do so under the provisions of the T. P. Act unless he showed that the mortgagee had acquired the share of one of the mortgagors. The appellants say that they had acquired 60 per cent of the share in the village. The respondent was therefore not only not bound to redeem the whole mortgage, but he was also not bound to redeem the whole share except 60 per cent share acquired. But when the mortgage was effected, T. P. Act was not applicable. In this part of the country, many such vatantar mortgages were executed. Some co-sharers used to extend the period of the mortgage. As other co-sharers were not entitled to redeem the whole mortgage, by usage they redeemed their share on payment of proportionate mortgage amount. The usage is stated in section 668 of the book titled a Digest of local customs and usages published under authority of His Highness the Maharao of Kutch and regarded as having force of law. It is stated in section 668 that when some of co-mortgagors extend the period of a vatantar, other co-mortgagors would be entitled to redeem to the extent of their share. The provision made was based on the principle that integrity of the mortgage was broken. It follows that the mortgagors extending the period will also be entitled to redeem their share separately. This contention, therefore, fails. I do not see how the appellants, who have acquired 60 per cent of the share in the mortgage security and who have acquired extension of the period of the mortgage from other mortgagor sharers are interested in raising this contention, except to raise a technical bar to the suit.

(9) Next contention is about the share of the Respondent. The appellants mortgagees, having accepted in the conveyance executed in their favour that the Respondent's predecessor-in-title represented  $21\frac{3}{7}$  per cent share are now estopped from denying it. The appellants had, however, acquired 60 per cent of share and they raised the contention in the nature of paramount title. It was conceded that the contention should not be considered in this suit. Such a contention about title can properly be considered in a suit in which all Bhayats were parties. Thus the respondent is entitled to redeem the share admitted by the appellants without prejudice to the latter contending hereafter, as owners of 60 per cent share, that the former was not entitled to  $21\frac{3}{7}$  per cent share and that he was only entitled to  $16\frac{1}{2}$  per cent share.

(10) Coming to the last contention, it appears that one Punjajee was one of the executants of the deed of Samvat 1936. His widow, who inherited his share, further extended the period of the mortgage for 51 years, to the extent of her husband's share, in the year 1952. When the suit was instituted, the said period had not expired. The Respondent's contention was that the alienation by way of extension of the period was without legal necessity. Though it was neither alleged nor proved that Punjajee and his other co-executants were members of a joint Hindu family, the trial Court found that Faijiba was not entitled to make the alienation as she was a widow of a coparcener. It is true that there was no evidence aliunde about legal necessity except the recital in the deed. It was contended that the alienee was bound to adduce some independent evidence of existence of legal necessity. The transaction was effected in Samvat 1952. After 50 years, it is not possible to get evidence of necessity as it is not possible for the respondent to emphatically deny its existence. In such a case, Nagpur High Court in — 'Wawan v. Janabai', AIR 1951 Nag. 357(1) presumed existence of legal necessity. Mayne in his work on Hindu Law at page 791, tenth edition observes that after a long period has elapsed between the alienation and the suit, when all those who could have given evidence on the relevant points have grown old or passed away, a recital consistent with the probabilities and circumstances of the case assumes greater importance and presumptions are permissible to fill in details which have been effaced by time. The necessity for alienation stated was that Faijiba had to incur expenses for marriage of her daughter. It is common knowledge that among Jadejas, such expenditure has to be incurred. The trial Court was therefore wrong in holding that the respondent was entitled to redeem that share.

(11) The contention about necessary parties was raised as the respondent's share was to be determined. Otherwise, if a suit for redemption piece-meal was tenable, the other co-sharers are not necessary parties to the suit. It was contended that for taking account of costs incurred on the entire security, they were necessary parties. Where redemption piece-meal could be had and the mortgagee who has to render account is on the record, it is not necessary to make the other co-sharers parties though interested in the proper taking of accounts, as the mortgagee, who has by acquiring share of a mortgagor enabled the other mortgagors to sue for redemption piece-meal, cannot complain that he would have to lead the same evidence and get the said question determined again when other mortgagors sued to redeem their shares. For this reason, other co-mortgagors are not necessary parties to the suit.

(12) Last contention is about mesne profits. As the respondent who sued for redemption had not also sued for partition, the trial Court placed him in joint possession to the extent of his share. At the same time, the trial Court decreed mesne profits from the date of the suit. This was obviously wrong. The appellants were not in wrongful possession of the property to the extent of the Respondent's share on the date of the suit and for that matter till the date of the preliminary decree. Possession of a possessory mortgagee so long as his right to possession subsists is not wrongful except when valid tender under section 84 of the T. P. Act is made or when it is found that the mortgage was satisfied on the date of the suit. In other cases, possession will be wrongful when the mortgagor becomes entitled to possession when mortgage amount ascertained is paid to the mortgagee or in Court for payment to him. Thus the order for mesne profits was wrong.

(13) Result is that the respondent will be entitled to redeem 8 13/14 per cent of the mortgage on payment of 7294 Kories for his share of the mortgage amount and 13052 Kories for his share of the costs incurred. The order as to mesne profits in the trial Court's decree is set aside. Subject to these variations, the decree of the trial Court is confirmed and the appeal is dismissed. Appellants to pay a moiety of the taxed costs of the Respondent and to bear their own.

Rules of limitation are procedural rules having retrospective operation but not such as to defeat a substantive or vested right except where expressly so provided.

In the case of a decree passed by the Final Appellate Court in Kutch on 21-5-1947, there was no law of limitation which compelled the decree-holder to seek execution within three years. When the Indian Limitation Act was applied to Kutch by the Merged States (Laws) Act, 1949, the effect was to curtail the period for the exercise of the right by providing a period of three years computed from 21-5-47. The decree-holder had time to make an application for execution. His vested right was not defeated by the successive Acts providing for limitation brought in force in Kutch after the passing of the decree. Thus the execution application filed for the first time on 21-7-1950 was governed by Art. 182(2), Lim. Act and was clearly barred. Case law referred.

ORDER: This is an application for revision of a decree of the District Court, Kutch, in Civil Appeal No. 180 of 1951, confirming an order made by the Subordinate Judge, Bhuj dismissing execution petition No. 43 of 1950, as barred by limitation.

(2) The applicant sued the opponent to recover a sum of money. The trial Court partially decreed the suit. The applicant unsuccessfully preferred appeals to the then Varishtha and Hazur Courts. The Hazur Court dismissed the second appeal on 21-5-47. The execution petition was filed on 20-7-50, that is one month and 29 days beyond the period of three years prescribed by Article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act. Both the Courts below held the execution petition barred by limitation.

(3) The only question to be considered in this application for revision is whether the Courts below were right in holding that the execution petition was barred by limitation. On 20-7-50, the Indian Limitation Act as applied by the Merged States (Laws) Act 1949 was in force in the State of Kutch. The date of the decree was 21-5-47. If the Act can be retrospectively applied, the execution petition would obviously be barred under Article 182. The trial Court assumed that the Act applied and considered a question of exclusion of time under section 12 of the Act. The District Court thought that the Hazur Order No. 322 dated 10-11-45 prescribed a period of three years for making an application for execution. The District Court therefore considered the questions of exclusion of time under section 12 of the Act and of condonation of delay under section 5 of the said Act.

(4) By the Hazur Order in question, provisions of section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure were introduced in the Kutch Civil Procedure Code. Provision was also made for enforcement of causes becoming either barred or getting lesser period than 12 years due to new law made. The said Order did not prescribe a period of limitation, as is provided by Article 182 of the Act, for making an application for execution of a decree. Obviously, if the order made remained in force on 21-5-47, the question would have arisen for consideration on an application for execution of the decree made beyond a period of 12 years computed from that date. It is surprising that this apparent distinction was not appreciated by the learned District Judge.

(5) The question of exclusion of time and condonation of delay urged by the applicant and considered by the learned District Judge did not arise. It appears that according to the prevailing practice in the State, formal decrees were not drawn. The applicant had to obtain a copy of the decree of the trial Court, as provided by the Code of Civil Procedure, for making an application for execution. As he applied for a certified copy on 17-5-48, he claimed exclusion of time, presumably from 21-5-47 to 17-5-48, as time requisite for obtaining a certified copy of the decree under section 12 of the Act. It is apparent that provisions of Section 12(2) of the Act are not applicable to applications for execution of decrees. The learned District Judge thought such exclusion of time was not contemplated by the old law in force in the Kutch State on 10-11-45 (date of the Hazur Order) and under the existing rules made on the analogy of Bombay State practice, exclusion was available for reasonable period. In 1945, there was no law of limitation in force in Kutch and hence no question of exclusion of time arose. There is no Bombay State Practice and no rules on the analogy of any such practice are made. What the learned District Judge meant was the judicial interpretation placed by the High Court of Bombay on the expression 'time requisite' used in section 12 (2) of the Act. Thus question of exclusion of time did not arise. The learned District Judge, then considered the question about condonation of delay and remarked that as on application of the Act, period was extended upto 1952, it would be legislating to grant any such concession. If period for making an application for execution was not extended with the result that it became barred on a certain date, a question of condonation could be considered provided it could be so done under section 5 of the Act. Section 5 does not provide for an application for execution and by no enactment in force, the provisions of the said section are made applicable to applicants for execution. The question therefore did not arise. This would have become apparent to the learned District Judge on perusal of the plain provisions of section 5 of the Act.

(6) Thus the learned District Judge did not address himself to the only question arising in the case. That question is whether the Act can be retrospectively applied to the applicant's execution petition. It was observed by this Court in — 'Maganlal Kunverji v. Mulji Budha', AIR 1951 Kutch 15, that the Law of Limitation was a remedial one and the general rule was that every suit would be governed by the law of limitation in force on the date of its institution. Prima facie, therefore, Article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act as applied by the Merged States (Laws) Act is applicable to the applicant's execution proceeding. This is due to a canon of construction that rules of limitation are procedural rules having retrospective operation but not such as to defeat a substantive or vested right except where expressly so provided. On 21-5-47 there was no law of limitation which compelled the applicant to seek execution within three years. The applicant had therefore a vested right to execute the decree and according to the law then in force, the vested right could be exercised at any time. What the Indian Limitation Act as applied by the Merged States (Laws) Act did was to curtail the period for the exercise of the right by providing a period of three years computed from 21-5-47. If the right was defeated, that is, if the right could not have been exercised on the date the Act was made applicable, it could be urged that the Act could not have retrospective operation so as to defeat a vested or a substantive right.

(7) In — 'Gopeshwar Pal v. Jiban Chandra', AIR 1914 Cal 806 (FB), it was observed that intention to take away a vested right without compensation or any saving was not to be imputed to the Legislature unless it be expressed in equivocal terms. In — 'Raja of Pittapur v. Gani Venkata Subba Row', AIR 1916 Mad 912, it was observed that where an Act contained provisions for limitation of suits which took away vested rights of suits without providing any equivalent remedy, the provisions must be construed to have been enacted subject to the implied exception that they were not to extend to such vested rights of suit which were to continue subject to the rules of limitation. In — 'Badri Narain Singh v. Ganga Singh', AIR 1937 Pat. 605 it was held that when the Legislature did not expressly state that a vested right was taken away, the new period of limitation was to be dealt with as a matter of procedure. What happened in the present case was that the Indian Limitation Act as applied by the Merged States (Laws) Act prescribed a period of limitation for making an application for execution, while according to the law in force on 21-5-47, there was no such period prescribed. In such a case the Act will apply with retrospective effect if on the date the Act was applied, the right to make an application for execution was not taken away. The application of the shorter period of limitation, not taking away the vested right, is procedural and it applies with retrospective operation. In between two Acts had come into force. One was the Kutch Limitation Act 1948. This Act prescribed the same period prescribed by Article 182 for making application for execution of a decree. The Act made no provision for applications for execution which though not becoming barred due to the Act having been brought into force had little period of limitation left. On that day an application for execution by the applicant was not barred and the law providing limitation will be regarded as procedural having retrospective effect. Same was the case when the Indian Limitation Act was applied by the Application of Laws Order, 1949. When each of these Acts was made applicable, the applicant had time to make an application for execution. His vested right was not defeated. Hence the answer to the question is that the Act will apply retrospectively to the application for execution filed by the applicant. Thus the Applicant's application on the day it was filed was barred by limitation.

(8) The applicant made a grievance that the Varishtha Court has not made a decree. The practice was to make a bill of costs only. The position cannot be better than a decree not drawn. A person desiring to execute a decree within time has to apply for a copy. Thus the contention based on the grievance cannot be accepted.

(9) Result is that the application fails and it is dismissed with costs.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115 — Decision on question on res judicata is case decided — (Kutch (Province) Courts Order (1948), S. 35).

A decision of a preliminary issue going to the root of the case, such as limitation, jurisdiction or res judicata, may result in dismissal of a suit or in proceeding further with it. No order is required to proceed further with the suit; but the decision itself is to be regarded as an interlocutory order. Decision on such issue amounts to "case decided". (b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115 — Exercise of jurisdiction not vested — Decision of preliminary issue.

Where a court has jurisdiction to decide an issue, it does not act illegally or with material irregularity because it decides a case wrongly. The question is not whether the decision was right or wrong. The question is whether by the erroneous decision, the trial court vested itself with jurisdiction which but for the decision it could not have. So long as the subordinate court does not invest itself with jurisdiction and decide the suit, it cannot be said that it has exercised jurisdiction not vested, simply because it decided a preliminary issue, when it had jurisdiction to decide that issue. It is thus evident that by a mere decision of a preliminary issue, the trial Court does not exercise the jurisdiction not vested in it and it cannot be said that by deciding it, it exercises the jurisdiction not so vested or acts in the exercise of its jurisdiction with material irregularity. (c) Kutch (Province) Courts Order (1948), S. 35 — It is not necessary that court should have acted illegally — It is enough if there is important question of law — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115).

The important distinction between para. 35 of the Kutch Courts Order, 1948 and Section 115, Civil P. C., (Section 115, Civil P. C. having been expressly made inapplicable to the State of Kutch) is that under the Kutch (Province) Courts Order, 1948, S. 35, it is not necessary for the exercise of the powers of revision to show that the Subordinate Court had acted illegally in the exercise of its jurisdiction. If the High Court thinks that there is an important question of law which requires further consideration and other conditions laid down in sub-para. 1 (b) of S. 35, are complied with, powers of revision can be exercised and for that purpose, an application for revision has to be treated as an appeal. ORDER: This is an application for revision of a decision that opponent 1's suit was not barred by the principle of Res Judicata.

(2) The facts are that opponent 1 sued the applicant and other opponents for recovery of the amount due on the basis of a mortgage alleged to have been effected in Samvat 1939 in favour of opponent 1's predecessor-in-title by the predecessors-in-title of the applicant and other opponents. The defence, relevant for disposal of this application was denial of the alleged mortgage and a contention that in view of the dismissal of a previous suit brought by the collaterals of the opponent 1, the consideration of the question of the alleged mortgage was barred by the principle of Res Judicata. The trial Court decided this contention as a preliminary issue against the applicant. Hence the present application for revision of the said decision.

(3) A preliminary objection was raised that an application for revision was not competent. The question for consideration is whether a decision of a preliminary issue is a case decided within the meaning of that expression used in para 35 of the Kutch (Province) Courts Order, 1948 and Section 115, C. P. C. A decision of a preliminary issue going to the root of the case, such as limitation, jurisdiction or res judicata, may result in dismissal of a suit or in proceeding further with it. No order is required to proceed further with the suit; but the decision itself is to be regarded as an interlocutory order. Such orders are to be distinguished from interlocutory orders made from day to day in suits and proceedings which are not made appealable by the Code. There is a conflict of Judicial opinion on the question whether interlocutory orders could be made subject matters of applications for revision as 'cases decided'.

In — 'Murarji Surji v. Jayant Trading Corporation Ltd., Bombay', AIR 1949 Kutch 5, this Court held that a case could be a part of a proceeding in a suit and that decision of a question whether plaint should be rejected or returned to the plaintiff for want of jurisdiction was a case decided within the meaning of that expression used in para 35 of the Kutch Courts Order, 1948.

The question again came for consideration before this Court in — 'Ravji v. Premji', AIR 1952 Kutch 32, but it was not decided. However, it was observed that it was inexpedient to interfere with such decisions in the exercise of the powers of revision. It is unnecessary to consider in this case whether the view expressed by this Court in — 'Muralji's case' be revised. Treating the decision of the preliminary issue as a case decided, the question to be considered is whether the application falls within the purview of para 35 of the Kutch (Province) Courts Order 1948.

(4) It is apparent that the trial Court exercised the jurisdiction vested in it. It had jurisdiction to decide the issue and it cannot be said that it had exercised the jurisdiction not vested. The contention, however, was that by erroneously deciding the issue, the trial Court invested itself with jurisdiction which in law it did not possess and in support of this contention reliance was placed on — 'Joychandlal v. Kamalaksha', AIR 1949 P. C. 239.

In that case it was pointed out by the Judicial Committee that on an erroneous decision resulting in a Subordinate Court exercising a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or failing to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, a case for revision arose. At the same time, the principle that a Subordinate Court did not act illegally or with material irregularity because it decided a case wrongly was accepted as firmly established. It is thus clear that the question is not whether the decision was right or wrong. The question is whether by the erroneous decision, the trial Court vested itself with jurisdiction which but for the decision it could not have. In laying down the principle stated above, their Lordships cited two cases by way of illustrations. One of the two cases was — 'Hari Bhikaji v. Naro Vishvanath', 9 Bom. 432. It is clear from the facts of the Bombay case that on finding that the suit was not barred by res judicata, the Subordinate Court vested itself with jurisdiction to decide the appeal and decided it. The decision right or wrong could not be interfered with in revision. But if it was found that the question of res judicata was erroneously decided, by doing so, the subordinate Court invested itself with jurisdiction to decide the appeal. It is apparent that so long as the subordinate court did not invest itself with jurisdiction and decide the suit, it cannot be said that it has exercised jurisdiction not vested, simply because it decided a preliminary issue, as, it had jurisdiction to decide that issue. Thus it is clear that though it be accepted that decision of a preliminary issue is a case decided, by doing so, a subordinate court does not exercise the jurisdiction not vested. That decision may be right or wrong. But if the subordinate court on deciding that issue decides the suit, by erroneous decision of the issue, it invests itself with jurisdiction which it would not have to do if the issue was correctly decided. It is thus evident that by a mere decision of a preliminary issue, the trial Court did not exercise the jurisdiction not vested in it and it cannot be said that by deciding it, it exercised the jurisdiction not so vested or acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction with material irregularity.

(5) However, the important distinction between para 35 of the Kutch Courts Order, 1948 and Section 115, C. P. C., (Section 115, C. P. C. having been expressly made inapplicable to the State of Kutch) is that under the Kutch (Province) Courts' Order, 1948, it is not necessary for the exercise of the powers of revision to show that the Subordinate Court had acted illegally in the exercise of its jurisdiction. What is provided in the Kutch (Province) Courts' Order 1948 is that if this Court thinks that there is an important question of law which requires further consideration and other conditions laid down in Sub-para 1(b) are complied with, powers of revision can be exercised and for that purpose, an application for revision be treated as an appeal. Thus, on the assumption that decision of the preliminary issue was a case decided, it is necessary to consider whether there was an important question of law requiring further consideration.

An issue of res judicata may require further consideration, provided, it is important. In this case, it can hardly be said that it is important. On the face of it, it is clear that the previous suit was instituted by the Collaterals of Opponent 1. Opponent 1 who was not a party to the previous suit cannot be bound by any decision arrived at in it. It was not alleged that plaintiffs in the suit were acting in a representative capacity. Thus the question decided by the trial Court was simple. It has often been remarked that such contentions should not be tried as preliminary issues. The trial Court must have thought that its decision might go at the root of the case. On facts clearly stated, the trial Court decided the issue in the manner done. It was urged that the bond on which the collateral sued was now made a subject-matter of the present suit. If it can be so done according to law, there is no reason why it should not be so done and how for that reason a contention that the suit is barred by the principle of res judicata can be raised. It was contended that the applicant raised the question of estoppel. If such a contention was raised, it is not yet decided and this Court is not called upon to consider it.

(6) Result is that the application fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Section 528 does not in terms provide that an application for transfer be made to the Magistrate of the District under section 528, before an application under that section can be made to the High Court. There is no bar, according to law, to the making of an application for transfer to the High Court under section 526, directly without having made a similar application under section 528 to the Magistrate of the District. Where the law provides concurrent remedy, a party may move a higher or lower tribunal for obtaining relief. ORDER: This is an application under section 526 Cr. P. C., for transfer of a case pending before the Additional Magistrate, First Class, Anjar, to any Magistrate, First Class, Bhuj on the grounds stated in clauses (a), (b), (d) and (e) of sub-section (1) of the section.

(2) A preliminary objection raised for consideration was whether it was incumbent on the applicant to have moved the Magistrate of his District under section 528 Cr. P. C., before approaching this Court under section 526 Cr. P. C. Apprehending that such an objection be raised, it was stated in the application that the applicant had moved the Magistrate of the District who had rejected the application under section 526 Cr. P. C. It was added that rejection of the application took place before 24th March 1952. Since then, the case was heard for two days. It was orally stated that an adjournment was obtained under sub-section (3) of section 526 for making an application to this Court. It was admitted that some of the grounds stated in the present application were the same urged in the application to the District Magistrate. The question whether those grounds can be urged in support of the present application does not for the present arise for consideration. It was not contended that this application should be regarded as one made on rejection of the same by the Magistrate of the District under Section 528 Cr. P. C.

(3) Section 528 Cr. P. C. does not in terms provide that an application for transfer be made to the Magistrate of the District under section 528, before an application under that section can be made to the High Court. There is therefore no bar, according to law, to the making of an application for transfer to the High Court under section 526 Cr. P. C., directly without having made a similar application under section 528 Cr. P. C. to the Magistrate of the District. Where the law provides concurrent remedy, a party may move a higher or lower tribunal for obtaining relief. However, in the course of time, a practice grew up according to which High Courts did not ordinarily transfer a case pending before a Magistrate unless the party applying for transfer had moved the District Magistrate before going to the High Court, vide In Re. A Fonseca 6 Bom L. R. 480; — 'Ghulam Nabi v. Jamala', AIR 1923 Lah 685 (1); — 'Ravi Chander v. Sunder Singh', AIR 1925 All 640; — 'Mahomed Ramzan v. Emperor', AIR 1936 Sind 51; and — 'Bhagwat v. Emperor', AIR 1942 Oudh 429. The question is whether this Court should follow the practice.

(4) In considering the question, it will be proper to examine the grounds advanced in support of the practice. One ground stated is convenience. It would be more convenient to first go to the Magistrate of the District for transfer. Second is that a superior tribunal should not be approached for relief unless an inferior tribunal entitled to grant relief has refused it. In this connection, reference is made to the practice of applying to the local authorities (Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate) under section 436 Cr. P. C. before approaching directly to the High Court. As regards convenience, it is urged that applications of this type would be expeditiously disposed of by local authorities and that in many cases it would not be necessary to approach the High Court at all.

So far as this Court is concerned, a transfer application can be disposed of as expeditiously, if not with greater expedition, as would be done by local authorities. On the other hand, in majority of cases, orders made for or against by local authorities are likely to come for consideration of this Court by way of revision or on an application under section 526. As regards the second ground, it is apparent that it is always desirable that an inferior tribunal entitled to grant relief, should be approached in the first instance. But the question is whether this ground can be made a matter of practice and be held against an applicant who claims a right under law to obtain relief from the High Court. It is quite evident that to do so would be legislating and not administering the law as it stands. The Bombay High Court in 'Re. P. D. Shamdasani (No. 2)', A I R 1930 Bom 480 (F. B.) observed that if an accused person claimed the right to go direct to the High Court, his right as a matter of law could not be excluded. The rule of practice that for the exercise of powers in revision, the Sessions Court or the District Magistrate must be moved in the first instance is based on the fact that none of the local authorities is entitled to grant relief which can only be done by the High Court on a report containing recommendation made by them. It is supported on the ground of concurrent remedy and not concurrent jurisdiction to grant the relief sought, vide observations made in — 'Emperor v. Nandlal', 48 Bom L.R. 41 at p. 44 (F.B.). Such a practice cannot therefore be regarded as denying a right given by law as, eventually, the High Court decides the question whether relief be granted or not. That practice cannot be considered by way of an analogy in support of the practice under consideration.

(5) It was pointed out by the Learned Pleaders for the opponents that the practice was followed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Ajmer — 'S. R. Daruwala. v. Rex', AIR 1950 Ajmer 19(1) and by the High Court of Rajasthan — 'Nathuram v. State', AIR 1951 Raj 158. In the first mentioned case, there is only a reiteration of the practice without any discussion. In the second, the practice was laid down as having the force of law. It was contended by the learned pleaders for the opponents that the Bombay High Court, in the Full Bench case referred to above, thought that incorporation of sub-section (8) of Section 526 in 1923 made all the difference but in the said sub-section, there was nothing which changed the law and practice which was prevalent in all the High Courts before this sub-section was introduced in the Code.

The Bombay view, as I read the judgment, was based on the fact that practice could not be allowed to exclude a right expressly conferred by law. At the same time, the previous ruling was distinguished on the ground that it was given before amendment of the Section in 1923. The amendment effected was compulsory adjournment which was no part of the essence of obligation laid upon the Court, the obligation being that the party should have reasonable time to move the High Court and to obtain its orders. In — 'Nathoomal v. Emperor', AIR 1926 Sind 137, the learned Judicial Commissioner pointed out that in any case, it was competent under the sub-section before its amendment in 1923, before granting adjournment, to proceed with the case upon a point at which the accused would be called on for their defence. The Legislature by re-enacting sub-section (3) made it clear that a party interested was entitled as a matter of right to approach the High Court for transfer and this by implication meant that it was not a right which could only be exercised on a previous application made under section 528.

The Sind ruling was explained by the Rajasthan High Court on the ground that the main reason which led the learned Judicial Commissioner to hold the view that a party could apply direct to the High Court was that trial would be unnecessarily delayed. But it was observed by the learned Judicial Commissioner that there was nothing in the Statute which rendered it necessary to move the District or Sub-Divisional Magistrate in the first instance. It was observed by the learned Judges of the Rajasthan High Court that there was nothing in S. 526, Criminal P. C. which said that a party had a right to go to the High Court direct. With due deference, it must be stated that, when the High Court and the local authorities have concurrent jurisdiction, the right cannot be gain-said. If there was any doubt about the existence of the right, it was made clear by providing for compulsory adjournment.

The Sind view and the Bombay view were expressed in 1926 and 1930 respectively. If the Legislature intended to recognise the practice, it would have provided in the amendment effected in 1932 A. D., that no such adjournment shall be granted unless the party applying for it had moved the local authorities in the first instance. It is true that in the Bombay case, the order of the Presidency Magistrate, granting time to apply to the Chief Presidency Magistrate was wrong. But the application was made for revision of the order, as the applicant wanted adjournment to move the High Court and the question that arose was whether the applicant was entitled to do so directly.

(6) I therefore hold that a party is entitled as of right to apply for transfer to the High Court directly and it is not necessary according to law that he should first apply in that behalf to the District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate of the District under Section 528. I further hold that the practice that an application under Section 526 would not be entertained unless an applicant had first moved the District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate of the District under Section 526, excluding as it does the aforesaid right, cannot be accepted and followed by this Court. The preliminary objection is therefore not sustained. The application will be heard on merits.

(7) As regards the second preliminary objection, it is evident that Shri Parmanand, the learned Advocate appearing for the applicant should have signed the application as Supreme Court Advocate so as to make it clear that he was entitled to appear as a matter of right. The contention that under Section 495, Criminal P. C., the learned Advocate was not entitled to conduct the prosecution unless permitted to do so by the Magistrate, cannot be urged in respect of an appearance before this Court.

JUDGMENT: This is an application for revision of a finding in consolidated suits Nos. 74 and 75 of 1950, recorded by the Civil Judge (S. D.) on a preliminary issue relating to jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The suits were brought against the defendant applicant in the trial Court on the ground that at the time of the commencement of the suits, he used to actually and voluntarily reside in Kutch. The question was important as plaintiffs would not be entitled to the larger period of limitation if the trial Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suits. The trial Court, on the evidence led in the case came to the conclusion that the defendant-applicant was residing at both the places viz., in Kutch and in Bombay and found the issue in the affirmative. It is against this finding that the applicant has approached this Court in revision under para. 35 of the Kutch Province (Courts) Order, 1948.

(2) Whether a finding on a preliminary issue can be regarded as a 'case decided' within the meaning of that expression used in S. 115, Civil P. C. and S. 35, Kutch Province (Courts) Order, 1948, is a question which will have to be considered in a proper case in view of the sharp conflict of judicial opinion on the subject. A similar question arose before this Court in — 'Murarji v. Jayant Trading Corporation Ltd., Bombay', AIR 1949 Kutch 5, and was decided in the affirmative. In the judgment there was no discussion of the views held by different High Courts. It may, therefore, be necessary to consider the question in future as it arises. This case can be decided on the assumption that the finding amounts to a case decided.

(3) The trial Court had jurisdiction to decide the question and it cannot be said that it acted illegally or with material irregularity because it decided wrongly (as contended by the applicant) the question within its competence. No doubt, S. 35, Kutch Province (Courts) Order, 1948 does not provide for revising cases in which the subordinate Court has acted illegally in the exercise of jurisdiction. It makes a broader provision that revisional powers can be exercised where there is an important question of law which in the opinion of the Judicial Commissioner requires further consideration. The question of jurisdiction in this case was a mixed question of law and facts. The applicant as well as the opponents can respectively assail and support those findings of facts. Thus the question is not a pure question of law.

(4) The applicant's main contention was that by erroneously deciding that it had jurisdiction, the trial Court exercised jurisdiction not vested in it by law. An authority in support of this contention is — 'National Petroleum Co. Ltd. v. Meghraj', AIR 1937 Nag 334. In that case it was held that as the lower Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit, it acted without jurisdiction in proceeding to try it. It is important to note that only question of jurisdiction was decided. It is true that an erroneous decision resulting in a subordinate Court exercising jurisdiction not vested in it by law will give rise to a case for revision. What is, however, necessary is that the erroneous decision as to jurisdiction must result in exercise of the jurisdiction by the subordinate Court. It follows that where there is only erroneous decision not followed by exercise of jurisdiction, no revision can be entertained as against the erroneous decision as to jurisdiction on the ground of acting illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction and no question of actually having exercised jurisdiction not vested arises.

(5) The view expressed in the concluding portion of the last para receives support from the decision of the Privy Council in — 'Joychand v. Kamalaksha', AIR 1949 PC 239. In that case reference was made to the previous pronouncement by the Board in — 'Rajah Amir Hasan Khan v. Sheo Baksha Singh', 11 Ind App 237 (PC) and — 'Balkrishna Udayar

v. Vasudeo Aiyar', 44 Ind App 261 (PC), that a subordinate Court did not act illegally or with material irregularity because it decided wrongly a matter within its competence and it was pointed out that if the erroneous decision resulted in the subordinate Court exercising jurisdiction not vested in it or failing to exercise jurisdiction so vested, a case for revision arose under sub-cl. (a) or sub-cl. (b). The learned pleader for the applicant relied on — 'Naryudu v. Venkata Ramanamurthi', AIR 1950 Mad 158. What is essential is that the subordinate Court by its erroneous decision must have vested itself with jurisdiction which it did not possess. It follows that mere erroneous decision is not enough. The erroneous decision must lead to the subordinate Court exercising jurisdiction which if there was no erroneous decision, it would not have been exercised. Viewed in this light, the decision in the Madras case cited above, following the Privy Council case in — 'Joychand v. Kamalaksha', does not help the applicant as in that case jurisdiction which the subordinate Court had not was exercised by deciding the suit.

(6) Result is that the application fails on the ground that revision is not competent and it is dismissed with costs.

An accused was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 2 years and to pay fine of Rs. 10,000 or in default further imprisonment for 9 months. He was released on bail on furnishing surety who executed a bond for Rs. 10,000 for stay of realisation of fine during the pendency of appeal. On dismissal of appeal, the surety was called upon to get the amount of fine for the accused or to pay it himself, while the accused was undergoing imprisonment. The surety objected to the recovery of fine under S. 386, Cr. P. C. and also questioned the validity of the surety bond.

Held (1) that the proviso to S. 386(1), Criminal P. C. was not applicable as accused had not undergone punishment in lieu of fine and that so long as imprisonment in default to pay fine was not wholly undergone, fine could be realised in the manner provided in the sub-section.

(Para 5)

(2) that the Judicial Commissioners' Court had inherent power to order stay of realisation of fine on furnishing security and that there was nothing illegal in that order. AIR 1945 PC 94, Disting. (Para 7)

(3) Further that the forms in the Code are to be used as provided in S. 555 but they are not supposed to be exhaustive. A bond taken under the Code is a bond taken in accordance with the provisions contained in the Code and hence the security bond which was executed under the order passed in exercise of the inherent powers of the Court was one under the Code and as such was valid. The fact that there was no specific provision in the Code for taking such security would not render it invalid or illegal. (Para 8)

ORDER: The facts giving rise to the present application for revision of an order dated 14-3-52, made by the Additional Sessions Judge, Kutch, briefly stated, are as follows:

(2) One Manilal Gokal along with others was convicted in Sessions Case No. 27 of 1949 for offences punishable under Ss. 411 and 414, I.P.C., and was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 2 years and to pay a fine of Rs. 10,000/- or in default to undergo further rigorous imprisonment for 9 months. Manilal Gokal preferred criminal appeal No. 6 of 1950 against his order of conviction and sentence to this Court and applied for being released on bail. This Court made the following order below Manilal's application for bail:

"Release appellant on bail of Rs. 10,000 with two sureties of like amount together. Trial Court shall stay realisation of fine on security to its satisfaction."

It seems that the trial Court directed Manilal to furnish a surety for Rs. 10,000/- for 'stay of realisation of fine'. Manilal furnished the present applicant as surety and the latter executed a bond for Rs. 10,000/- binding himself to pay the fine of Rs. 10,000 if Manilal made a default.

(3) On dismissal of appeal preferred by Manilal, the present applicant was called upon by a notice to get the amount of fine paid by Manilal failing which he (applicant) should pay it himself. The applicant by his written statement dated 14-3-52 contended that the bond taken from him was not in compliance with the order made by this Court; under Criminal P. C., no such bond could be taken and therefore it was illegal and unenforceable; under S. 426, Criminal P. C., Court had no jurisdiction to make an order directing an accused person to furnish such a security; under S. 386, Criminal P. C., the amount of fine could not be recovered except for special reasons so long as a convicted person was undergoing sentence of imprisonment.

(4) All the contentions raised by the applicant were summarily disposed of by the Additional Sessions Judge as under:

"Applicant stood as surety for the fine imposed on the accused & not as surety for suspension of the sentence. Applicant has passed a bond in the presence of the Court to pay the fine of the accused. According to it (bond) the Court is entitled to recover the fine of the accused from him....."

The applicant was therefore called upon to pay the fine within 4 days failing which it was ordered that the amount of fine would be recovered by attachment of his property and by other lawful means.

(5) The applicant has therefore preferred the present appln. for revision requesting this Court to consider the legality & propriety of the order made by the Additional Sessions Judge and set it aside. The application was supported on the same grounds urged before the lower court. I take up for consideration the last mentioned contention in para 2 above first. The contention was that the convict Manilal was undergoing imprisonment and hence in the absence of any special circumstances, there was no question of recovering fine. In support of this contention reliance was placed on S. 386, Criminal P. C. That Section prescribes procedure for recovery of fine to which an offender has been sentenced. In the proviso to sub-s. (1) of that Section, it is provided that if the offender has undergone whole of the sentence in default to pay fine, no Court shall issue a warrant mentioned in the Sub-Section unless for special reasons to be recorded in writing it considered necessary to do so. It is an admitted fact that when notice was issued on the applicant, Manilal had not undergone sentence of imprisonment in lieu of fine. Hence the proviso to the Sub-section is not applicable. So long as imprisonment in default to pay fine is not wholly undergone, fine can be realised in the manner provided in the Sub-Section. This contention therefore fails.

(6) It was submitted that the order of the Court reproduced in para 2 above, meant that if the offender did not pay fine he had to appear for undergoing imprisonment in default and the security was ordered for that purpose. It was therefore contended that the bond taken by the lower Court was not in conformity with the order made by this Court. The first part of the order of this Court provides for releasing Manilal on bail. When an accused person convicted of an offence is sentenced to a substantive term of imprisonment and also to a term of imprisonment in default to pay fine, the order of bail made by an appellate Court is both for the substantive term of imprisonment and for the term of imprisonment in default to pay fine. Such a person cannot be asked to undergo imprisonment in default to pay fine though he is bailed out. It cannot be urged that he is bailed out for the substantive sentence only. Though such a person is bailed out, fine can be recovered from him in the manner provided in S. 386, Cr. P. C. Under S. 426, Cr. P. C., execution of sentence or order appealed against can be suspended. The word 'sentence' means not only substantive term of imprisonment but also sentence of fine. This Court therefore passed an order for suspension of the sentence. So far as sentence of imprisonment both substantive and in default to pay fine, was concerned, this Court passed an order for bail. As regards the sentence of fine which can be recovered despite furnishing bail as per first part of the order, this Court ordered suspension by directing the lower Court to stay realisation of fine on the applicant furnishing security. It is thus evident that the security to be furnished was not for the appearance of the appellant. For appearance, to undergo the substantive imprisonment as well the imprisonment in default to pay fine, bail was taken. The persons standing as sureties in respect of the order of bail had only to produce the appellant for undergoing imprisonment as provided in S. 499, Cr. P. C. or else to pay the penalty. The applicant who stood as surety for payment of fine had to see that the appellant paid the fine or else to pay the amount of fine as penalty. It cannot therefore be accepted that according to the order of this Court security to be taken for stay of realisation of fine was to produce the appellant for undergoing imprisonment in default to pay fine. It must therefore be held that the bond taken was in conformity with the order made by this Court.

(7) It was then contended that under S. 426, Cr. P. C., no such order to furnish security could be made and hence the order made by this Court was illegal. As stated in the preceding para, under S. 426, an order for suspension of sentence could be made and sentence means both imprisonment and fine. The section provides that when an order of suspension is made, the appellant may be released on bail or on his own bond, if he is in confinement. It is not provided that for suspension of the sentence of fine a security be taken. When fine can be recovered, it will be meaningless to pass an order for suspension of sentence of fine during the pendency of appeal, if the person in whose favour such an order is made cannot be asked to furnish security for payment of fine. This Court making an order for suspension of the sentence of fine had inherent power to have that order carried into effect, or to secure the ends of justice. The ends of justice required that if realisation of fine from a person from whom it could be immediately recovered be stayed, pending appeal by him, a security be taken to see that fine was paid on dismissal of appeal and confirmation of the order of fine. It was urged that chapter 39 together with S. 426 was intended to contain a complete and exhaustive statement of the powers of a High Court to grant bail and excluded existence of any additional inherent powers in a High Court relating to the subject of bail. Reliance was placed on — 'Jairam Das v. Emperor', 47 Bom L R 634 (P.C.). In that case it was held that after an appeal was disposed of by a High Court, it had no inherent power to grant bail to a convicted person desirous of preferring an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. It was in view of this pronouncement that sub-s. 2B was inserted by an amendment to S. 426. The Legislature by the amendment made recognised the existence of power. The ruling cited refers to grant of bail only and not to suspension of sentence of fine. I therefore hold that this Court has inherent power to order stay of realisation of fine on furnishing security. It is very rare that such orders are made. In the present case, there is nothing to show that fine could not have been realised from the appellant at that time. Hence, this Court ordering stay of realisation of fine had to provide for furnishing of security in the interest of justice. There was nothing illegal in such an order which could be made in the exercise of inherent power of the Court.

(8) It was then contended that under Criminal P. C. such a bond could not be taken. The applicant agreed to pay the amount of fine if the appellant failed to do so. There are various kinds of bonds provided in the Code. The bond under consideration is not one of these kinds. It cannot therefore be said that it was not a bond taken under the Code. The forms in the Code are to be used as provided in S. 555. They are not supposed to be exhaustive. A bond taken under the Code is a bond taken in accordance with the provisions contained in the Code. Under the Code an order for suspension of fine could be made. The order for security was made in the exercise of inherent power as stated in para 7 above. The security furnished should therefore be held to have been taken under the Code and therefore it is perfectly valid. The fact that there was no specific provision in the Code for taking such security will not render it invalid or illegal. This contention therefore fails.

(9) The Additional Sessions Judge did not follow the procedure prescribed in S. 514 of the Code. He seems to have thought that S. 547 was applicable. That Section provides for recovery of money other than a fine payable by virtue of an order made under the Code. In this case, what was payable was the sum of Rs. 10,000 as penalty as the applicant did not get the fine paid by the appellant. The sum of Rs. 10,000 was payable under the bond as appellant committed default in payment of fine. It was not directly payable by virtue of any order made under the Code such as payment of compensation, payment of maintenance, payment of subsistence charges to witnesses and so on. Unless the order of forfeiture was made, the Court was not entitled to recover the amount from the applicant. The condition in the bond that the applicant shall see to the payment of fine by the appellant is broken. The Lower Court shall therefore follow the aforesaid procedure before realisation of the amount from the applicant.

(10) The last contention urged was that this Court was not entitled to make any order for stay of fine. Fine was a sentence and suspension of sentence is provided in Section 426. This contention is against the plain provisions of S. 426, Criminal P. C. Suspension of the sentence of fine can be effected by ordering the Court who has to make recovery to stay its realisation pending appeal. If an appellate Court made such an order, fine can be realised despite an appeal preferred and if the order of conviction is set aside, apart from ignominy, harassment and inconvenience would be caused to an appellant who on appeal is found not guilty.

(11) Result is that the application fails and it must be dismissed. The Additional Sessions Judge shall follow the procedure provided in S. 514, Cr. P. C., in the light of the observations made in para 9 above.

The provision in rule 2 of Order 41 that an appellant shall not urge or be heard in support of any ground or objection not set forth in the memo of appeal does not apply to applications for revision which are governed by S. 115. When the applicant has prayed for a decree for certain amount claimed including interest that is sufficient to show that the applicant disputed the finding of the trial Court to the effect that she was not entitled to interest. It is true that where points of determination are raised and a particular point is not found therein, it may be presumed that it must have been not urged or given up. But where a Court does not raise points for determination and proceeds on an assumption that only question of limitation was to be considered no such presumption can be made. AIR 1950 Lah 126 Ref. (c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 34 — Interest before suit — Law in Kutch State — Limitation.

In Kutch State there was no law of limitation. But according to a book of Deshi Shiresta a suit for recovery of a personal debt could be brought within 35 years. One of the shirestas was that worth of a debt became lesser as it grew older and in case of old debts less than the Damdupat amount was awarded as interest. In one case decided by the Privy Council of the State in 1910 A. D. the principle was further developed and made into a working rule. It was explained that at 6 per cent interest would be equal to principal in about 16 years. As it took 16 years for the accumulated interest to be equal to the principal, within 16 years the creditor would lose all interest in a retrograde way and three years thereafter he would lose principal. So after the accumulated interest was equal to principal within a particular number of years, it would rateably be lessened for the period exceeding that period till nothing remained due for interest and after three years nothing would remain for principal. This is how the principle called 'Junvat' was applied in the matter of recovery of interest in case of old debts.

(d) Civil P. C. (1908) Pre., S. 34 — Law in Kutch State — Suit for recovery of debt — Application of Contract Act during pendency of suit.

As in Kutch State a suit could be held to have been filed in time without application of the Limitation Act, it would not be equitable to apply Contract Act and hold despite the shiresta in Kutch State that interest in case of a State claim be allowed. Reason is that though state claims were allowed, a negligent plaintiff was progressively deprived of the interest due. It is therefore equitable to hold that before the Contract Act was applied, the plaintiff had become disentitled to interest and she could not get revival of her right on the application of the Contract Act during the pendency of the suit. ORDER: This matter came for hearing before this Court again as per order passed in Review Application No. 2 of 1951. The applicant-plaintiff brought a suit to recover 1317-3/4 Kories for principal and an equal sum for interest from the opponent on the foot of a khata. Defence was that the suit is barred by Limitation and as the debt was an old one applicant was not entitled to interest. The trial court dismissed the suit holding it barred by limitation. It recorded a finding that as the debt was an old one, applicant was not entitled to recover interest. The District Court on appeal confirmed the decree of trial court on a finding that the suit was barred by Limitation.

This Court held that the suit was not barred by limitation. This Court therefore decreed the suit as prayed for without considering the question whether applicant was entitled to interest claimed. The opponent filed review application No. 2 of 1951. The review application was not allowed so far as other contentions were concerned. But it was allowed so far as this Court in the above judgment omitted to consider the question of interest. The matter has therefore come again before this court for hearing on the question of interest.

(2) The applicant's contention was that she was entitled to interest and hence the suit should be decreed as was done by this court by the judgment before review. The opponent's Learned Advocate raised a preliminary objection that the applicant having not raised a contention in his memo of revision Application that the Trial Court erred in holding that she was not entitled to recover interest was debarred from raising that contention. A review was granted at the instance of the opponent as this court in reversing the decree of the District Court had not considered the question of interest. So the only question to be considered in this revision application at this stage is whether the applicant was disentitled to interest on the ground that it was an old debt as held by the trial court.

It was urged that though review was allowed, it was open to the opponent to contend that the applicant was not entitled to urge anything after the finding of the trial court as that point was not raised in the memo of the application. The provision in R. 2, Order 41, C.P.C. that an appellant shall not urge or be heard in support of any ground or objection not set forth in the memo of appeal does not apply to applications for revision which are governed by S. 115, C. P. C. The applicant had prayed for a decree for the amount claimed and that was sufficient to show that she disputed the finding of the trial court that she was not entitled to interest.

(3) It was however contended that the applicant had abandoned this point in appeal as is evident from the judgment of the Appellate Court in which no specific point for determination covering this contention was raised and in which it was observed that besides limitation no other point was taken. In support of this contention reliance was placed on — 'Karim Bax v. Qadir Bakhsh', AIR 1950 Lah 126. It is true that where points for determination are raised and a particular point is not found therein it may be presumed that it must have been not urged or given up. It was contended that presumption became irrebuttable as no such point was mentioned in the memo of the application. But where a Court does not raise points for determination and proceeds on an assumption that only question of limitation was to be considered no such presumption can be made. The observation of the court of appeal referred to above must be taken to have been made in connection with the consideration of the question of limitation. It seems that the Appellate Court overlooked the fact that the Trial Court decided the question of interest against the applicant and this Court followed suit. The preliminary objection therefore fails.

(4) The debt was incurred many years before the suit was filed. The amount claimed for principal was due 35 years before the suit. In Kutch State there was no law of limitation. But according to a book of Deshi Shiresta a suit for recovery of a personal debt could be brought within 35 years. The Shirestas mentioned in this book though providing rules for guidance had acquired force of law. One of the shirestas was that worth of a debt became lesser as it grew older and in case of old debts less than the Damdupat amount was awarded as interest. Following this principle in some judgments of the highest court in the former Kutch State interest was not awarded. In one case decided by the Privy Council of the State in 1910 A. D. the principle was further developed and made into a working rule. It was explained that at 6 per cent interest would be equal to principal in about 16 years.

As it took 16 years for the accumulated interest to be equal to the principal, within 16 years the creditor would lose all interest in a retrograde way and three years thereafter he would lose principal. So after the accumulated interest was equal to principal within a particular number of years, it would rateably be lessened for the period exceeding that period till nothing remained due for interest and after three years nothing would remain for principal. This is how the principle called 'Junvat' was applied in the matter of recovery of interest in case of old debts. This principle had to be devised as ordinary law of limitation bars recovery of claims after some years, for instance three years from the date of the cause of action in case of personal debts according to Indian Law of Limitation, but the law in force in Kutch did not provide for limitation and it was only a shiresta which provided 35 years as the period of limitation.

The Learned Pleader for the applicant cited a recent case of the Privy Council of the State of the year 1942 A. D. But on a perusal of judgment in that case it does not appear that the principle was considered. The question came for consideration before this court in — 'Velji Girdhar v. Harakhbai', AIR 1951 Kutch 88. It was observed that the object of the rule being to prevent prejudice to the debtor by compelling the creditor to be diligent in recovering his debts it was obvious that case might be concerned, (sic) in which an application of the rule might hit the creditor unjustly when he had not been at fault. In that case dealings stopped in Samvat 1973. The original creditor died in Samvat 1977, survived by his minor son who in his turn died after four years survived by his mother. As against these facts, the debtor lived upto Samvat 1987. It was therefore held on the facts of the case that the debtor was not entitled to any indulgence.

In the present case the amount claimed for principal was found due in Samvat 1972. Though the original creditor died in Samvat 1975, a notice of demand was made in that very year by Jamnabai the mother of the plaintiff and widow of the creditor and the debtor in response to the notice made an acknowledgment of the debt for the balance due on account made in favour of Jamnabai and Devkibai, mother of the creditor. No steps were taken for recovery of the debt by Jamnabai and Devkibai in whose favour acknowledgment was made. Plaintiff explained that Devkibai treated Lilbai, possibly the mother of the debtor, as younger sister and hence no action was taken. This seems to be a mere inference of the plaintiff. The original debtor lived upto Samvat 1988 and yet no action was taken. For a period of 16 years after the death of the debtor no action was taken. Thus the facts of the present case are different from the facts of the reported case cited above. As there was no diligence in recovering the debt, it must be held that the trial court was right in holding that interest could not be allowed due to Junvat.

(5) One more contention that can be urged in this connection requires consideration. During the pendency of the suit, the Indian Contract Act became applicable to the State of Kutch. There was an implied agreement to pay interest and it was made specific in the acknowledgment. As shiresta was not law, it could not have been urged that application of the Indian Contract Act might defeat vested right acquired by law. But the fact is that both the Indian Contract Act and Indian Limitation Act were made applicable to the State of Kutch. If a suit could be held to have been filed in time without application of the Indian Limitation Act, it would not be equitable to apply Indian Contract Act and hold despite the shiresta, that interest in case of a stale claim be allowed. Reason is that though stale claims were allowed, a negligent plaintiff was progressively deprived of the interest due. It is therefore equitable to hold that before the Contract Act was applied, the plaintiff had become disentitled to interest and she cannot get revival of her right on the application of the Indian Contract Act during the pendency of the suit.

(6) Result is that application is partially allowed and the decrees passed by the Courts below are varied by substituting a decree for 1317½ Kories with interest at 6 per cent from the date of the suit and a moiety of the taxed costs of the suit, appeal and this application. The decree dismissing the suit for the remaining moiety claimed for interest is confirmed. The decree will be limited to the estate of the defendant's father in the defendant's hands.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 488 — Neglect or refusal to maintain — Failure to prove — Order for maintenance on ground of cruelty — Validity.

A Magistrate has jurisdiction to award maintenance to a wife under S. 488, Cr. P. C., if it is proved that the husband has refused or neglected to maintain her but not otherwise.

A wife applied under S. 488 for maintenance on the ground that her husband ill-treated her and left her. It was not her case that she was forced to leave her husband due to his cruel treatment. In the proceedings the husband offered to take her back but she refused to return unconditionally. The Magistrate without deciding the main question whether there was refusal or neglect to maintain the wife, ordered maintenance on the ground that the husband was guilty of cruel conduct and that the wife was justified in refusing to return to him unconditionally.

Held that the order could not be sustained as it was based on the supposition that she was compelled by cruelty to go away, a case which she herself had pleaded nowhere in the proceedings.

Held also that in considering the question of cruelty the Magistrate was not justified in taking into consideration the evidence of cruelty of the husband prior to a compromise between them under which the wife had returned to her husband. (Para 6)

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 488 — Nature of order that can be passed.

Section 488 authorises the Magistrate to award only monthly payments for maintenance. An order directing the husband to provide for the wife's residence is illegal as being in contravention of the terms of S. 488. (Para 7)

Kundanlal J. Dholakia, for Applicant; Nana-lal V. Bhatt, for Opponent.

ORDER: The opponent preferred an application against the present applicant under S. 288 claiming maintenance and separate residence and a return of her stridhan clothes and ornaments. Her case was that a year after her marriage which took place in st. 2005, the opponent's sister and her husband came to live with them. Thereafter under the instigation of his mother and sister, the present applicant began to treat her with cruelty. On one occasion he beat and turned her out of the house by taking her to her cousin Laxmigar's. The dispute was, however, settled through the intervention of the caste and a compromise Ex. P. 1 was effected. Within two months thereafter the present applicant again turned her out, took her at night to her brother Chimangar's after taking all her stridhan clothes and ornaments and left her there. Her case is that the applicant had refused to take her back thereafter.

(2) The applicant's defence was a denial of cruelty or beating. He contended that the present opponent had gone away to her brother's of her own accord. He offered by his written statement to maintain her if she returned to him but pleaded inability to give her separate maintenance. He also contended that an order directing him to provide residence to her could not be made in proceedings under S. 488.

(3) It appears that during the proceedings before the Magistrate, the opponent offered to return to the applicant provided the latter gave security against future illtreatment. Nothing, however, came out of it. This offer should be construed as a refusal to return to him unconditionally and a reply to the present applicant's offer to take her back. The learned Magistrate held that the applicant was guilty of "neglectful and cruel" conduct: that the applicant and his sister were illtreating her, and that she was justified in refusing to return to him. He ordered the applicant to pay her Rs. 20/- p. m. for the first 3 months and Rs. 25/- p. m. thereafter for maintenance. This was, because, the opponent was enceinte when the order was made and expected to deliver within 3 months. The extra five rupees were, therefore, awarded for the child. The applicant had let a portion of his house to a tenant. The learned Magistrate ordered him to have it vacated and deliver it to the opponent for residence and until he could do so, he was ordered to pay her Rs. 6/ p. m. for house rent. The applicant applied in revision to the Sessions Court against this order; but the learned Additional Sessions Judge rejected his petition. He has now applied to this Court in appeal.

(4) The Magistrate has jurisdiction to award maintenance to a wife under section 488 if it is proved that the husband has refused or neglected to maintain her but not otherwise. In this case, the opponent's case is that she was ill-treated by her husband and his sister and the husband took her one night to her brother, Chimangar's and left her there. If this is proved, it is a case of refusal or neglect to maintain her. The applicant offered to take her back by his written statement and the question of his cruelty would be relevant, when the question, whether the present opponent's refusal to return to him unconditionally was based on valid grounds, comes up for consideration. The learned Magistrate unfortunately did not formulate the issue whether the applicant had refused to maintain the opponent nor did he examine the evidence in this context though he observes in his judgment that the opponent deposes that she was taken away when summarising evidence led by her. But the burden of his order is that the applicant was ill-treating her and consequently she was justified in refusing to return to him unconditionally. The main question whether the applicant had refused to maintain her has not been separately taken up and discussed by him.

(5) The opponent alleged that the applicant took her at night to Chimangar's. It is not her case that she left the applicant's house of her own accord, or that her husband's alleged cruelty compelled her to leave his house. The present applicant's contention on the other hand is that she went away of her own accord. Chimangar (P. W. 2) has been examined by her. He states that she was "sent away" भेज दी by the present applicant. He does not state who accompanied her. If she was "sent away" the present applicant could not have accompanied her otherwise Chimangar would have said that he had "brought" her. Then Chimangar went to the applicant's house and inquired about the cause of her coming. This furnishes further corroboration for the inference that the applicant could not have accompanied her because Chimangar would not then have found it necessary to go and make inquiries at the applicant's house. Chimangar's evidence supplies direct corroboration to his case just as it falsifies the case of the opponent that he took her to Chimangar's. The opponent has thus failed to prove the case set up by her in her application. Whether his conduct was cruel or not is beside the point because it was not her case that the alleged cruelty had driven her away. Under the circumstances, the learned Magistrate's order granting maintenance to her on the ground that the applicant and his sister had treated her cruelly was tantamount to giving her maintenance on the supposition that she was compelled by cruelty to go away, a case which she herself had pleaded nowhere in the proceedings. His order must be set aside on this ground alone.

(6) Stress was, however, laid by the learned Magistrate on the alleged cruelty of the present applicant. In this too there has been a slight confusion of thought on his part. The reconciliation between the parties following the caste intervention may be taken to be the point which marks the married life of the parties. All previous wrongs were evidently forgiven and the parties started with a clean slate, the opponent returning to her husband. Any ill-treatment or beating on the applicant's part during the period before the reconciliation must, therefore, be completely ruled out of consideration in determining this petition for the opponent herself had forgiven him. It cannot even be taken as corroborative evidence of subsequent ill-treatment. The opponent must adduce evidence of cruelty after the reconciliation before she can be entitled to an order in her favour. Now the learned Magistrate has mixed up both the periods. The only evidence of beating subsequent to the return of the applicant after the compromise is that of the opponent's own statements that her husband and his sister used to beat her. The applicant denies the entire story of ill-treatment or beating. Chimangar states what the opponent had told her. His evidence is thus hearsay and there is no other evidence of post reconciliation cruelty. The learned Magistrate, however, took into consideration the evidence of Laxmigar P. W. 3 and 3 other witnesses all of whom depose to what had taken place before the reconciliation and based his finding also on their evidence. Thus he allowed his judgment to be influenced by evidence which could have no bearing on the present issue. If this evidence is excluded from consideration, nothing is left except the word of the opponent who is not supported by her own brother in her statement that she was taken by the applicant to his house. I hold that the opponent has not proved such cruelty on the applicant's part after she was reconciled with him and returned to him, which would justify her in demanding separate maintenance or in putting him to terms before she returned to him.

(7) The applicant has been ordered to get his house vacated and place it at the opponent's disposal and during the time that this is done he has ordered to pay Rs. 6/- by way of monthly rent. This order is quite in contravention of the terms of section 488, which authorises the Magistrate to award only monthly payments for maintenance and not to decree residence also.

(8) The opponent has now delivered a child. It was en ventre sa mare when the order was made. Rs. 5/- per month have been awarded for its maintenance after its birth. The infant is in no way responsible for staying apart from its father who is bound to maintain it in whosesoever custody it may be. The order of payment of Rs. 5/- is, therefore confirmed.

(9) Though I have differed from the learned Magistrate's conclusions, I may state that he has carefully tried the case. I cannot say the same thing about the learned Additional Sessions Judge. He dismissed the objection against the legality of the order awarding residence to the opponent by observing that though the order was illegal, the applicant had the option of continuing monthly payments of Rs. 6/- if he did not want to give her residential house. The learned Judge, however, overlooked that the order to get the house vacated and deliver it to the opponent was mandatory and the applicant was not given any option in the matter. The order of payment of Rs. 6/- was only intended for interim payment of house rent. He confirmed the Magistrate's order on merits by observing that he did not see any reason to interfere with the trying Magistrate's appreciation of evidence. There is no question of interfering with the learned Magistrate's appreciation of evidence. But it was the learned Judge's duty to see whether the learned Magistrate had grasped the issues involved and had properly directed himself to them.

(10) The revision is allowed. The Magistrate's order is set aside and the applicant is ordered to pay the opponent Rs. 5/- per month for maintenance of the infant so long as it remains in her custody. The opponent shall pay the applicant the costs of this revision and of both the Courts below.

Devkunvarbai Anandji, Appellant v. Khushalchand Damji and Co., Bombay, Plaintiff and others, Auction-purchasers, Respondents.

Civil Misc. Appeals Nos. 2 and 3 of 1951, D/- 12-6-1951.

Civil P.C. (1908), O. 21, R. 90 — "Person whose interests are affected" — Interest now affected must be shown.

An applicant making an application to set aside the sale under O. 21, R. 90 has to show that his interests in the property sold are affected by the sale; for, if he has no interest in the property which can be affected, his application becomes incompetent. Thus an assignee of mortgage rights in the property sold must prove the assignment in order to show that his interest in the property is affected by the sale. (Paras 4, 6)

Anno: C.P.C., O. 21 R. 90 N. 8.

K. N. Mankad, for Appellant; J. G. Vaidya, for (Plaintiff) Respondent; R. R. Thacker, for (Auction-purchaser), Respondents.

JUDGMENT: These appeals arise out of the orders of the learned Additional District Judge dismissing the appellant's applications for setting aside the sales of certain immoveable properties in execution of the decrees of the Bombay High Court in Suits Nos. 2 and 3 of 1946 passed in favour of respondent No. 1 against the firm of Visanji Hansraj and Co. The appellant's applications have been made under O. 21 R. 90, Civil P. C.

(2) The respondent No. 1's firm had obtained 3 decrees against the firm of Visanji Hansraj and Co. in suits Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of 1946. They got the decrees in Suits Nos. 2 and 3 transferred to the District Court of Kutch and got certain properties of Visanji Hansraj, one of the partners of the firm of Visanji Hansraj and Co., attached on 2-2-1950. The properties were auctioned in due course on 27-7-1950. The present applications are made for setting aside these sales. The properties have been sold in two lots. One lot has been sold in execution of the decree in suit No. 2 (C. Exe. No. 2 of 1950), and the other lot was sold in execution of the decree in C. S. No. 3 (C. Exe. No. 3 of 1950).

(3) The learned Additional District Judge disposed of these applications by separate orders but they involve identical principles. These appeals are, therefore, disposed of by one judgment.

(4) The learned Additional District Judge held that the irregularities and the illegalities complained of were not material nor did they cause substantial injury to the appellant. A further point was raised before this Court on behalf of the respondents. It was urged on their behalf that before an application under O. 21, R. 90 Civil P. C., can be entertained, the applicant has to show that his interests are affected by the sale. The appellant has no in-interest in the properties which could be affected by them and therefore her applications were incompetent.

(5) The appellant claims to have an interest in the properties in this way. She alleges that Vishanji Hemraj (Hansraj?) created an equitable mortgage on these properties in favour of his mother Bhanbai by depositing their title deeds with her in Bombay to secure a loan of Rs. 20,000/-. The mortgage is alleged to have been made in 1945 i.e., before the respondents' suits against Vishanji Hemraj and Co. in the Bombay High Court. This Bhanbai is alleged to have assigned her rights under the mortgage to the present appellant, who by the way is her daughter, for a consideration of Rs. 10,000/-. Thus the appellant claims to be the assignee of her mother's mortgage rights over these properties which according to her are vitally affected by the sales.

(6) The appellant has, however, utterly failed to prove either the equitable mortgage or its alleged assignment in her favour. No document evidencing the mortgage is produced. There is no proof that any consideration passed from Bhanbai to Vishanji Hemraj. All that we have on record by way of authentic evidence is an ex parte decree of the Bombay High Court in civil suit No. 684 of 1950 obtained by the appellant on her assignment against her brother Vishanji Hemraj. The decree recites the equitable mortgage but it is no evidence against the present respondents who were not parties to that suit. The evidence about the alleged assignment is equally worthless. The High Court's decree mentioned above recites that the present appellant produced an Indenture dated 19-4-1950 evidencing the assignment. Curiously enough, this indenture is not produced in the execution proceedings in the District Court. Moreover, the assignment affects immoveable properties in Kutch and must be registered here. It is otherwise of no effect. It is not shown that the assignment was registered. Even if, therefore, the alleged assignment is genuine it cannot help the appellant and can create no interest in the properties in favour of the appellant. She has no interest in the properties created by the alleged assignment which can be affected by the sales and which can sustain her applications.

(7) I am moreover satisfied that the alleged mortgage as well as the assignment are collusive and intended to defeat the execution of the respondent's decrees against Vishanji Hemraj's properties. (After adverting to the circumstances of the case the judgment proceeded:) I am satisfied that the mortgage and the assignments are collusive and create no interest in the appellant which can sustain her application under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C.

(8) I have discussed the case sufficiently to show that the appellant has no locus standi and she must fail. It is therefore unnecessary to go into the questions whether there have been material irregularities in publishing or conducting the sale or whether the appellant has suffered any injury thereby. I find however that there has been no substantial injury to any one by the sales. (After considering the evidence on this question the Judicial Commissioner concluded:) The appellant thus fails on merits also and her appeals are ordered to be dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 16 of 1951, D/- 17-1-1952.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100 — Applicability in State of Kutch — (Kutch Courts Order (1948), S. 32).

Since the application of Civil P. C., (Act 5 of 1908) to the State of Kutch, second appeals to the Kutch Judicial Commissioners' Court are regulated both by S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948 and S. 100, Civil P. C. Under S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, a second appeal can lie from an appellate decree of the District Court on any ground which would be a good ground of appeal if the decree had been passed in an original suit. Under S. 100, Civil P. C., a second appeal can lie to the High Court from any decree passed in appeal by a Subordinate Court on any of the three grounds mentioned therein. Section 100, Civil P. C., saves what is otherwise expressly provided in the body of the Code or by any other law for the time being in force. The Kutch Courts Order being the law for the time being in force, any express provision made therein which is otherwise than the provision of S. 100, Civil P. C., is saved. Though there is a similar saving provision in S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, in view of the saving provision in S. 100, Civil P. C., it cannot be said that S. 100, Civil P. C., otherwise provides as regards grounds on which a second appeal can lie. It thus follows that a second appeal under S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, does lie on any ground despite the provisions of S. 100, Civil P. C. If, a second appeal does not lie under S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, as it does not fall under any of the four classes mentioned therein, it may lie under S. 100, Civil P. C., as S. 33, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, which is subject to S. 32 of the said Order does not otherwise expressly provide. Result is that a second appeal can lie under S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, despite the provisions of S. 100, Civil P. C. but if a second appeal does not lie under S. 32 of the Kutch Courts Order, 1948, it can lie under S. 100, Civil P. C., on any of the grounds mentioned in that section. (Para 5)

J. K. Dholakia, for Appellants and Respondent No. 4; R. B. Mehta, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT: This second appeal is preferred against the decree of the Addl. Dist. Judge, Kutch, in Regular Civil Appeal No. 92 of 1950, reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mandvi, in Regular Civil Suit No. 219 of 1949 and decreeing plaintiff's suit for redemption as prayed for in the plaint.

(2) Regular suit No. 219 of 1949 was brought by the plaintiff for redemption of a mortgage effected in respect of a right to take a share in the produce of an agricultural land called Vadhai. It was alleged in the plaint that one Nathaji was the owner of the land. One Lalji Ganpatram had acquired tenancy rights in the said land. Nathaji mortgaged his right to get a share in the produce of the said land with Lalji for 3002 Kories in the Samvat year 1978. Plaintiff purchased equity of redemption from the heirs of the mortgagor and brought the suit under appeal for redemption.

(3) Out of five heirs of the mortgagee who were made parties to the suit, appellant 1 alone resisted the suit. Her principal contention was that the period provided for redemption at the time of the mortgage was by a new contract entered into by the heirs of the mortgagor extended by 25 years and hence the suit for redemption was premature. It was not admitted that the right mortgaged was to get 1/3rd share in the produce. There were other contentions raised about legal necessity, inalienability of the right mortgaged etc. These contentions were repelled by the trial court, not considered by the District Judge and not pressed before me in second appeal.

(4) The trial court found that the period provided for redemption of the mortgage was extended by 25 years and hence the suit for redemption was premature. The District Judge held it not proved that the period was extended. He held that the right was to recover 1/3rd share of the produce as alleged in the plaint and that plaintiff was also entitled to recover 'Bab' (Cess). He therefore decreed the suit accordingly.

(5) The principal contention urged in this second appeal was that the District Judge erred in holding that the period of redemption was not extended by 25 years. The learned Advocate for the Respondent No. 1 contended that under the provisions of S. 100, Civil P. C., this finding on the question of fact by the District Court was binding on this Court and that in Second appeal that contention could not be urged. This second appeal is preferred under S. 32 of the Kutch Courts Order, 1948. Since the application of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act 5 of 1908) to the State of Kutch, Second appeals to this Court are regulated both by S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948 and S. 100, Civil P. C. Under S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, a second appeal can lie from an appellate decree of the District Court on any ground which would be a good ground of appeal if the decree had been passed in an original suit. Under S. 100, Civil P. C., a second appeal can lie to the High Court from any decree passed in appeal by a Subordinate Court on any of the three grounds mentioned therein. Thus, unlike S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, grounds on which a second appeal can lie under S. 100 are limited. As S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, saves provision otherwise made by any law for the time being in force, it is urged that a second appeal which does not lie under S. 100, Civil P. C., on a question of fact is not competent under S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948. The provision otherwise made by any law for the time being in force may give a right of appeal not provided by S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, or may exclude a right given by that section. Section 100, Civil P. C. gives a right of second appeal from any decree passed in appeal by a Subordinate Court and is not limited to four classes of cases mentioned in S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948. It can, therefore, be urged that when a second appeal does not lie under S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, it may lie under S. 100, Civil P. C. It can also be argued as is done in this case that a second appeal under S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, cannot lie if it is not based on any of the three grounds mentioned in S. 100, Civil P. C. Such a result would have followed but for the fact that S. 100, Civil P. C., saves what is otherwise expressly provided in the body of the Code or by any other law for the time being in force. The Kutch Courts Order being the law for the time being in force, any express provision made therein which is otherwise than the provision of S. 100, Civil P. C., is saved. Section 32 of the Kutch Courts Order, 1948, makes express provision for a second appeal on any ground which would be a good ground of appeal if the decree had been passed in an original suit and this provision is otherwise than the provision in S. 100, Civil P. C. So this provision in S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948 is saved. Though there is a similar saving provision in S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, in view of the saving provision in S. 100, Civil P. C., it cannot be said that S. 100, Civil P. C., otherwise provides as regards grounds on which a second appeal can lie. It thus follows that a second appeal under S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, does lie on any ground despite the provisions of S. 100, Civil P. C. If, a second appeal does not lie under S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948 as it does not fall under any of the four classes mentioned therein, it may lie under S. 100, Civil P. C., as S. 33, Kutch Courts Order, 1948 which is subject to S. 32 of the said order does not otherwise expressly provide. Result is that a second appeal can lie under S. 32 of the Kutch Courts Order, 1948 despite the provisions of S. 100, Civil P. C. but if a second appeal does not lie under S. 32, Kutch Courts Order, 1948, it can lie under S. 100, Civil P. C. on any of the grounds mentioned in that section.

(6) It was the appellants' case that a document in respect of extension of the period of mortgage by 25 years was made. She led secondary evidence alleging that the document was lost. The trial court relying on the evidence led held that a document as alleged by the appellant was executed and it was lost. The District Court did not accept the evidence that document was lost and held that it was neither proved that the document was executed nor was it proved that it was lost. (Reviewing the evidence, his Honour proceeded:) I therefore agree with the lower court in holding that the document neither existed nor was it lost.

(7) It was then contended that plaintiff by his deed had not purchased the equity of redemption. The cultivation rights of the vadi called 'Chas' were acquired by Laljee. The owner was thus in the position of a superior holder entitled to get share in the crop. This right to get share in the crop was called 'Bhog' of the Dhada (Land). What was mortgaged in Samvat 1974 was the Bhog of the Dhada. What was stated in the plaintiff's deed was that "Butanodhado", was mortgaged and its equity of redemption was sold. The contention was that as 'Buta' and 'chas' meant the same thing and as what was mortgaged was 'Bhog' and not 'Buta' nor 'Chas', plaintiff by his sale deed had not acquired the equity of redemption in Bhog. On behalf of the Respondent, it was pointed out that this contention was not taken not only in the memo of appeal but it was not taken before the lower court — nor before the trial court. An appellant is not entitled to urge any ground of objection not set forth in the memo of appeal. No doubt it can be so done by obtaining leave of the Court. But it is evident that plaintiff's right to sue on the basis of the deed was challenged on various grounds. If a particular ground now sought to be urged was not raised before, the court cannot exercise discretion in favour of an appellant and allow him to raise that point. It was contended that the Court could suo motu raise this point, particularly when it was apparent on the face of the record. What was apparent on the face of the record was otherwise. In plaintiff's deed it was stated that the cultivation rights were with Laljee from the time of the ancestors of the executants. What was left was Bhog. It was further stated that "Eutano Dhado" was mortgaged with Laljee. Apparently Bhog was mortgaged. So what was meant was that Bhog was mortgaged and the equity of redemption was sold to the plaintiff. This contention therefore fails.

(8) It was then contended that there was no evidence to show that the superior holder was entitled to get 1/3rd share of the crop. Now the appellant's husband who was purchaser of tenancy rights and mortgagee of the Bhog right, knew full well about the extent of the right to get share of the crop. In the mortgage deed no specification was made. It appears that Laljee got tenancy rights after the land was converted into vadi. Appellant has not produced the original deed alleging that it was lost along with the deed for extension of the period of the mortgage. The District Court was inclined to think that the document was suppressed by the appellant. There was evidence to show that ordinarily 1/5th share was taken as Bhog but when land was cultivated by irrigation, 1/3rd share was taken. After hearing the learned Advocate for the Appellant, I am not inclined to come to a contrary conclusion.

(9) Lastly it was contended that Bab was not transferred by the deed to the plaintiff. It was not disputed that the mortgagor was entitled to recover 'Bab' (cess) from Laljee despite the mortgage. It is so stated in the mortgage deed. By the deed, the plaintiff's right to Bab was not transferred besides the equity of redemption. It appears that the District Judge did not consider this question when he considered the question about arrears of 'Bab' claimed in the plaint and at the time of passing the final order, he decreed payment of Bab from the date of the decree though in para 10 of his judgment about the decree to be passed he has not said a word about 'Bab'.

(10) Result is that the decree passed by the lower Court is confirmed except in so far as it provides awarding Bab to the plaintiff from the date of the decree. The decree awarding Bab to the plaintiff is set aside. As the appeal substantially fails and is dismissed, appellant to pay cost of Respondent 1 and bear her own. C/R.G.D. Appeal dismissed.

Though a suit to recover damages for breach of a contract to marry may lie at the instance of a bride or a bride-groom or persons actually parties to the contract, the fact that there was a just cause or a preferable suitor will be a sufficient answer to a suit for damages by a bride-groom against the father of the bride in which damages were claimed against the father alone and not against the bride. ORDER: This is an application for revision of a decree of the District Court, Kutch, in Civil Application (appeal?) No. 207 of 1950 confirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Anjar in Suit No. 77 of 1950.

(2) The facts are that the opponent sued the applicant for recovery of a sum of Rs. 1476-2-0 as price of ornaments and clothes and as damages, on the allegation that the latter committed a breach of an agreement to marry his daughter Nirmala with him. The applicant denied the alleged agreement and contended that his daughter who had attained the age of majority married outside Kutch of her own accord.

(3) The trial court found for the opponent on all questions of agreement, its breach, ornaments, out of pocket expenses and damages and decreed the suit. The decree on appeal was confirmed by the District Court. The applicant has preferred this application for revision of the decree of the District Court.

(4) There being concurrent findings of the courts below on the questions of agreement to marry, its breach, giving of ornaments and incurring of out of pocket expenses, it was not open to the applicant to challenge them in revision. It was urged that the lower Appellate Court disregarded material evidence in holding that ornaments were given to the applicant and hence it was a material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. It was further urged that according to law, applicant was not liable to pay damages for alleged breach of agreement to marry and there was no evidence to support the finding of out of pocket expenses.

(5) For understanding the first contention, it is necessary to state few facts. According to the opponent betrothal took place in the month of Magh Samvat 1999. The opponent admits that a talk about betrothal took place but as ornaments were to be given and as opponent's father died, nothing further happened in the matter. The applicant's daughter married in Jeth of Smt. 2006, outside Kutch. The Courts below had no hesitation in holding that betrothal had taken place. There are broad grounds of probabilities which support the conclusions arrived at by the Courts below, apart from the question of actual appreciation of evidence of witnesses.

These grounds are that if betrothal did not take place, opponent and applicant's daughter would have been betrothed elsewhere during the period of 7 years that followed the preliminary talk. Moreover, the unusual thing was that applicant's daughter had to be married outside Kutch. The applicant in an unguarded moment blurted out that in his community, breaches of seven betrothals had taken place and his daughter's case was the eighth instance. He stated this fact to show that in none of the seven instances damages were awarded. The applicant's learned advocate tried to explain this inconvenient admission by the applicant as meaning failure of preliminary talk. If that was so, no question of damages arose. Thus the fact found by the court below that betrothal had taken place could not have been challenged on the ground of material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction.

(6) Now the fact that betrothal had taken place shows that a breach of the agreement was committed after 7 years when applicant's daughter married outside Kutch. It was admitted by the applicant that in his community it was customary to give ornaments after betrothal. The applicant who alleged that betrothal did not take place as ornaments were not given would not have kept the betrothal for 7 years if ornaments were not given. On the broad ground of probability, appreciation of evidence by the lower courts on the question of giving of the ornaments must be accepted.

It was contended that the District Court, in appreciating evidence ignored some apparent and material facts. These facts are that according to the opponent and one of his witnesses, ornaments were given a few days after betrothal in the month of Magh Samvat 1999 while the goldsmith's bill produced in the case and supported by the evidence of the goldsmith showed that all the ornaments mentioned in the plaint were not ready till the month of Ashad of that year. The other three witnesses of the opponent stated that ornaments except a silver piece were given on the last day of the month of Vaishakh but as opponent's father died on Chaitra Sudi 2nd and as it was stated in the plaint that opponent's father gave ornaments, the District Court got over the evidence of those three witnesses by saying that ornaments were given 2 days before opponent's father died. It was therefore urged that the District Court ignored the circumstances that ornaments were not ready till Ashad and the father of the opponent who died on Chaitra, Sudi 2nd could not have given ornaments as alleged in the plaint.

(7) It appears from the goldsmith's bill that first three plaint mentioned ornaments were prepared on Falgun Sudi 6th, fourth ornament was prepared on Falgun Sudi 14, fifth one prepared on Vaishakh Sudi 7th and the last silver ornament was prepared in Ashad. The opponent stated that his father died on Chaitra Sudi 2nd of Samvat 1999. It however appears that he had no precise idea about the date on which his father died. The applicant in his examination in chief corrected the opponent by stating that opponent's father died at the end of Samvat 1999 or in the beginning of Samvat 2000. If the Lower Appellate Court had directed its attention to this part of the evidence of the opponent, it would have been obliged to observe that ornaments were given on the last day of Falgun Samvat 1999, viz., 2 days before opponent's father died.

The conclusion arrived at by the lower Appellate Court ran counter to the undisputed documentary evidence that only four pieces of the plaint mentioned ornaments were ready by that time. The fact is that the witnesses examined in the case were deposing to an event which happened 7 years back and they could not have precisely remembered the exact date on which ornaments were given in Samvat 1999 or beginning of Samvat 2002. However this discrepancy was not sufficient for discarding their evidence particularly when it was supported on broad ground of probabilities. I can accept the contention that both the lower courts did not direct themselves to furnishing reason for accepting the evidence despite the apparent discrepancy. But I am not prepared to accept that their appreciation of evidence was erroneous. The betrothal having taken place, it is quite probable that ornaments must have been given or else the betrothal would not have continued for nearly 7 years.

It is significant to note that the applicant's daughter married elsewhere, not because ornaments were not given as it was customary to do, but because she did not like the opponent. I therefore hold that this finding of fact by the two lower courts cannot be disputed on the ground of material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. I further hold that even it can be done, the appreciation of evidence on this question by both the lower courts was correct. The first contention therefore fails.

(8) The trial court awarded the opponent a sum of Rs. 500/- as damages for breach of the agreement to marry. The defence of the applicant was that his daughter married on attaining majority and hence he was not responsible for breach. Apparently the applicant's daughter could not have arranged for marriage outside Kutch without the active aid and support of her father and the conclusion was evident that breach was induced by the applicant. The question is whether damages can be awarded for breach of the agreement to marry and what would be the quantum of damages. The earliest case in Bombay in which something more than nominal damages were awarded against the father of a minor girl is reported in — 'Purushotamdas v. Purshotamdas', 21 Bom 23. In that case defence was that the girl was unwilling to marry for 3 years. In — 'Khimji v. Narsi', 17 Bom L R 225 it was held that the father was not bound to perform the agreement if there was just cause or if a preferable suitor was available. In — 'Balubhai v. Nanalal', 22 Bom L R 143, a good cause for retraction was held sufficient to disentitle plaintiff to recover damages. In that case, one significant fact was that the plaintiffs died during the pendency of suit. In — 'Khimji v. Lalji', AIR 1941 Bom 129 a minor girl was held entitled to sue for damages for breach of an agreement to marry. In a Lahore case Jai Lal J. was inclined to view that such a suit would not lie except between persons who have been betrothed to each other: 'Santu v. Mt. Hardevi', AIR 1934 Lah 544. In an earlier Lahore case reported in — 'Budhu Mal v. Mansha Ram', AIR 1914 Lah 83, it was held that something should be awarded for breach of contract and possible loss of reputation.

(9) It thus appears from the case law discussed above that though a suit to recover damages for breach of a contract to marry may lie at the instance of a bride or a bridegroom or persons actually parties to the contract, the fact that there was a just cause or a preferable suitor will be a sufficient answer to a suit for damages by a bridegroom against the father of the bride in which damages were claimed against the father alone and not against the bride. This is on the principle that a father is not bound to perform the agreement if there was a just cause or a preferable suitor was available.

In — 'Khimjee's case', (AIR 1941 Bom 129) Beaumont C. J. observed that under Hindu Law the contract was conditional on the other party being a suitable spouse at the time when the marriage was to be performed. The learned Advocate for the applicant relied on the cases reported in — 'Khimji v. Narsi', 17 Bom L R 225 and — 'Balubhai v. Nanalal', 22 Bom L R 143. It was not the applicant's defence that there was just cause for the breach or a preferable suitor was available. In — 'Balubhai's case', 22 Bom L R 143, it was held that there was good cause for retraction. The applicant did not plead any good cause for retraction. He is therefore liable to pay damages.

(10) As regards quantum of damages, it is clear that there was hardly any good evidence about loss of reputation. Hence, what should have been decreed was something by way of solatium and possible loss of reputation. I think a sum of Rs. 250/- awarded by way of damages will meet the ends of justice.

(11) As regards the question of out of pocket expenses, there is a general presumption that the sum awarded must have been spent having regard to the fact that betrothal remained in existence for 7 years.

(12) The application substantially fails except that the damages awarded are reduced to Rs. 250. The decree of the courts below is confirmed except that the sum awarded for damages is reduced to Rs. 250. The rest of the application is dismissed. Applicant to pay opponent's costs.

JUDGMENT: This is a second appeal from the decree of the District Court, Kutch, in Regular Civil Appeal No. 110 of 1951, reversing the preliminary decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bhachau, in Regular Suit No. 61 of 1950 and dismissing the appellants' suit.

(2) The respondents denied appellants' right to redeem and claimed 3000 Kories as 'Khara-jat'. The trial Court held that the appellants & one Bai Santok were entitled to redeem. Instead of directing the appellants to join Bai Santok as a party to the suit & then adjudicating on the question of the amount due to the mortgagees for the principal amount, costs of the suit and for 'kharkharajat', the trial Court made the following order:

"Plaintiffs can redeem the suit shop on making Santokbai, widow of Kubadia Pomshi Umarsey, as a person having interest on the mortgage security, a party to the suit and on payment of 801 Kories, being the principal amount of the mortgage and any sum found due to the defendants for 'kharkharajat'."

This order was incorporated in a decree drawn up.

(3) The respondents appealed to the District Court, Kutch, from the decree stated above. The District Court reversed the decree of the trial Court and dismissed the appellants' suit with costs throughout. Against the decree of the District Court, the appellants have preferred the present appeal under S. 100, Civil P. C.

(4) It was urged on behalf of the appellants that the decree made by the trial Court was not a preliminary decree as provided in O. 34, R. 7, Civil P. C., and therefore, the respondents were not entitled to prefer an appeal under S. 96, Civil P. C., against that decree to the lower appellate Court. In other words, the contention was that there being no decree, the lower appellate Court erred in entertaining the appeal and in reversing the decree. On behalf of the respondents, it was contended that no such contention was raised by the appellants in the lower appellate Court. The appellants had not raised this contention in the memo of their appeal. By an order dated 16-8-52, made under O. 41, R. 2, Civil P. C., they were permitted to raise this contention. It was pointed out in the order made that an objection that the appellant in the lower appellate Court was not competent to file an appeal could be raised for the first time in this second appeal and the case reported in — 'Govindchand v. Gajadhar', AIR 1934 All 677 was cited in support of that proposition of law. It was further pointed out that an objection that no appeal lay to the lower appellate Court under S. 96, Civil P. C., as there was no decree defined by law, could be raised for the first time in second appeal. It is true that the appellants supported the decree of the trial Court in the lower appellate Court but having lost in that Court, they now contend that the appeal was not competent. Despite the fact that the appellants did not raise this contention in the lower appellate Court, they were allowed to do so for the simple reason that if there was no preliminary decree in the eye of law, the appeal was incompetent.

(5) It was pointed out that in this State there was an established practice to make such preliminary decrees. Whatever may be the legal sanctity accorded to such decrees in the past, it is evident that after Civil P. C., (Act 5 of 1908) was applied, a preliminary decree must comply with the provisions of the Code. A practice opposed to the law applied cannot be allowed to prevail. It appears that no objection was taken in the lower appellate Court as the implications of a preliminary decree as provided by the Code were not appreciated. If according to the Code, the decree passed by the trial Court was in no sense a preliminary decree, it would be futile to argue that such was the practice in the past. At the most, the appellants who did not urge the point before the lower appellate Court can be deprived of their costs. But estoppel or waiver cannot confer jurisdiction on the lower appellate Court to entertain an appeal if there was no decree as defined by law against which an appeal under S. 96, Civil P. C. could be preferred.

(6) First question is whether there was an adjudication conclusively determining the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy. It was held by the trial Court that Santokbai was a necessary party to the suit as a person interested in the equity of redemption. Santokbai being not a party to the suit, no adjudication made in her absence, would bind her. To say that redemption could be had after making Santokbai a party is not conclusive determination of the rights of parties. Coming to a preliminary decree for redemption, it is apparent that it can be made if a plaintiff succeeds and if Santokbai was a necessary party to the suit, it cannot be said that plaintiff had succeeded till Santokbai was made a party. The preliminary decree cannot be called a decree when it is to operate on a necessary party being brought on record.

(7) It was contended that formal expression given to adjudication of any of the matters in controversy between the parties would be a decree as defined by law and in this case the adjudication was that the appellants were entitled to redeem. The Chief Court of Oudh in — 'Mahmod Sadiq v. Fakhr Jahan Begum', AIR 1934 Oudh 307 held a formal expression of the plaintiffs' right to contribution technically a preliminary decree as only thing remained was to find out the amount due. The Madras High Court, in — 'Venkayamma v. Ramayya', AIR 1943 Mad 767, held formal expression of adjudication on three out of six issues in a case a decree. These cases proceed on the interpretation of the expression "all or any of the matters in controversy". Whether by defining the term 'decree' in the manner done, it was intended that an appeal be heard piece-meal though the scheme of the Code is against it, is a bigger question which does not require to be decided in this case. But the said definition must be taken with the provisions of the Code regarding the stage at which a decree is to be prepared and the essentials of such a decree. In the case of redemption suit, there is specific provision in O. 34, R. 7, Civil P. C., requiring the Court to pass a preliminary decree on definite lines. The stage is the stage when the amount due for principal and interest on the mortgage, the costs of the suit if awarded and costs and other expenses properly incurred by the mortgagee on the mortgaged property is found due so that it could be declared as due or when a direction for taking accounts in respect of them could be made so that the amount so found due be made payable by the mortgagor in the preliminary decree. A second preliminary decree in which the amount found due is incorporated & made payable within a date to be fixed is not contemplated. Then the defined lines are that consequences of payment or non-payment be stated in the preliminary decree. An order directing a suit to proceed further for taking account of the amount due may be regarded as a preliminary decree in cases falling under O. 20, R. 16, but it cannot be called a preliminary decree in a redemption suit.

(8) There are respectable authorities for the propositions of law stated in the preceding para; vide observations made by the Patna High Court in — 'Dhup Panday v. Narbadeshwar Prasad Narain Singh', AIR 1934 Pat 97(2) following — 'Channalswami v. Gangadharappa', AIR 1914 Bom 149 (FB) and — 'Dattatray v. Radhabai', AIR 1921 Bom 220 and by the Nagpur High Court in — 'Baliram Ganpatram v. Manohar Damodhar', AIR 1943 Nag 204 (FB). The Allahabad High Court in — 'Naunihal Singh v. A. G. Skinner', AIR 1925 All 707 observed that there could be no objection to the passing of an interlocutory order for taking accounts but it could not be embodied in the form of a decree as the law did not contemplate such procedure in a suit for redemption. Similar observations were made by the Judicial Commissioner, Oudh, in — 'Mohkam Singh v. Thakur Chandra Pal Singh', AIR 1924 Oudh 140.

(9) It must therefore be held that the so-called preliminary decree made by the trial Court was not a preliminary decree defined by law. The respondents were not entitled to prefer an appeal from that decree and the lower appellate Court was not entitled to entertain the appeal. Result is that the decree made by the lower appellate Court is set aside and the suit is remanded back to the trial Court for disposal in accordance with law in the light of the observations made in this judgment. There will be no order as to costs in this appeal except court-fees to the extent refunded. The costs in the lower appellate Court to be costs in the cause.

ORDER: This is an application under O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C., for review of a judgment dated 20-2-1951 of this Court in Civil Revision Application No. 184 of 1950 by which a decree dated 27-7-1950 of the District Court, Kutch in regular appeal No. 8 of 1950 confirming a decree of the Sub-Judge, Bhuj, in suit No. 16 of 1949, was set aside and a decree for "the plaintiffs prayed for limited to the estate of the defendant's father in defendant's hand, which has not been duly disposed of. The defendant shall pay the plaintiff's costs throughout, including the costs of this revision" was passed.

(2) Suit No. 16 of 1949 was brought by the opponent to recover from the applicant, to the extent of the estate of his father in his hands, a sum of 'Kories' 2635/- on the basis of a loan alleged to have been made by the father of the opponent to the father of the applicant. It was alleged that 'vahivat' continued till 1975 and hence the suit was in time. The sum of 'Kories' 2635/- claimed was partly for principal and partly for interest. The applicant resisted the suit on various grounds out of which two grounds, material for disposal of the present application need be stated. The first ground was that the suit was barred by limitation and the second was that plaintiff was not entitled to interest as the debt was an old one.

The trial Court found for the defendant on these grounds and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the District Court, Kutch. The District Court decided the appeal on the question of limitation only. It found that the suit was barred by limitation. It therefore affirmed the decree of the trial Court and dismissed the suit. Against the decree of the District Court, an application to revise the decree was preferred to this Court. This court allowed the application and made a decree stated in para 1 above.

(3) The applicant defendant has now preferred the present application for review under O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C. Two contentions were urged before me. First was that this Court committed an error or mistake apparent on the face of record in decreeing plaintiff's suit after deciding the question of limitation in her favour without deciding the question of interest in respect of which a finding was recorded by the trial Court in favour of the defendant. Second contention was that this Court did not properly appreciate the custom which was considered in deciding the question of limitation and hence there was sufficient reason for reviewing the judgment.

(4) As regards the first contention, it is apparent on the face of the record that besides limitation, defendant had contended that plaintiff was not entitled to get interest as it was an old debt. This contention was accepted by the trial Court and the issue covering this contention was found in defendant's favour. In appeal the District Court considered the contention of limitation only. It did not find it necessary to consider the other contention about interest as it held that suit was barred by limitation. This Court found that the suit was not barred by limitation. This Court had therefore to consider whether plaintiff was not entitled to get interest as found by the trial Court. This Court in para 1 of its judgment observed that defendant had put forward other defence besides limitation and these defences were rejected by the lower court. This Court over-looked the fact that the contention that a plaintiff was not entitled to get interest was found by the trial court in defendant's favour. Having over-looked this fact, this court passed a decree as prayed for in favour of the opponent on finding the question of limitation in her favour.

(5) Where a judgment proceeds on an erroneous assumption that a certain contention raised by a defendant was found against him by the trial court and as it was not raised by him before the High Court in revision, the High Court was entitled to decree the suit entirely on a finding on the other question of limitation in favour of the plaintiff, it is an error or mistake apparent on the face of record. In this case two questions were to be considered. They are that the suit was barred by limitation and that plaintiff was not entitled to get interest. The trial court found both these contentions against the plaintiff. When this court found that the suit was not barred by limitation, it had to consider whether plaintiff was entitled to get interest. Instead, this court erroneously assumed that this question was decided against the defendant. It was a material fact.

Naturally the applicant did not agitate this question in revision as the finding of the trial court was in his favour. The learned Advocate for the opponent says that he had agitated the question. In any case, the court assumed though erroneously that it was decided against the defendant and hence it was not considered in the judgment. I therefore hold that the erroneous assumption by the Court that this contention was decided against the defendant which resulted in its being not considered by it in revision was an error apparent on the face of record and the applicant is entitled to a review of the judgment so far as the claim of the interest is concerned.

(6) As regards the second contention, the learned Advocate for the applicant could not have supported it on the ground that there was some mistake or error apparent on the face of record. The exact point is that there was no law of limitation in Kutch State till Samvat 2004. Before this date suits for recovery of a personal debt would be barred by the customary law of Kutch 35 years after the 'vahivat' of the debt had stopped. Plaintiff alleged that in Samvat 1972 i.e., within 9 years from the date of the original loan, defendant's father gave him a 'hundi' of Kories 500/- drawn on one Naranji. Plaintiff's father credited to the defendant's father's account this sum and debited Naranji with the sum on the latter making an endorsement of presentation on the hundi.

This court held that this transaction amounted to 'vahiva' within the meaning of that term used in S. 547 of a book titled "Collection of Native Customs". It was conceded that the customs mentioned in this book were judicially recognized. It was urged that this court erred in interpreting the word 'vahivat' as payment by book adjustment entries. As stated above it could not have been urged that there was error of law apparent on the face of record. What was urged was that there was sufficient reason to review the judgment on this ground as error was committed in properly appreciating the custom as published in the book mentioned above.

(7) The expression "sufficient reason" used in R. 1, O. 47, Civil P. C. has been judicially interpreted by the then highest court in — 'Chhajju Ram v. Neki', AIR 1922 PC 112 to mean a reason sufficient on the grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously. Now it will appear from the judgment of this court that the question now raised was discussed at length in the light of arguments submitted before this court. There was no failure to consider any important evidence or fact. Having regard to the fact that Limitation Act is now made applicable, it cannot be urged that the point involved is of general importance. What was argued was that word 'vahivat' means actual payment and not merely a 'havala' transaction effected. Now this contention should have been raised before this court when the application for revision was being argued. If it was raised it is apparent that it was not accepted. This court observed as under:

"This term is more comprehensive and may include other instances such as an attempted payment which might not have resulted in actual payment."

It is thus apparent this contention was considered. This is therefore a case in which review is asked to enable the applicant to raise points which he could and which he had raised in the revision application. In other words another opportunity is being sought to convince this court that the applicant's contention is worth accepting. This would mean that this court must sit in judgment over its judgment and not review it. It may be that this particular point was not placed before the court in the manner in which it is now sought to be placed if an opportunity is given. In — 'U. Po Thein v. O. A. O. K. R. M. Firm', AIR 1928 Rang 34 it was held that the ground that a point was not fully argued is not sufficient ground for review. It follows that the contention that the applicant now be allowed to reargue the matter in a different perspective cannot be allowed. Hence the application for review to this extent will be dismissed.

(8) Result is that the application is allowed to the extent the judgment of this court awards interest to the plaintiff as claimed in the suit. The application for review of the judgment for other part of the claim is dismissed. A note be made accordingly in the Register of Revision applications and the lower courts be informed of this order. The revision application be fixed for hearing so far as the question of interest allowed by the judgment is concerned. No order as to costs.

ORDER: This is an application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis. The applicant filed application Ex. 6 for condoning delay of 16 days in filing the application for leave to appeal as a pauper. Notice of this application was given to the opponents for decision of the question under S. 5, Limitation Act by parties. The opponents except the sons of the applicant have opposed condonation.

(2) The question to be determined is whether there is sufficient cause. The applicant has filed an affidavit stating that she was ignorant of the fact that the period of limitation prescribed for making an application to appeal as a pauper was thirty days though the period for preferring an appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner was ninety days. There was no counter affidavit filed by the contesting opponents.

(3) Now ignorance of law cannot by itself be regarded as sufficient cause. But the fact is that there is no delay of sixteen days as alleged by the applicant. The decree was made on 26-2-52 and the application was made on 10-4-52. Out of the total period of 43 days, the applicant is entitled to exclude 12 days spent for obtaining a copy of the decree. What happened was that the applicant applied for certified copies on 29-3-52, that is, on 31st day, computed from the date of the decree. As the period to make application for leave to appeal as a pauper expired on 27th March, the application for copies was apparently made after the expiry of the period of limitation. On the assumption that for this reason the applicant was not entitled to exclusion of time under S. 12(2), Limitation Act, it was stated that delay of 16 days has taken place. Even the period of 16 days was erroneously computed as the month of February had only 29 days. Now the period of limitation is to be computed as under:

	Total days.
Date of the application 10-4-52 )	3 . . February.
Date of the decree 26-2-52 )	31 . . March.
	9 . . April.
	43 days.
Exclusion of time — S. 12 (2):
Date of the application for copy	—29-3-52) —12 days
Date on which copy was delivered	—10-4-52) (deduct)
	31 days.
Deduct period of 30 days for limitation )	—30 days.
	1 day's delay.

(4) In — 'Murlidhar v. Motilal', AIR 1937 Bom 162 (FB), it was held that in computing the time for appeals from a decree, it is legitimate (in a proper case) to exclude the period requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree even when no application for copy was made till after the expiration of time for appeal. In arriving at this conclusion the Bench reversed the two previous decisions to the contrary of the same Court. With respect I follow the principle laid down in this ruling. It shows that there was a delay for one day only.

(5) Next question for consideration was whether S. 5, Limitation Act is applicable to an application for leave to appeal as a pauper. Leave to appeal as a pauper is an application for leave to appeal. This was the view accepted in — 'Ram Charan v. Bansidhar', AIR 1928 All 499. The contrary view adopted in — 'Sabuddin v. Pundlik', AIR 1927 Nag 197 cannot be accepted as it is based on a decision of the Calcutta High Court decided before the amendment of the section by which 'application for leave to appeal' was introduced. It must therefore be held that S. 5 is applicable to application for leave to appeal as a pauper.

(6) Now it cannot be denied that the Limitation Act was made applicable to this State in 1949 and as such there is no recent change in the law on the subject. But the fact is that the applicant is a lady belonging to the family of a Jagirdar of Chitrod and she could not have known the distinction between period of limitation for appeal and period of limitation for leave to appeal when few appeals are filed in pauperism. As the delay is for one day, discretion can be better exercised in excusing it.

(7) Result is that the application is held to have been filed in time. The question involved is whether the applicant is entitled to a share on partition effected or whether she is only entitled to maintenance. There is therefore an important question of law to be considered. I therefore see no reason to reject the application. It is admitted under O. 44, R. 2 and it is directed that an inquiry as to pauperism of the applicant be made by the trial Court (District Court). The trial Court shall complete the inquiry within 3 months and certify its finding to this Court within that time.

ORDER: This is an application for revision of a decree passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge, Bhuj, in Regular Civil Suit No. 156 of 1949, confirmed by the District Court in Regular Appeal No. 54 of 1951.

(2) Suit No. 156 of 1949 was brought by the opponent to obtain a perpetual injunction restraining the applicants from obstructing him in passing over their fields with bullock carts etc., on a defined path way for going to his field and in carrying water over their fields to his field in a defined channel. Plaintiff claimed the aforesaid right on the basis of an express grant made when a partition of the joint family properties was effected in Samvat 1948 and alleged obstruction by the defendants in the exercise of the said right.

(3) Defendants by their written statement denied the alleged grant, pointed out a different path way to go to the plaintiff's field, contended that Government was a necessary party to the suit, disputed the Court's jurisdiction to hear the suit and in the alternative contended that the right was extinguished by non-user for more than 20 years.

(4) The trial Court decided all the contentions in plaintiff's favour except his right to carry a water course and decreed the suit directing that the question about the width of the way be determined in execution. Plaintiff and defendant both preferred appeals to the District Court. The District Court dismissed both the appeals and confirmed the decree of the trial Court.

(5) Plaintiff has, therefore, preferred the present application for revision on the grounds that both the parties had mere occupancy rights in the lands and hence the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit; that no right of easement to have a path way through the centre of the applicants' vadi could be claimed and that the opponent had other path way which he must use. It is not necessary to consider all these grounds in detail as they are not seriously pressed at the hearing by the learned pleader for the applicants. The vadi and the field were the joint family property of the parties. In a partition effected, vadi was assigned to the share of defendants and the field was assigned to the share of the plaintiff. At that time, the right of way claimed was expressly granted. It may be that the parties have only occupancy rights in the field and the vadi. Even an occupier of land can possess a right of easement. The Court has, therefore, jurisdiction to decide the question raised and Government is not a necessary party to such a suit. As the right was claimed on the basis of an express grant, the question about unreasonableness of the right claimed did not arise. The fact that the plaintiff can make use of another equally convenient way is no answer to such a suit based on express grant.

(6) The learned pleader for the applicants contended that under S. 22, Indian Easements Act, applicants were entitled to demarcate a passage which was least onerous to them and that the opponent should enter their vadi from its north-east corner to go to his field. Illustration A to S. 22 of the Act provides that if A had a right of way over B's field, A must enter the way at either end and not at any intermediate point. Similarly, where between two termini, a way is not a demarcated one, the servient owner is entitled to demarcate it so as to be least onerous to him. But where a defined way is claimed to have been acquired by express grant, the servient owner cannot compel the owner of the dominant tenement to accept a different way. Reason is that the provision of S. 22 of the Act can apply, where exact way to be taken over the premises of the servient owner has not been ascertained, vide — Dhundaraj Balkrishna v. Ramchandra Gangadhar, AIR 1922 Bom 407. In — Venkatarama Ayyar v. Rangaswamy Ayyar, AIR 1943 Mad 741, it was held that in case of an easement by grant, the servient owner was not entitled to substitute a new path way for the old one and to ask the dominant owner to take a substituted path. Mr. Joshi in his work on Easements and Licenses (2nd Edition) has remarked at page 179 that the servient owner has the option of confinement which he could exercise at the earliest opportunity after completion of prescriptive period. In case of an easement of a defined way acquired by grant, there is no question of exercising option of confinement.

(7) If the applicants had any such option of confinement, it should have been exercised at the earliest opportunity when the suit was filed. No such offer for the exercise of option of confinement was made in the written statement of the applicants. If such an offer was made, the trial Court would have considered whether it could be allowed without detriment to the dominant owner. It was urged that the option could be exercised at any time and the matter, if necessary, be remanded to the trial Court for consideration of this question. It is true that in — Purshottam v. Kasturbhai, 32 Bom L R 1001, a case under S. 23 of the Act, the High Court directed that it would be permissible for the defendant as owner of servient tenement under S. 22 to demarcate a passage of eight feet in a manner so as to be least onerous to him. It does not appear from the reported facts of this case whether the way claimed was a defined one between two termini. The facts of this case clearly show that the way claimed lies between the vadi land divided in two survey numbers on their borders. It was an established path. It appears that the question of demarcating the path arose in the Bombay case as eight feet of width for the path was allowed. Moreover, the altered way suggested is from the north-eastern side, access to which could be had by passing over other land. Hence, apart from the question of detriment to the exercise of the right, it may become an impracticable proposition.

(8) Result is that the application fails and it is dismissed with costs.

ORDER: This is an application for revision of an order dated 20-7-1951 made by the Sub-Judge, Lakhapat in an execution proceeding which was started in St. 2000 (1944 A.D.) but which was lately given No. 8 of 1951.

(2) The facts are that the applicant obtained a decree for payment of money against opponent 4 as legal representative of one Ramji Mulji and in execution of that decree attached immovable property belonging to the deceased debtor for sale. One Pathai Poonja whose legal representatives are opponents 1 to 3 made an application in that execution proceeding under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P.C. alleging that he had a secured debt on the property attached to the extent of 4250/- Kories. Pathai Poonja produced two documents in that proceeding. One document was a registered mortgage deed for Kories 1000/- and another document was an unregistered document for 3250/- Kories. A moiety of the consideration in the second deed as stated in it was paid in cash to the mortgagor and second moiety was due to the mortgagee for expenses incurred in repairing the property mortgaged.

The Court passed an order presumably under O. 21, R. 62, Civil P.C. that the mortgage debt of 1000/- Kories together with 'Kharkharjat' mentioned in the mortgage deed be declared in the sale proclamation. In other words Pathai Poonja's claim to the extent of 1000/- Kories as mortgage debt together with such sum of money to which he might be entitled in accordance with the terms of the mortgage bond as spent for effecting repairs etc., on the property was allowed. The claim to 3250/- Kories due on the unregistered deed was not allowed. Pathai Poonja then filed a regular suit for establishment of his claim rejected. He unsuccessfully pursued the litigation to the highest Court in the State.

Opponents 1, 2, 3 then made an application to the lower Court in the execution proceeding that in sale proclamation it be mentioned that they were entitled to get 1632/4 Kories as 'Kharkharajat'. The application was made presumably under O. 21, R. 66, Civil P.C. The applicant did not admit this claim and pointed out this very sum was mentioned as part of the consideration of the unregistered deed and Pathai Poonja's claim to it was rejected in the miscellaneous application as well as by all the three Courts in a regular suit filed. The Court made an order that in the sale proclamation the fact that opponents 1 to 3 claimed that much amount due on the property be stated and it be also stated that the present applicant did not admit the claim. It is against this order that the present application for revision is preferred.

(3) The learned Advocate for the applicant contended that as Pathai Poonja's claim petition was rejected and as the suit filed by him was finally decided against him, his legal representatives were not entitled to re-agitate the same matter over again and the lower Court erred in making the order under revision. It is true that Pathai Poonja's claim petition on the basis of the unregistered mortgage bond was rejected. The rejection was obviously due to the fact that there was no mortgage in the eye of law as it was not evidenced by a registered instrument.

What was urged by the learned Advocate for the opponents was that the debt existed and so far as 'Kharkharajat' amount which formed moiety of the consideration of the unregistered mortgage bond was concerned, the mortgagee was entitled to recover it in accordance with law along with the mortgage property. The learned Advocate for the applicant submitted that the lower Court in its first order had stated that mortgage debt of 1000/- Kories together with 'Kharkharajat' as mentioned in it be shown in the sale proclamation and the applicant was bound by that order. What he contended was that 'Kharkharajat' amount as stated by opponents 1 to 3 should not have been specified to be noticed in the sale proclamation.

It is true that the lower Court had further ordered that it be stated in the sale proclamation that the applicant did not accept that amount. It was, therefore, contended by the learned Advocate for the opponents that applicant was not prejudiced. It is not necessary for me to say how the applicant is prejudiced but there is no reason why in settling the terms of the sale proclamation the Court should go beyond the order first made by the Court in deciding Pathai Poonja's claim petition. It could not have been argued that the said order is not now binding on opponents 1 to 3. It is not necessary to unfold implications of that order for greater specifications. It was argued by the learned Advocate for the opponents that it was necessary to enable the intending buyers to know the value of the property. As the amount is not settled it might cause prejudice to the applicant. Moreover terms of the sale proclamation have been already settled before and a sale proclamation was issued. After a protracted unsuccessful litigation the opponents cannot say that now under O. 21, R. 66, Civil P.C. a specification as desired by them should be made.

(4) Result is that application is allowed, Rule is made absolute and the order made by the lower Court is set aside. It is directed that an encumbrance as per order made by the Court in the claim petition of Pathai Poonja be mentioned in the sale proclamation. Opponents to pay the applicant's costs.

(43) AIR 1943 Cal 427: (ILR (1943) 1 Cal 205)

JUDGMENT: This is an application for revision of an order made by the Subordinate Judge, Anjar on an application for withdrawal of Suit No. 19 of 1952 brought by the applicant and opponents 2 to 4 against opponent 1 for redemption of a mortgage.

(2) It was alleged in the plaint that the grandfather of the applicant had mortgaged the suit property with the grandfather of opponent 1 and that opponents 2 to 4 were joined as co-plaintiffs as the applicant had agreed to mortgage with the latter one of the mortgaged lands. Opponent 1 resisted the suit raising various contentions of which one was that opponents 2 to 4 were not necessary parties to the suit.

(3) The applicant then applied for withdrawal of the suit alleging that opponents 2 to 4, his co-plaintiffs, were not necessary parties.

The application was opposed by opponents 2 to 4 on the ground that they had interest in the subject-matter of the suit and as such necessary parties and that applicant was colluding with opponent 1 to defeat their claim.

(4) The trial Court ordered that the applicant be transposed as a co-defendant. The trial Court seems to have thought that the applicant was not entitled to withdraw without the consent of his co-plaintiffs and that all he could do was to withdraw from the suit. It further seems to have been thought that as applicant's withdrawal from the suit might cause prejudice to his co-plaintiffs, due to want of necessary parties, it was ordered that the applicant be transposed as a co-defendant.

(5) It is quite clear that the trial Court did not appreciate the distinction between withdrawal 'of' a suit provided in O. 23, R. 1(1) and withdrawal 'from' a suit provided in O. 23, R. 1(2). When a plaintiff withdraws a suit, it results in its dismissal. But when a plaintiff withdraws from a suit, the suit does not result in dismissal. Order 23, R. 1(3) provides that where a plaintiff withdraws from a suit without permission referred to in sub-r. (2), he shall be precluded from instituting a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter. If a plaintiff withdraws from his suit with permission mentioned in O. 23, R. 1(2), the suit is regarded as never brought. If he withdraws from the suit without obtaining permission, he is precluded as stated above.

(6) In the present case, the applicant had applied for withdrawal of the suit. As there were co-plaintiffs who did not consent to the withdrawal of the suit, the trial Court should have dismissed this application in view of the imperative provisions of O. 23, R. 1(4). The trial Court very rightly remarked that in view of the provisions of O. 23, R. 1(4), the applicant could not have been allowed withdrawal of the suit without the consent of his co-plaintiffs. However, the trial Court instead of dismissing the application, mixed up the question of withdrawal of a suit with the question of withdrawal from his suit, and considered the question of withdrawal from a suit by one of the several plaintiffs without consent of others. It is true that for such a withdrawal from a suit, consent of the co-plaintiffs is not necessary. The trial Court, relying on — 'Baidyanath Nandi v. Shyama Sundir Nandi', AIR 1943 Cal 427, observed that it had inherent powers apart from the provisions of sub-r. (4) to impose restrictions on the applicant withdrawing from the suit without consent of other co-plaintiffs. Hence, the order made by the trial Court transposing the applicant-plaintiff as a co-defendant was on the face of it erroneous.

(7) The learned pleader for the applicant contended that in this suit, the right of action was not jointly vested on all the plaintiffs and as the co-plaintiffs were not necessary parties to the suit, the applicant should have been allowed to withdraw from the suit. Firstly the applicant had not applied for withdrawal from the suit. Secondly, having agreed to the institution of a suit by him and his co-plaintiffs, in accordance with the provisions of law contained in O. 1, R. 1, C.P.C., it did not lie in applicant's mouth to say that his co-plaintiffs were not necessary parties to the suit. It was pointed out that opponent 1 had contended that the suit was bad for misjoinder as opponents 2 to 4 were not necessary parties to the suit. It was open to opponent 1 to raise that contention and to join an issue on that contention with the plaintiffs. But the applicant himself cannot challenge the constitution of the suit by him and his co-plaintiffs. It follows that the order under revision would have been confirmed if the applicant had applied for withdrawal from the suit. It cannot be confirmed as the applicant's application was for withdrawal of his suit.

(8) Result is that the application is partially allowed, the order made by the trial Court is set aside and the applicant's application for withdrawal of the suit is dismissed. It is directed that the applicant be reinstated as a co-plaintiff. Looking to the result, there will be no order as to the costs of the parties in this Court.

Apart from the fact that O. 9, R. 8, Civil P.C. will not in terms apply to the proceedings under the Act as S. 46 of the Act is not made applicable to the State of Kutch, it is apparent that an order dismissing an application for default is not contemplated by the provisions of the Act as its object is adjustment of debts.

On consolidation being made, the Court can proceed 'ex parte' not only against a debtor or a creditor who has made the application, but also against a debtor or a creditor who is served with the statutory notice and remains absent. (Para 3)

Ordinarily, it is not the practice of the High Courts to exercise its powers in revision except on an application by a party. But the powers must be exercised by the Court of its own motion where the lower Court has acted against the imperative provisions of law in making the order of dismissal for default of an application under S. 4 of the Bombay Act 28 of 1947, to prevent grave injustice being perpetrated. (Para 5)

Anno: C.P.C., S. 115 N. 3.

D. C. Gor, for Applicant.

JUDGMENT: This is an application for revision of an order dated 25-6-52 made by the Joint Subordinate Judge, Rapar, dismissing an application for restoration of debt adjustment application No. 12909, dismissed for default on 23-1-52 and for obtaining such relief as the applicant may be entitled to according to law.

(2) The facts are that the applicant filed an application under S. 4, Bombay Agricultural Debtors' Relief Act, 1947, as applied to the State of Kutch (hereinafter referred to as 'the Act') for adjustment of debt due from the opponent. The application was given serial No. 12909 by the lower Court. On completion of the procedure prescribed by S. 13 of the Act, the application was given consolidation case No. 757. On 11-1-52, the creditors were present but the debtor was absent. On the day statutory preliminary issues were raised and the case was adjourned to 23-1-52, presumably for hearing the preliminary issues. On 23-1-52, the applicant and the debtor were absent. The other creditor was present. The lower Court dismissed application No. 12909 for default. The applicant then applied to the lower Court for setting aside the order of dismissal for default. That application was dismissed on 25-6-52. The applicant has therefore approached this Court for revision of the said order as stated in para. one above.

(3) There is no provision in the Act for dismissing an application for default. The lower Court seems to have made the order dated 23-1-52 under O. 9, R. 8, C.P.C. Apart from the fact that O. 9, R. 8, C.P.C. will not in terms apply to the proceedings under the Act as S. 46 of the Act is not made applicable to the State of Kutch, it is apparent that an order dismissing an application for default is not contemplated by the provisions of the Act. Section 36 of the Act provides that though a debtor or any of his creditors has not appeared on the date fixed for hearing of the application, the Court has to proceed 'ex parte' to hear the application. On consolidation made, the Court can proceed 'ex parte' not only against a debtor or a creditor who has made the application, but it can also proceed 'ex parte' against a debtor or a creditor who is served with the statutory notice and remains absent. The object of the Act being adjustment of debts, dismissal for default, a procedure provided in the Code of Civil Procedure for suits and proceedings, is inapplicable to proceedings under the Act. The lower Court had therefore to proceed 'ex parte' and to decide the statutory preliminary issues. The order made by the lower Court was without jurisdiction.

(4) The applicant, however, made an application contemplated by the provisions of O. 9, R. 9, C.P.C. and on dismissal of that application has approached this Court for revision of the said order. It is clear that if an application can be made under O. 9, R. 9, an appeal against dismissal of such an application is provided in O. 43 of the Code. Here no such application could have been made by the applicant. It follows that the present application for revision of the order dismissing that application is not competent.

(5) It was urged that the lower Court having made an order of dismissal without jurisdiction, this Court be pleased to revise that order of its own motion. Ordinarily, it is not the practice of this Court to exercise its powers in revision except on an application by a party. But in the present case, the said powers must be exercised by this Court of its own motion as the lower Court has acted against the imperative provisions of law in making the order of dismissal for default. Interference is necessary, though of its own motion, to prevent grave injustice being perpetrated.

(6) Result is that though the application for revision of the order dated 25-6-52 is dismissed, the Court of its own motion sets aside the order dated 23-1-52 made by the lower Court dismissing the applicant's application for default and directs the lower Court to re-admit it in application register and consolidation register and to decide it in accordance with law.

It is true that O. 20, R. 6, C.P.C. provides that a decree shall state the amount of costs incurred in the suit. But the general rule as to costs in a suit for accounts is that they are to be given at the time of final decree, though they could be awarded in a preliminary decree. Hence, the mere fact that costs were not taxed in the preliminary decree would not show that the decree was not a preliminary decree. AIR 1934 Pat 146, AIR 1939 Lah 255 and AIR 1930 All 72, Ref. ORDER: This is an application for revision of a decree of the District Court in Civil Appeal No. 30 of 1951, confirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mundra in Suit No. 11 of 1950.

(2) Suit No. 11 of 1950 was brought by the opponent against the applicant for an account of the dealings between the parties being taken and for a decree for the amount due to the opponent from the applicant. The applicant did not deny existence of dealings between him and the opponent. He contended that account was settled between them and some amount was due to him from the opponent. He disputed his liability to pay interest.

(3) What the applicant meant as account settled was that he had sent statements of accounts to the opponent. This did not mean that the account was settled. If as a result of accounts taken it was found that some amount was due to the applicant, he was entitled to get a decree for that amount from the opponent. But there was liability to render account. The only question that the trial Court had to decide was whether opponent was entitled to interest.

(4) The applicant filed a statement of account with his written statement. The items in this statement appear to have been surcharged and falsified by the opponent. A Commissioner was appointed to look into these items. After the report was submitted trial was held. The trial Court held that opponent was entitled to interest. The trial Court referred to the disputed items in the judgment. Eventually on 18-11-50 the trial Court passed a preliminary decree as under:

"A preliminary decree is passed for taking account in the light of discussion in the judgment on issue 2 and for finding out what is due to one party from the other on the foot of dealings between them by appointment of a Commissioner."

(5) The applicant did not prefer any appeal against the preliminary decree passed. It will appear that by the preliminary decree the question about rate of interest to which opponent was entitled and certain disputed items were decided. The applicant seems to have been led to believe that he need not file an appeal against the preliminary decree passed. After the Commissioner submitted his report, no objections were filed probably because there was nothing in the report of the Commissioner for which objection could be filed. The trial Court confirmed the report of the Commissioner and passed a decree for Rs. 740/8/- against the applicant.

(6) The applicant preferred an appeal to the District Court. A preliminary decree having been drawn up, the contention that there was no preliminary decree or that applicant was not aware of it was not tenable. The applicant had therefore nothing to urge before the District Court who dismissed the appeal.

(7) It was urged in revision that in fact no preliminary decree was passed. It was contended that drawing of a preliminary decree did not mean that a preliminary decree was passed and that it was an order for an appointment of a Commissioner for taking accounts in a specified manner. There is no form of a preliminary decree to take accounts provided in the Civil Procedure Code. Order 20, R. 16, C.P.C. provides as under:

"In a suit for an account of pecuniary transactions between a principal and an agent, and in any other suit not hereinbefore provided for, where it is necessary, in order to ascertain the amount of money due to or from any party, that an account should be taken, the Court shall before passing a final decree, pass a preliminary decree — directing such accounts to be taken as it thinks fit."

It was stated in the preliminary decree that an account should be taken for ascertaining the amount due to one party from the other. It was therefore compulsory that a preliminary decree be passed. It was directed in the preliminary decree that account be taken in the light of observations made in the discussion on issue 2 of the judgment. Thus it was not a mere finding but a preliminary decree passed.

(8) The other contentions are apparently untenable. It was contended that applicant's pleader did not know that a preliminary decree was passed. The applicant's pleader has signed the preliminary decree drawn. In the order appended below the judgment it is stated that a preliminary decree be drawn up. It is strange that the applicant's pleader who signed the preliminary decree was not aware of the preliminary decree passed. Another contention was that as there was no order as to costs and consequently no schedule of costs, there was no preliminary decree passed. It is true that O. 20, R. 6, C. P. C. provides that a decree shall state the amount of costs incurred in the suit. But the general rule as to costs in a suit for accounts is that they are to be given at the time of final decree, though they could be awarded, in a preliminary decree. In — ‘Mahomed Abdul Rahim v. Mt. Izzatunnissa Bai’, AIR 1930 All 72, it was held that there was nothing in principle which precluded a Court from assessing costs and passing a decree as to costs in favour of a successful party — in a suit for accounts in the course of a preliminary decree. In — ‘Har Gobind Rai v. Dulhin Sanichra Kuer’, AIR 1934 Pat 146, it was held that actual decree for costs should not ordinarily be made until the stage of final decree was reached. In — ‘Jai Bhagwan Dass v. Om Parkash’, AIR 1939 Lah 255, the same principle was affirmed. There are therefore respectable authorities for the proposition that costs need not be taxed in an account suit at the stage of preliminary decree. Hence, the fact that costs were not taxed would not show that the decree was not a preliminary decree.

(9) The other contention relates to the amount found due by the Commissioner. No objection to the amount due was taken before the trial Court. The applicant is therefore not entitled to raise these contentions in revision. Result is that the application fails and it is dismissed with costs.

ORDER: The opponent filed the suit in the Court of the Sub Judge Mandvi Taluka for possession of a field and for recovery of two years’ arrears of rent. His case was that the field in question was rented to the applicant’s father for 15 years by a rent-note dated Jeth Sud 4th., St. 1964, at a yearly rent of 125 Koris. After the expiry of the term the rent note was renewed for a further period of 10 years on the same terms. After his father’s death the applicant continued to till the land till the date of the suit in St. 2005. Though there has been no fresh renewal of the rent-note the applicant has paid rent upto the year St. 2003. The opponent contracted to sell this field to another and gave notice to the applicant to quit. He also demanded arrears of rent for the years St. 2004 and 2005.

(2) The applicant’s defence was that he was a tenant of the field for a very long time and could not be evicted. He further claimed Koris 4,000/- as the cost of the improvements incurred by him during all these years. He also claimed 75/- Koris for the cost of constructing a water-channel in the field. According to him, his improvements have enormously enhanced the fields’ value. During the trial the only issues framed were about the applicant’s right to recover the cost of improvements and of the construction of the water channel. The learned trial Judge held against the applicant on all the issues and decreed the opponent’s claim. In appeal the learned Additional District Judge confirmed the trial Court’s decree. The applicant has now applied to this Court in revision.

(3) It was urged that the applicant was a permanent tenant. There is nothing in the written statement to justify this plea. All that the applicant says in his written statement is that he has been tilling the field for many years. But the original rent notes are conclusive against the applicant’s contention. They were for periods of 15 and 10 years respectively and militate against the plea of permanent tenancy. No issue was raised in the trial Court about the alleged permanent tenancy and the applicant cannot be allowed to raise this plea in appeal or revision.

(4) It was further urged that the lease, being of agricultural land could only be terminated by six months’ notice. In the present case, the opponent gave only 4 days’ notice. The learned Advocate argued that the suit should have been dismissed on the ground of insufficiency of notice. This plea was not taken up in the written statement and no issue was sought on it. The applicant must, therefore, be deemed to have waived notice.

(5) It was then urged that the tenancy could only terminate on Vaisakh Sud 3rd. The suit was, however, filed on Fagan Sud 9th (9-3-1949) i.e. about more than a month and a half before the expiry of the lease. It should, therefore, have been dismissed as disclosing no cause of action. Reliance was placed on — ‘Mansab Ali v. Nihal Chand’, 15 All 359. In that case, it was held that in the absence of proof or admission or default of pleading the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree in his suit unless he shows that when he instituted the suit he was entitled to a decree. The present case, however, is distinguishable because the applicant nowhere pleaded that the suit was premature. The opponent was induced to fight the suit on totally different issues. If this objection had been taken earlier the opponent could have rectified the mistake by withdrawing the suit or by bringing a fresh suit. The applicant chose to hold on to the land and waste time on side issues. He cannot now be permitted to raise this plea which he never took up and which on the date of this judgment no longer exists.

(6) The learned Advocate for the applicant contended that his client should be awarded the costs of improvements and construction of the channel. Under the agreement he has to make improvements at his own cost and the channel should have been constructed after taking the opponent’s permission. He has not done that. His claim was, therefore, rightly rejected by both the Courts below.

(7) The revision fails and is ordered to be dismissed with costs.

ORDER: This is an application for revision of an order of summary dismissal of Civil Appeal No. 27 of 1952 made by the District Judge, Kutch.

(2) The facts which gave rise to Civil Appeal No. 27 of 1952 are that the opponent decree-holder-auction-sale-purchaser made an application numbered as Execution Petition No. 6 1951 to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bhuj for delivery of possession of the property purchased by him. The applicant opposed the application on various grounds one of which was that the application was barred by limitation. The trial Court held that the application was not barred by limitation. The applicant, therefore, preferred Civil Appeal No. 27 of 1952, which was summarily dismissed by the District Judge, Kutch.

(3) The appeal to the District Court was preferred presumably as the question of limitation decided was a question relating to execution, discharge and satisfaction of a decree under S. 47, C. P. C. The learned District Judge did not decide the question though he styled the appeal as one from an order. He held on the assumption that the matter fell under S. 47, C. P. C., that no appeal lay as there was a mere finding on a preliminary issue. In revision, it was submitted that the lower appellate Court was wrong in holding that no appeal lay and thus it refused to exercise jurisdiction vested in it.

(4) This revision application is to be decided on the assumption that the question about delivery of possession relates to execution, discharge and satisfaction of the decree. The learned pleader for the opponent contended that the question about delivery of possession did not relate to execution, discharge and satisfaction of the decree and therefore, the appeal to the District Court was incompetent. As the District Court did not decide this question, it will not be proper for this Court to decide it in revision. It may be that this particular contention of the opponent may be accepted with the result that it may not be necessary to decide the question of limitation. But the District Court preferred not to decide that question and to decide the appeal on the assumption that the question related to execution, discharge and satisfaction of the decree. This Court can, therefore, consider the only question decided by the District Court. That question is whether an appeal lay to the District Court from a decision of a preliminary point—whether the application for delivery of possession was not barred by limitation.

(5) It was contended on behalf of the opponent that an application for revision was not competent as there was no case decided. It is quite obvious that the District Court proceeding on the assumption that the case fell under S. 47, C. P. C. should have treated the appeal as a regular one and not one from an order. As a Regular Appeal, a Second Appeal would lie under S. 100, C. P. C. But treating it as an appeal from an order, there was a case decided as the appellate Court dismissed the appeal as incompetent. This was not an interlocutory order made by the District Court. If it was found that the appellate Court was wrong in holding that the appeal was not competent, it certainly refused to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it. Thus, either a second appeal or a revision is competent.

(6) Now the applicant had resisted the application of the opponent on various grounds one of which was that it was barred by limitation. The trial Court had decided only one of these grounds. Though S. 47, C. P. C. provided that all questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relating to execution, discharge and satisfaction of the decree, must be determined by the Court executing the decree, the question whether decision of any such question amounts to a decree must be determined with reference to the definition of the term 'decree' as given in S. 2 of the Code. That definition requires conclusive determination of the right of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy and further provides that it shall be deemed to include determination of any question within S. 47. The expression 'any question' must be construed in the light of the first part of the definition of the term 'decree' and it must be held that 'any question' meant was a question relating to rights of the parties in controversy in the proceeding. In this particular case, the controversy was whether the applicant's right to get possession by execution was barred by limitation. It was conceded by the learned pleader for the opponent that if the question related to execution, discharge and satisfaction of the decree, the decision on the question of limitation against him would have been a conclusive determination of his right in controversy. It was, however, contended that so far as the applicant was concerned, there was no such conclusive determination of the right in controversy as there were other contentions raised and there was no formal decision granting or refusing the relief sought by him. It is plain that so far as the trial Court was concerned, the question of limitation was conclusively determined by it. If there was no other contention raised, relief sought would have been granted. As other contentions were raised, the order deciding the question of limitation would become an interlocutory one. In this connection, it is important to cite with approval the remarks made by Messrs. Chitale and Rao in their Commentaries on the Code of Civil Procedure Volume I, 5th Edition at page 616. These remarks are as under:

"But though an order may be interlocutory if it is one which in substance determines a question relating to execution between the decree-holder & the Judgment-debtor, as for instance, when it has the effect of reviving an application for execution which was dismissed for default of the decree-holder, especially when a fresh application would be barred by limitation it will be appealable as decree".

By deciding the question of limitation, the trial Court substantially determined the opponent's right to execute a decree. It was contended that the decision that the petition for delivery of possession was not barred by limitation was analogous to a decision that an executing Court had jurisdiction to hear an objection application of the judgment-debtor and such a decision was not held a decree in — 'Bharat National Bank v. Bhagwan Singh', AIR 1943 Lah. 140 (FB) (A). In — 'Ramchand v. Sham Prasad', AIR 1914 Lah. 415 (B), the Lahore High Court held that the decision of a question of limitation which might arise in execution proceedings was the decision of a question within the purview of S. 47, C. P. C. and was therefore a decree as defined by the Code. The Patna High Court in — 'Shiva Narayan Lal v. Narayan Prasad', AIR 1924 Pat 683 (C) held that the question whether or not the execution was time-barred was a question within S. 47 C. P. C. arising between the parties and relating to execution and therefore a decree as defined in S. 2. In — 'Rama Rao v. Sreeramamurthi', A. I. R. 1936 Mad 801 (D), following the Patna case cited above, it was held that whenever a plea of limitation was raised in execution petition and there was a finding thereon, if the plea was allowed, it must be an appealable order, and similarly, if it was rejected, it was an appealable decree. It was further held that an order dismissing a plea of limitation as regards an execution petition in execution proceeding was an appealable decree under S. 47, C. P. C. It was therefore held that it was not right under the circumstances to wait till some other order was made in execution petition. The Madras view was based on the decision of the Judicial Committee in — 'Raja of Ramnad v. Velusami Tevar', AIR 1921 P. C. 23 (E), wherein it was held that when a plea of limitation was raised inter alia in defence to an execution application and the application was granted, the plea was barred by Res judicata. It is true that in this case there were other contentions. But having regard to the nature of these contentions, it is quite obvious that the trial Court by deciding the question of limitation must be deemed to have virtually granted the application.

(7) It must, therefore, be held that the decision of the trial Court that the petition was not barred by limitation was a decree if the question related to execution, discharge and satisfaction of the decree and falling under S. 47, a question not decided by the appellate Court. As the appellate Court proceeded on the assumption that the question did fall under S. 47, this Court has not to decide the question, whether the appellate Court was right in holding that the appeal did not lie, on making similar assumption. Making that assumption, I hold that the appeal did lie to the District Court. Hence the following order is made:

(8) The application is allowed, the rule issued is made absolute, the order made by the lower appellate Court dismissing the appeal as incompetent is set aside and the appeal is remanded back to the lower appellate Court for its being admitted in its original number in the register of Civil appeals and for its disposal in accordance with law. It will be open to the opponent to contend before the lower appellate Court that as the question about delivery of possession did not fall under S. 47, C. P. C. the appeal was not competent. There will be no order as to costs of the parties in this application.

ORDER: The applicant filed a suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Mandvi for specific performance of an agreement to sell certain land against Kunvarbai original defendant 1. Opponent 2 is the usufructuary mortgagee of the land from Kunvarbai and the agreement provided that Kunvarbai should redeem the mortgage and obtain possession of the property from him. Koris 25/- were paid to Kunvarbai at the time of the execution of the agreement and Koris 357/- were to be paid on her obtaining possession from the opponent 2, and delivering it to the applicant. The applicant filed the present suit against Kunvarbai and opponent 2 on the above agreement. Kunvarbai died during the pendency of the suit and opponent 1 was substituted in her place as her legal representative. She is Kunvarbai's daughter.

(2) The learned Sub Judge decreed the suit. The defendants preferred separate appeals against his decree. In appeal the learned Additional District Judge reversed the trial Court's decree and dismissed the suit. The applicant has preferred this revision, against the Additional District Judge's decree.

(3) The learned Judge in appeal held that the execution of the agreement by Kunvarbai was not proved. He also held that the applicant gave grossly inadequate price for the land to Kunvarbai who was an old woman of 70 and who was mentally weak. Her consent to the agreement was, therefore, not free. He thought that there was no legal necessity for the alienation by Kunvarbai who held a widow's estate, the opponent 1 being her reversioner. This point however be kept open as the opponents had not raised the issue of legal necessity. Finally he decided that the applicant's suit was for specific performance of the contract against Kunvarbai and for redemption of the mortgage against opponent 2. Such a suit was incompetent. The revision, however, must fail on the question of the proof of the execution of the agreement, and the rest of the points do not fall to be considered.

(4) The learned Advocate for the applicant argued that the learned Judge erred in holding that the execution of the agreement by Kunvarbai was not proved. He pointed out that the opponent 1 herself had admitted execution and this admission has been overlooked by the learned Judge. Now the question whether execution of a document is proved or not is a question of fact the decision on which by the lower Court is binding on this Court in revision. The learned Judge analysed the evidence of the applicant, the writer of the document and the attesting witnesses and came to the conclusion that their evidence was mutually contradictory and could not be accepted. There is, however, the opponent 1's statement that the applicant got the document from Kunvarbai. But on the applicant's own showing the only persons who were present at the time of execution were himself, Kunvarbai the writer & the attesting witnesses. Opponent 1's admission is, therefore, obviously based on hearsay and would not justify upsetting the learned Judge's finding based on an analysis of the evidence of these persons.

(5) As the document on which the suit is based, is not proved, the applicant must fail. It is unnecessary in view of this finding to enter into other points decided against the applicant. The application is therefore dismissed with costs. The opponents shall be entitled to separate sets of costs.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 439 — Revision against acquittal — Appreciation of evidence by lower Court — Interference by High Court — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367.

The High Court will not ordinarily interfere in revision with orders of acquittal based on appreciation of evidence on the ground that evidence was not properly appreciated. It is open in such a case to complainant to move the District Magistrate in the matter and the District Magistrate, if satisfied, that the order of acquittal was wrongly passed may move the State Government to lodge an appeal against the order. The fact that certain evidence is not specifically referred in the judgment of the Court does not mean that it was not in the mind of the Court when the finding impugned was recorded. The High Court will not, therefore, go into evidence for finding out whether the appreciation of evidence was proper and to see whether the particular evidence was so left out of consideration that if considered it would have turned the result of the case.

ORDER: The applicant lodged information before the Police that the opponent committed theft of standing crop on a field in his possession. The opponent, on being charge-sheeted by the Police, the Magistrate F. C. Adasa, tried him and acquitted him. The defence of the opponent who admitted removal of the crop was that he was in possession of the land on which crop was grown. The applicant approached the Sessions Court, Kutch for revision of the order of acquittal but the application was dismissed. The applicant has, therefore, approached this Court for revision of the order of acquittal.

(2) Under S. 439, Criminal P. C., this Court will not ordinarily interfere in revision with orders of acquittal based on appreciation of evidence on the ground that evidence was not properly appreciated. It is open in such a case to a complainant to move the District Magistrate in the matter and the District Magistrate, if satisfied, that the order of acquittal was wrongly passed may move the State Government to lodge an appeal against the order. The fact that certain evidence is not specifically referred in the judgment of the Court does not mean that it was not in the mind of the Court when the finding impugned was recorded. I cannot, therefore, go into evidence for finding out whether the appreciation of evidence was proper and for the matter to see whether particular evidence was so left out of consideration that if considered would have turned the result of the case.

(3) It was urged that opponent was out of Kutch at the time of agricultural season. That does not prevent him from getting lands cultivated by his family members or by hired labour. It was further urged that the learned Magistrate considered some evidence about damage caused but it was not legally admissible. If the learned Magistrate was not satisfied with the main evidence led by the prosecution about possession, exclusion of the evidence alleged to have been illegally admitted would not make any difference.

(4) I, therefore, do not think that this is a matter which calls for interference in revision. The application is dismissed.

JUDGMENT: This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by respondent 1 against respondents 2/1, 2/2 and against the appellants for taking accounts of a dissolved partnership. The appellants did not admit that they were partners in the plaint mentioned partnership. On the contentions of the parties, the trial Court raised issues one of which was whether the appellants were liable for the suit claim. The trial Court held that the appellants were not partners and found that issue in the negative. In view of the findings on that issue and other issues raised, the trial Court directed a preliminary decree to be made, declaring that respondent 1 and Dhanjee, father of respondents 2/1, and 2/2, since deceased, were the only partners having each a moiety of share and giving directions for taking accounts on the foot of settled accounts upto a certain period and on the foot of unsettled accounts thereafter. It was directed that a receiver to be appointed will take accounts and submit his report before 11-12-49. The suit was adjourned till 30-12-49 for making a final decree. The trial Court did not draw a preliminary decree.

(2) Respondent 1 feeling aggrieved by the findings of the trial Court that appellants were not liable for his claim preferred appeal No. 28 of 1950 against the judgment of the trial Court to the District Court, Kutch. The District Court held that appellants were partners. Accordingly the District Court passed a decree modifying the decretal order in the judgment of the trial Court by providing that all the defendants were partners. The appellants first preferred an application for revision of the decree of the District Court. As a second appeal under Kutch (Province) Courts Order, 1948, was competent in view of the valuation of the suit, the application for revision was converted into second appeal. A number of grounds in support of the appeal are stated in the memo. Most of them are argumentative. In short, the appellants challenge the finding of the appellate Court that they were partners. At the hearing, the appellants applied under O. 41, R. 2, C. P. C. for leave to urge a new ground that the District Court was not entitled to entertain the appeal and the decree made by it, being a nullity, must be set aside. The application was opposed on behalf of Respondent 1. The application was granted. It was stated in the order made that reasons would be given in the judgment. Accordingly, I proceed to give reasons granting the application.

(3) Order 41, Rule 2, C. P. C. gives wide discretion to a Court of appeal to permit urging of a ground of objection not set out in the memo. It was argued on behalf of respondent 1 that the appellants, who were respondents to his appeal before the District Court, did not object in that Court that as no preliminary decree was drawn up, no appeal lay and hence they should not be allowed to raise that contention now. It is apparent that the appellants want to raise a pure question of law based on the facts on record. Respondent 1 was given notice of the new point sought to be raised and there was no question of surprise caused to him. If the respondent 1 was not entitled to prefer an appeal against a judgment, with the result that the appellate Court, in entertaining the appeal and making a decree, acted without jurisdiction, the appellants cannot be estopped from raising this contention. It was argued that the contention raised was a technical one and it could not be allowed to be taken for the first time in appeal. Reliance was placed on — 'Budha Mal v. Shib Dayal', AIR 1924 Lah 328 (A). In that case, the new point sought to be urged was that the suit was premature. It was held that the plea taken was technical and could be met by a technical plea that it should have been taken in the Court below so as to enable a plaintiff to take such action as he thought right. Under S. 96 of the Code, an appeal can be preferred and can be entertained by a Court of appeal against a decree. If a Court of appeal cannot entertain an appeal from a judgment or finding, it is a question of jurisdiction of the Court of appeal to entertain that appeal. When such a question of jurisdiction is raised, obviously not falling within the purview of S. 21, C. P. C. or S. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, it cannot be said that it is a merely technical plea which could not be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal. So to the general rule that a point not taken in the lower Court, cannot be allowed to be urged for the first time in appeal, there are exceptions, one of which is that a question of jurisdiction can be allowed to be so urged. It is true that if this objection was taken in the Court below, respondent 1 would have moved the trial Court for drawing up of a decree. This may affect the question of costs but it cannot estop the appellants from raising that contention involving the jurisdiction of the Court below to entertain an appeal against a judgment or finding. The appellants were therefore allowed to raise that contention.

(4) The suit was valued in the trial Court at 5225 Kories for the purposes of court-fees and jurisdiction. The appeal to the District Court was preferred on a fixed court-fees of Rs. 10 under Art. 17 Sch. 11 of the Court-Fees Act as it was not an appeal against a decree requiring payment of ad valorem court-fees on the subject-matter. The appeal was thus preferred against a judgment. No doubt, the judgment contained a decretal order for asking a preliminary decree. The question whether a Court of appeal had jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from a decretal order not followed by drawing of a preliminary decree will be considered presently. The appeal was preferred for setting aside the judgment that the appellants were not partners. In the decretal order of the judgment, the finding that appellants were not partners was not incorporated. The effect of the finding that the appellants were not partners was that the suit was liable to be dismissed against them. In that case, the decree to be drawn up would have been final so far as the appellants were concerned and preliminary so far as Respondents 2/1, and 2/2 were concerned. It follows that the appeal was against a finding. It is apparent that the lower Court could not have entertained an appeal against a finding. It was pointed out that in the decretal portion of the judgment, it was stated that only Dhanjee and the plaintiff were partners implying that the appellants were not partners and that it was so stated in the decretal order of the judgment in view of the finding that the appellants were not liable.

It was therefore contended that the appeal to the District Court was not merely against a finding. Assuming that by implication the decretal order of a judgment meant that the appellants were not partners, there was no order made dismissing the suit against them and that, at the most, it could be said that the appeal was against the decretal order of the judgment that the appellants were not liable as they were not partners. Because of this interpretation of the decretal order contained in the judgment the position is not at all improved. It is all the same an appeal against a finding. Unless there was a decretal order in the judgment that the suit was dismissed against the appellants, followed by a decree drawn up accordingly the appeal preferred was against the finding and the lower appellate Court was not entitled to entertain an appeal against the finding. Hence, apart from the question whether an adjudication should be regarded as a decree in the absence of its formal expression in a decree actually drawn up, it is clear that the adjudication that the appellants were not partners, not followed by a further adjudication that the suit stood dismissed against them, did not conclusively determine the right of the parties as regards that matter in controversy between them and therefore, it remained as a mere finding against which the lower appellate Court was not entitled to entertain an appeal.

(5) It was contended by the learned pleader for Respondent 1 that in the decretal order of the judgment there was a formal expression of adjudication which conclusively determined the rights of the parties as regards the controversy between respondent 1 and Dhanjee and between respondent 1 and the appellants and that the absence of a formal decree would not make the adjudication any the less a decree, as in point of law, it operated as a decree. As stated in preceding para, so far as the appellants are concerned, the adjudication would have conclusively determined the rights of the parties as regards the matters in controversy, if it was ordered that the suit stood dismissed against them. It is true that this would be the necessary result of a finding that as the appellants were not partners, they were not liable. But unless it was adjudicated that the suit stood dismissed against the appellants, there was no conclusive determination of the rights as regards the matters in controversy between them. Assuming, however, that it was so, the question is whether the absence of a formal decree would not make the adjudication any the less a decree. In other words, the question is whether an adjudication operating as a decree would be sufficient in law in the absence of a formal decree drawn up. Section 96 of the Code provides that save as when otherwise expressly provided in the body of the Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from a decree passed. A decree is a formal expression of adjudication. It follows that where no decree is drawn, there is no formal expression of adjudication and hence a Court of appeal is not entitled to entertain an appeal from a mere finding or a decretal order contained in a judgment. It is true that on a judgment a decree has to follow. But a judgment is different from a decree and a judgment cannot take the place of a decree, nor can it be substituted for a decree which must follow. It is thus clear that unless a decree is drawn up it will not operate as such.

The learned pleader for the respondent 1 relied on —‘Feroz Shah v. Kalu Ram’, AIR 1936 Pesh 155(B). In that case, the plaint was rejected. First an appeal was filed with a memo of costs prepared. It was held that the appeal need not be accompanied by a separate decree sheet. It was held that rejection of the plaint was itself as equivalent to a decree and hence necessity for a separate decree sheet was eliminated. An order rejecting a plaint does not conclusively determine the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy. It is, however, regarded as a decree by virtue of the definition of decree. That case is therefore not applicable to the facts of the present case. Reliance was also placed on —‘B. Surendra Narain Singh v. Raja Lal Bahadur Singh’, AIR 1933 All 762(C). In that case, it was held that an order containing formal expression of the decision should be taken to have a dual character of a judgment and an order and as the appellants had filed a copy of such an order with the memo of his appeal, there was sufficient compliance with the provisions of law. That was a case of an appeal against an order under O. 43, C. P. C. As regards an appeal under O. 41, it was observed that presentation of a memo of appeal from a decree which was accompanied by the judgment, but not by the decree, was no appeal in law.

In —‘Vilayat Ali Khan v. Khairunnissa’, AIR 1941 Nag 180(D), it was observed that an order or a judgment could be treated as a decree within the meaning of S. 2 and an appeal could be filed. It is not possible to accept this view having regard to the provisions of S. 96, C. P. C. When an appeal preferred is against a decree, no appeal can be filed or entertained unless the memo of the appeal is accompanied by a copy of the decree. In Mt. Chauli v. Mt. Meghoo, AIR 1945, All 268 (F.B.) (E), it was held that a decree was formal document which must be drawn up in accordance with some decision of a Court. In —‘Vamanacharya v. Govind Madhavacharya’, AIR 1924 Bom 33(F), it was observed as under :

“Sections 2 and 96 of the Code, upon which alone the right of appeal is based must be construed with reference to S. 33 which distinguishes between a judgment and a decree, and O. 20 R. 6 which prescribes the contents of a decree. If no such formal decree has been drawn up, then, no decree has been ‘passed’ from which an appeal can be brought under S. 96 or 97.”

With respects, I entirely agree with these observations.

(6) As the District Court was not entitled to entertain an appeal from a judgment, the decree made by it was a nullity. It was so held in — Sher Mahomad v. Mahomad Khan, AIR 1924 Lah 352(G), and I agree with that decision. It is true that in this case a decree was not prepared. In — Banwari Lal v. Amritsagar, AIR 1949 E. P. 400(H), it was held that under such circumstances an appeal was not maintainable. It must therefore be held that as a decree was not drawn up, the lower appellate Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal which was not maintainable. In any case, a preliminary decree that might have been prepared, as directed by the trial Court could not have contained an order that the suit was dismissed against the appellants and as there was no such decree against them, the appeal against them was not maintainable.

(7) The decree made by the appellate Court must therefore be set aside and the case be sent back to the trial Court for making a proper order and drawing up of the decree. As regards costs, it is apparent that the present appeal is not heard on merits. But the appeal to the District Court was heard on merits and the respondent 1 had succeeded. The appellants did not raise this particular objection in that Court. Hence the proper order as to costs will be that the appellants shall pay costs of the respondent 1 in appeal to the lower Court independently of the result. Each party shall bear its own costs in this second appeal. The trial Court was the Court of the Civil Judge (S. D.) who designated itself as the Court of the Extra Assistant Judge. As that Court has ceased to exist and as the jurisdiction to hear this suit is with the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Rapar, the suit will be remanded back to that Court. Hence the following order is made :

(8) The appeal is allowed, the decree passed by the lower appellate Court is set aside and the suit is remanded back to the trial Court (the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Rapar) for making a decretal order dismissing the suit, with or without costs as it deems fit, against defendants 2 to 4 in view of the finding on issue No. 7 and drawing of a decree (final against defendants 2 to 4 and preliminary against defendant 1) in accordance with the judgment, after hearing the parties and their pleaders. It shall be open to the trial Court to vary, add to or delete directions in para 36 of the judgment so far as they appertain to the taking of the accounts. The appellants shall pay respondents' costs of the first appeal and bear their own. There shall be no order as to the costs of the parties to this second appeal.

Accused-Respondents.

Cri. App. No. 2 of 1951, D/- 20-6-1951.

Influx from Pakistan (Control) Act (23 of 1949), S. 5 — Prosecution under — Burden of proof — Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101-103.

The burden of proving that the accused has committed the offence always rests on the prosecution. Thus where certain persons are tried under S. 5, Influx from Pakistan (Control) Act, 1949, for returning from Pakistan without a permit, the prosecution must prima facie establish that the accused had gone to Pakistan. After the prosecution establishes it, if the accused plead that they were at some other place, the burden of proving that fact would lie on them. But if prosecution has proved nothing more than that the accused were not in their village in 1949, it is not enough to shift the burden of proof on the accused and they are not bound to show where they were during their absence from the village. (Para 5)

C. P. Pandya, Public Prosecutor, for the State; Padmakant P. Vaidya, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT: The respondents were acquitted by the First Class Magistrate of the charge under S. 5, Influx from West Pakistan Ordinance 23 of 1949*. The Government have preferred the present appeal against the order of acquittal.

(2) The respondents originally belonged to Bhadra. The prosecution case is that they left their village for West Pakistan in 1948 and returned without a permit on 27-8-1950. The learned Magistrate held that it was not proved that the respondents had ever gone to Pakistan and acquitted them.

(3) (After stating the evidence produced by the prosecution the judgment proceeds as under:

(4) The above evidence proves that when the list Ex. S A was prepared in 1949 the respondents were not in Bhadra. The value of this list is very much discounted on account of the fact that it was prepared on information received from the merchants of the village. One of them was Jadavji and Jadavji admits being the respondents' debtor who is interested in their externment from India. There is not the slightest evidence to show that the respondents had gone to Pakistan or that they returned from there.

(5) It was, however, argued on behalf of the Government that the whereabouts of the respondents were within their special knowledge and they must, therefore, prove where they were during this period. To this the learned Advocate for the respondents replied that until the prosecution produced some evidence that his clients had gone to Pakistan, they were under no obligation to disclose their whereabouts. I agree with this view. The burden of proving that the accused has committed the offence always rests on the prosecution. It must prima facie establish that the respondents had gone to Pakistan. After the prosecution established it, if they pleaded that they were at some other place, the burden of proving that fact would lie on them. The prosecution has proved nothing more than that the respondents were not in Bhadra in 1949. That is not enough to shift the burden of proof on the respondents and they are not bound to show where they were during their absence from the village.

(6) The learned Public Prosecutor suggested that additional evidence may be taken under S. 428(1), Cr. P. C. and the prosecution should be given an opportunity of proving by documentary evidence that the respondents' pro-

erty had been treated as Evacuee property. This evidence the prosecution had already in its possession and did not produce it. Besides the prosecution evidence does not definitely establish that the respondents' property was listed as Evacuee property. The only person who deposes to it is Mulvaji the Police Patel. Jadavji Ex. 6 was not present when it was listed. Against this evidence P. W. Mangaldas Ex. 7 states that respondent 1's wife is actually in the possession of his house. He is a resident of Bhadra and does not know whether the property was listed by the Government. In view of this conflicting prosecution evidence about the fact of the property having been listed as evacuee property, I am not inclined to allow the prosecution a chance to produce further evidence. I may observe that the prosecution of an important case of this nature has been left to either unskilled or negligent persons. The result is that it has been unable to produce an iota of evidence that the respondents had committed the offence. It is not fair that in the absence of any evidence against them they should be subjected to further harassment by giving the prosecution a chance to produce materials which so far as the respondents are concerned may or may not be of any value to the prosecution.

(7) The appeal is, therefore, ordered to be dismissed.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 24 — "At any stage".

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 24 — Grounds of transfer.

No doubt, possibility of conflicting decisions by two different Courts on same question is a good ground of transfer but when, only one ground out of several urged in two different proceedings is common, possibility of conflicting decisions by two different Courts is considerably minimised as the judgment in each Court may as well turn on decision of other grounds which are not common. (Para 5)

Anno: C.P.C., S. 24 N. 13.

K. P. Kotwal, for Applicant; D. P. Joshi, for Opponent.

ORDER: This is an application under S. 24, C. P. C., for withdrawal of Civil Appeal No. 74 of 1952 pending in the District Court, Kutch and for its disposal along with Civil First Appeal No. 12 of 1952 pending before this Court.

(2) The facts giving rise to this application are that the opponent sued the applicant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mandvi for restitution of conjugal rights. The applicant sued the opponent in the District Court, Kutch for obtaining divorce. The applicant's suit was dismissed. The opponent's suit was decreed. The applicant, therefore, preferred Civil Appeal No. 74 of 1952 to the District Court against the decree for restitution of conjugal rights and Civil First Appeal No. 12 of 1952 against the decree dismissing her suit to obtain divorce. By this application, she prays that her Appeal No. 74 of 1952 preferred to the District Court be withdrawn and disposed of by this Court along with her Appeal No. 12 of 1952.

(3) The only ground urged in support of the application was that a common question whether the applicant was deserted by her husband would arise for consideration in both the appeals and withdrawal would tend to convenience of parties as it would avoid any possibility of conflicting decisions by two different Courts on the same question.

(4) The opponent, resisting the application, contended that in the suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the applicant had not raised the question of desertion and that this request for transfer was a belated one.

(5) It is a principle of law which admits of no doubt that convenience of parties should be regarded as a sufficient ground for taking action under this section particularly when parties are required to approach specific different forums such as a Court of a Subordinate Judge and a Court of a District Judge, to urge their causes of action. The opponent had to sue in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mandvi for restitution of conjugal rights while the applicant had to sue in the Court of the District Judge, Kutch for obtaining divorce. It cannot, however, be accepted that in a suit by a husband for restitution of conjugal rights and in a suit by a wife for obtaining divorce, common questions of facts or mixed questions of facts and law do necessarily arise. It had to be conceded by the learned Pleader for the applicant that the common question of desertion was sought to be urged for the first time in appeal before the District Court. Moreover, besides the ground of desertion, there were other grounds urged for obtaining divorce. When, only one ground out of several urged in two different proceedings is common, possibility of conflicting decisions by two different Courts is considerably minimised as the judgment in each Court may as well turn on decision of other grounds which are not common.

Lastly, though, an action under this section can be taken at any stage, delay from which want of bona fides can be inferred, has to be taken into consideration in deciding whether an application for transfer should be granted or not. The applicant sued to obtain divorce after the opponent sued her for restitution of conjugal rights. She should have made an application under this section to the District Court for withdrawal of the opponent's suit at that stage. She, however, tried to obtain a stay of the suit filed by her husband. It was only after both the suits were decided against her and she preferred appeals as stated above that she has now applied for transfer to avoid conflicting decisions which so far have not taken place. The request made is a belated one apparently disclosing want of bona fides.

(6) Result is that the application fails and it is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT: The appellants sued the respondents to recover a sum of money as damages with future interest. The trial Court decreed the suit with future interest from the date of the decree. The present appeal is directed against the decree of the trial Court in so far as it did not allow interest pendente lite. The memo of appeal bore a court-fee stamp of Rs. 4. No. objection as to adequacy of court-fees paid on the memo of appeal was raised by the office and the appeal was admitted in due course.

(2) A preliminary objection was raised by the learned pleader for the respondents that the memo of appeal was not sufficiently stamped and therefore the appeal be dismissed. On behalf of the appellants, it was submitted that the appeal having been directed against future interest only, no court fee was payable on the memo and that a court fee of Rs. 4/- was paid as was payable on an application made.

(3) Court fees on suits and appeals for money are payable under S. 7, para. 1 and are assessed under Article 1, Schedule 1 to the Court-Fees Act. The appellants proceeded on the analogy of future interest claimed in a suit. Whereas in a suit grant of future interest is discretionary with the Court, it is not a subject-matter in dispute, the amount or value of which is ascertainable. But the subject matter in a suit and the subject matter in an appeal are different though in many cases they may be identical. On the trial court exercising discretion one way or other granting or refusing future interest, its grant or refusal becomes a subject matter in dispute in appeal and the memo of appeal directed against its grant or refusal as the case may be must bear court fees either under Article I, Schedule I or under Art. 17, Schedule II as it is or it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject matter in dispute.

(4) The learned pleader for the appellants relied on the observations made by Messrs. Chitley and Rao in their work on the Court-Fees Act at page 87 under the Caption 'Court-fees on future interest'. The learned authors observe that on the principle under which court-fee is not payable for future interest in a suit, a plaintiff appealing against the dismissal of his suit is not liable to pay court fee on interest subsequent to the institution of suit. In support of this view reliance is placed on cases cited in the foot note. First case cited is — 'Mahommad Saeed v. Abdul Alim', AIR 1947 Lah 40 (A). The facts in that case are that a suit to recover mortgage amount with future interest was dismissed and the appeal was directed against the decree dismissing the suit. By this time, interest upto the date of the decree had become ascertainable. It was held that no court-fees in addition to what was paid on the plaint was payable. This decision was arrived at following a decision of the Patna High Court in — ‘Sadhusaran Rai v. Barhamdeo Lall’, AIR 1927 Pat 230 (B). This view is explainable. When a suit is dismissed without necessity of determining the question about future interest and the plaintiff appeals or when a suit is decreed and the defendant preferring an appeal does not specifically challenge the grant of future interest, the relief in respect of which must go with the dismissal of the suit by the Court of appeal, future interest is not the subject matter in dispute and the question whether it is estimable in money value does not arise, vide — ‘Mithoo Lal v. Mt. Chameli’, AIR 1934 All 805 (C), and — ‘Raghbir Prosad v. Shanker Bux Singh’, AIR 1914 All 520 (FB) (D). But where the question of future interest is decided, in appeal it becomes a subject-matter in dispute and interest pendente lite is ascertainable, ‘Damodar v. Hardeo’, AIR 1931 All 351 (E). Another case cited is — ‘Vithal Hari v. Govind Vasudeo’, 17 Bom 41 (F). The decision in that case can be supported on facts as future interest from the date of the decree was not ascertainable. The claim for future interest was placed on par with the case for future mesne profits which according to the procedural law then in force could be determined in execution. Mesne profits when ascertained according to the procedural law now in force, either before or after passing of a preliminary decree, becomes a subject-matter in dispute in appeal capable of ascertainment. Some more cases are relied on at page 436 of the work. In — ‘Bhagwati Prasad v. Bishun Pragash’, AIR 1922 Pat 386 (G), it was held as a fact that the amount of future interest was not ascertainable. In — ‘Kali Prasad Singh v. Mathura Singh’, AIR 1923 Pat 28 (H), the trial Court dismissing the suit did not decide whether future interest be granted or not.

(5) The principles of law stated in para. 3 above are clearly applicable to the facts of the present appeal directed against refusal to grant interest pendente lite. In — ‘Jagarnath Prasad v. Bhala Prasad Singh’, AIR 1945 Pat 145 (I), such an appeal was preferred. In — ‘AIR 1931 All 351 (E)’, appeal was directed against a part of the claim dismissed and also against pendente lite interest disallowed. It is unnecessary to refer to other decided cases cited at the Bar. There are some decided cases which held that in appeal it was not necessary to pay court-fees for future interest becoming due from the date of the decree. However, as that question does not arise in this appeal, it is not necessary to consider those cases in detail. It must be held that the court fees ad valorem should have been paid on the amount of interest pendente lite disallowed by the trial Court.

(6) The appellants’ request that under S. 149, Civil P. C., they be given time to pay court-fees. This is objected to by the learned pleader for the respondents who submitted that the appeal be dismissed. It was not disputed that time to pay deficit court-fees could be granted under S. 149, Civil P. C. It was contended that the appellants did not deliberately pay proper court-fees by valuing the appeal accordingly and in any case there was negligence and want of bona fides. I do not appreciate how this was a deliberate act on the part of the appellants or their legal advisers when it could not be said that the position in law was as clear as in case of a suit for a definite sum of money or a suit for specific performance. It was urged that it was not understood as to how a court fee of Rs. 4/- was paid and it was contended that it was deliberately done to pass the memo from the office. I accept the explanation that Court fee of Rs. 4/- was paid as would be paid on an application made to a High Court. It was urged that if the law on the subject was properly read, the appellants would have paid proper court fees and this was negligence. Having regard to the facts that the question raised was not so simple and that no objection was raised as to insufficiency of Court fees by the office, the discretion under S. 149, Civil P. C., must be exercised in favour of the appellants. It is not necessary to refer to some decided cases cited at the Bar on behalf of the respondents as negligence in those cases was patent.

(7) The appellants are therefore allowed 7 days’ time to value the appeal and pay deficit court fees.

The applicant moved the Sessions Court, Kutch for revision of that order but his application was dismissed. He has, therefore, approached this Court for revision of the said order.

(2) The indictment against the applicant was that on 11-2-1951 he was driving a Motor truck from Gandhidham to Kandla. Near Kotha of Gadhvadi, a touring car driven by the prosecution witness Kasim was coming from the opposite direction. There is a curve at this place. The applicant, while negotiating the curve, did not sound horn and collided with the touring car, though the driver of the touring car had applied brakes on seeing the truck and brought the car driven by him to a stand-still.

(2) The applicant denied having committed the offence and alleged that the touring car was driven by one Hemchand son of Sheth Kalyan-jeo and not by Kasim.

(4) In deciding whether an offence under S. 116 of the Act is committed, the Court has to consider whether the speed with which or the manner in which the vehicle was driven was dangerous to the public. In deciding this question the Court has to take into consideration circumstances of the case. The nature of the place was that there was a curve. Hence it was necessary before negotiating curve to sound the horn. The trial Court believed the evidence led that Kasim had applied the brakes on seeing the truck coming. If the applicant had sounded the horn and negotiated the curve with care, he could have avoided the collision.

(5) It was no longer urged that driver was not Kasim but Hemchand. It was urged that there was evidence of a mechanic who stated that the car had slipped and it showed that the car was running at a speed of 45 miles. It was submitted that the trial Court did not consider this part of the evidence. Where there was direct evidence which the trial Court was prepared to believe it found unnecessary to refer to expert evidence.

(6) As a general rule this Court will not interfere in revision with findings of fact unless they are not based upon evidence or are based on inadmissible evidence or are patently erroneous. The applicant's case does not fall under any of the categories mentioned above. There is, therefore, no scope for interference in revision. The application is accordingly dismissed. C/K.S.

ORDER: This is an application for revision of an order dated 5-12-52 made by the Subordinate Judge, Mundra in consolidated case No. 1373 under S. 15 (2) of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors' Relief Act, 1947, (hereinafter referred to as the Act) as applied to the State of Kutch.

(2) The facts are that two creditors of the applicant made applications Nos. 1134 and 1237 under section 4 of the Act for adjustments of the debts due to them. The opponent was not mentioned in the said applications as another creditor of the applicant. Notices under S. 14 of the Act were issued and were duly served. The opponent did not file a statement in compliance with the notices within the time prescribed. He made an application under S. 15(2) of the Act alleging that the applicant had permitted him to believe that he was not a debtor under the Act and his debt was not extinguished. He therefore requested that his statement be accepted and debt due be adjusted. The applicant opposed the application. The trial Court recorded evidence on the question of fact raised and found it in favour of the opponent. The opponent's statement was therefore accepted. As no appeal against an order made under S. 15(2) of the Act is provided, the applicant preferred the present application for revision of the said order.

(3) It is clear that the trial Court had decided a question of fact. It could not have been urged that the trial Court was exercising jurisdiction which it had not got. It was urged that there was a material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. It was pointed out that there was misappreciation of some evidence. Material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction is some error in procedure which is material in that it has affected the ultimate decision in the case. Moreover, exercise of revisional jurisdiction is discretionary and the applicant would be entitled to urge this contention in an appeal preferred from the award made in view of the provisions of S. 105, C. P. C. It is thus evident that this Court in the exercise of the powers of revision will not interfere with this finding on a question of fact.

(4) It was contended that as the legal effect under S. 15 of the Act had taken place, the Court should not have entertained and considered any question raised under sub-s. (2) of S. 15. The legal effect mentioned in S. 15 takes place when no application under S. 4 is made and no statement in compliance with the provisions of S. 14 is filed. Sub-s. (2) to S. 15 is virtually a proviso to S. 15(1). If the case falls under sub-s. (2), the legal effect mentioned in sub-s. (1) of S. 15 does not take place. The Act does not make any provision as to whether the Court administering the Act should or should not consider such a contention. But it is obvious that if the legal effect mentioned in sub-s. (1) of S. 15 does not take place by virtue of the fact that the case falls under sub-s. (2), a statement can be accepted after the time prescribed. Acceptance of statement does not amount to extension of time. Extension of time results in non-incurring of the penalty provided in S. 15. But where there is no question of incurring of penalty, a statement can be accepted on an order made in favour of a creditor under sub-s. (2). It is true that when a creditor does not make any such application, the Court administering the B.A.D.R. Act will treat the debt as extinguished and the question whether the person for the adjustment of whose debts an application is made was a debtor & whether the case fell under sub-s. 2 of S. 15 will have to be decided by the ordinary Court before whom they are raised. But if a question under sub-s. (2) of S. 15 is raised before the special court, it must be decided by it. The reason is that if the decision is against the creditor, the award will proceed on the footing that the debt is extinguished and if the decision is against the debtor, the debt will be subjected to adjustment as provided in the Act. It was not intended that debt of debtor be not extinguished and at the same time, he should not get the benefit of the Act. The trial Court had therefore, jurisdiction to decide the question.

(5) Result is that the present application for revision fails and it is dismissed with costs.

ORDER: This is an application for revision of a decree dated 31-1-52, made by the Additional District Judge, Kutch, in Civil Appeal No. 131 of 1951, confirming an order made by the Subordinate Judge, Nakhatrana in consolidated case No. 805.

(2) The few facts necessary to be stated are that the applicant applied for adjustment of his debts under S. 4 of the B. A. D. R. Act as amended and applied to this State. In the said application, the applicant had mentioned the debts due to some of the opponents. In the course of time, it was found out that the applicant was also indebted to other opponents. The trial Court settled statutory issues and on evidence recorded in the case held that the applicant was not a debtor and total amount of his debts exceeded Rs. 15000. The applicant was not held a debtor as he had not been cultivating land personally for the cultivating seasons in the two years immediately preceding the date of the coming into operation of the Act. It was admitted that the total amount of the debts due from the applicant exceeded Rs. 15000. It was however contended that substantial portion of the debts was contracted in Pakistan on the security of the immovable property situated in that territory and hence the said debts could not be regarded as such for considering the total amount of indebtedness. This contention was not accepted by the trial Court. On appeal, the Additional District Judge upheld the aforesaid findings of the trial court. The applicant has therefore approached this Court in revision.

(3) It is plain that if the findings recorded by the Courts below were erroneous, the lower courts did not exercise the jurisdiction vested in them and therefore the application in revision was competent on the ground of non-exercise of jurisdiction vested.

(4) The first point urged was that the lower courts erred in holding that the applicant had not complied with the requirement No. (iii) of S. 2(5) of the Act. That sub-section requires that the applicant must have been cultivating lands personally for the cultivation seasons in the two years immediately preceding the date of the coming into operation of the Act. The Act was first made applicable to this State by the Application of Laws Order, 1949 in the month of July 1949 and the courts below held that the applicant had not cultivated lands personally from July 1947 to July 1949. If, however, the Act came into operation in 1950, there was no dispute that the applicant had complied with the provisions of the said sub-section. No doubt the Act was made applicable in July 1949. But as pointed out in — 'Rajkuverba v. Dr. Karsondas', AIR 1952 Kutch 87 (A), the Act had to be re-extended with certain modifications and the Act must be held to have come into operation from the date on which it was re-extended. That being the case, the decision of the courts below on the first point was wrong. It must be held that the applicant was a debtor as defined by the Act.

(5) But the applicant had further to show that the total income of his debts did not exceed Rs. 15000. This he could not have denied. But his contention was that if the debts contracted in Pakistan on the security of immovable property situated in that territory were included, (sic, excluded?) his total debts would be less than Rs. 15000. It was urged that as these debts were contracted in Pakistan on the security of immovable property situated in that territory, the trial court had no jurisdiction over the said territory and as such, the trial court could not have considered such debts as debts within the meaning of that expression used in section 17(1)(b) of the Act. In Section 17(1)(b), the term used is 'debts'. That term used in the section is not qualified. It must therefore be understood to have been used in the sense in which it is defined by the Act. The definition of the word 'debt' is given in S. 2(4) of the Act. That definition does not qualify the meaning of the word debt, as debt contracted within the jurisdiction of the court or within the territory of India. It does not provide that the debts contracted on the security of immovable property situated in Pakistan are not to be regarded as debts. It is possible that a person to whom such debts are due, may sue a debtor in India particularly if he has lost the property on which they were secured.

To accept the contention of the learned pleader of the applicant would amount to making an addition to the definition of the term given in the Act. The addition would be as under:

"but does not include ..... and debts contracted in Pakistan on the security of immovable property situated in that territory." This would be legislating and not interpreting a definition given by an Act. If the Legislature intended that such debts contracted on the security of property situated in the territory of Pakistan be not regarded as debts and be not included in total debts not exceeding Rs. 15000, it should have made its intention clear by making a provision to that effect. It is true that a creditor to whom such debts are due may be a 'displaced creditor' within the meaning of that term used in the Displaced Persons (Debts Adjustment) Act, 1951. If a debtor is a debtor as defined by the B. A. D. R. Act and a creditor is a displaced creditor as defined by the Displaced Persons (Debts Adjustment) Act, 1951, complications may arise. But it was for the State Legislature to amend the definition of the word 'debt' after the Displaced Persons (Debts Adjustment) Act, 1951 was passed to avoid possibility of any such complication. Till it is not so done, this Court must interpret the definition of the word 'debt' as it finds it without any addition or subtraction. It is therefore not possible to accept the contention of the learned Pleader for the applicant. It must be held that the finding of the Courts below that the total indebtedness of the applicant exceeded Rs. 15000 is correct. The applicant was therefore not entitled to the benefit of the Act. His application was rightly rejected by the trial Court.

(6) Result is that the application fails and it is dismissed with costs.

VAKIL J. C.

The State of Kutch v. Aher Vasta Hadhu and others, Accused Respondents.

Criminal Appeal No. 12 of 1953, D/- 7-5-1953.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 498, 427, 561-A — Powers of High Court to grant bail.

Section 498 does not apply to the case of a person who has been tried, acquitted and is arrested under S. 427 on admission of an appeal by the State under S. 417. But the Court which issues a warrant for arrest has the power to admit such a person to bail and that power is not specifically excluded by the provisions of S. 427. As the Code does not make specific provision for the exercise of that power, it can be exercised under S. 561-A, Cr. P. C. AIR 1945 PC 94, Disting. and Explained. (Paras 2, 3)

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 497 — General principles to grant bail.

The respondents who were acquitted are in a better position than what they were before judgment. Where, therefore, it was not alleged that they were likely to abscond and they were persons with property, the mere fact that the appeal was admitted against them would not be sufficient for rejection of their application for bail.

CASE REFERRED TO:

(A) ('45) AIR 1945 PC 94: 46 Cri LJ 662

ORDER: The petitioners along with the petitioners in application Exhibit 4 were acquitted of a charge of murder by the Additional Sessions Judge, Kutch. The present appeal was preferred by the State under S. 417, Cr. P. C. against the order of acquittal. A warrant as provided in S. 427, Cr. P. C. was issued for the arrest of the respondents. On their arrest, the respondents were produced before the Additional Sessions Judge, Kutch as directed in the warrant. The respondents applied for being released on bail. The Additional Sessions Judge rejected their application for bail and committed them to prison pending the disposal of appeal. The respondents have, therefore, by their applications Exhibits 3 and 4, applied to this Court for being released on bail.

(2) A question arose whether this Court was competent to release the respondents on bail, when under S. 427, Cr. P. C., the power to release them on bail was conferred on the Court before whom they were produced in accordance with the direction in the warrant. It was conceded that the respondents were not moving this Court for revision of the order made by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. It was submitted that the respondents' application could be considered under S. 498, Cr. P. C. It was pointed out that under that section the High Court could release on bail any person in any case, whether there was an appeal on conviction or not. The section in terms does not provide for a case in which there is an appeal against acquittal order, though it may be contended with some force that the expression 'any case' is wide enough to include the case of a person against whom an appeal under S. 417 is filed and is arrested on a warrant issued under S. 427, Cr. P. C. Chapter 39 of the Code makes provisions for grant of bail to 'accused persons'. It was contended that in S. 427, Cr. P. C., the same expression was used. It was further contended that Chap. 39 of the Code together with S. 426 contained a complete and exhaustive statement of the power of a High Court to grant bail as held by the Privy Council in — 'Jairam Das v. Emperor', AIR 1945 PC 94 (A). In that case it was held that the only granting of bail which was referred to in that chapter was the granting of bail to accused persons and there was no reference therein to the granting of bail to persons who have been tried and convicted. What was held was that the provisions of S. 498 were meant for those accused persons who were not tried. If an accused person has been tried and convicted, he can apply for bail under S. 426, Cr. P. C. only. An accused person who has been tried and acquitted has not to apply for bail. Such a person could be arrested on admission of an appeal under S. 417, Cr. P. C. on a warrant issued under S. 427, Cr. P. C. Hence, that section made provisions for release on bail of a person arrested in execution of a warrant issued under it. It follows that S. 498, Cr. P. C. does not apply to the case of a person who has been tried, acquitted and is arrested under S. 427, Cr. P. C. on admission of an appeal by the State under S. 417, Cr. P. C.

(3) While on the one hand S. 498, Cr. P. C. does not apply, on the other hand S. 427 empowers the Court before whom the accused person is directed to be produced to commit him to prison or to admit him to bail. It can therefore be contended that the subordinate Court before whom the respondents were produced under S. 427, Cr. P. C. having refused to admit them to bail, this Court has no power under that section or under any other provision of law to do so. It can further be urged that the Privy Council, in the case cited above held that any inherent power of the Court, to grant bail in addition to what is provided in Chap. 39 and S. 426, Cr. P. C., was excluded. The Judicial Committee in that case held that besides the provisions contained in Chap. 39 and S. 426, Cr. P. C., there were no additional inherent powers in a High Court to admit an accused person convicted of an offence to bail. The Privy Council in that case was not considering the case of a person who was acquitted but against whom an acquittal appeal was admitted and he was arrested under S. 427, Cr. P. C. Under S. 427, Cr. P. C., an accused person arrested can be produced before a subordinate Court, if so directed. The subordinate Court had to be expressly empowered to admit such a person to bail or to commit him to prison. But the Court which issued a warrant for arrest had the power to admit such a person arrested to bail and that power was not specifically excluded by the provisions of S. 427. It follows that as the Code does not make specific provision for the exercise of that power, it could be exercised under S. 561-A, Cr. P. C. and that the Privy Council case referred to above is not an authority for the proposition that in such a case, exercise of inherent power is excluded by the provisions of Chap. 39 and S. 426, Cr. P. C.

(4) As regards merits, it is plain that the respondents who were acquitted are in a better position than what they were before judgment. It is not alleged that they are likely to abscond and they are persons with property. Hence, the mere fact that the appeal is admitted against them will not be sufficient for rejection of their application for bail. The learned Additional Sessions Judge was much impressed with the fact that the respondents whom he tried and acquitted were charged with commission of a serious offence. The reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge for not admitting the respondents to bail are not sound. I grant both the applications and order that the respondents shall be admitted to bail pending the decision of the appeal. It appears that according to the prosecution, respondents 1 and 2 were principal offenders. Hence their term of bail will be stiff. Respondents 6 and 8 were found not guilty by the assessors and respondents 3 and 8 were on bail during the trial. Hence their terms of bail will be easy. I direct that the respondents be released on bail during the pendency of the appeal, on respondents 1 and 2 executing a bond with one surety for Rs. 5000/- each, on respondents 4, 5 and 7 executing a bond with one surety for Rs. 2500 each and on respondents 3 and 6 and 8 executing a bond with one surety for Rs. 1000 each, for appearance when called upon by this Court to do so and for respondents 1 and 2 appearing before the Taluka Police Station on Monday of each week for notifying their presence.

cases of defamation, which affect private parties and not public, Government would usually be unwilling to interfere. But where the applicant was a member of the State police force and there were serious allegations made against him which were disparaging of him and which if true were such as to render him unfit to continue in service, obviously it was a matter in which the State Government was vitally concerned. The applicant therefore should have approached the Government for lodging an appeal under S. 417 from the order of acquittal and as he has not done so, High Court would not consider whether the finding of the Magistrate was so erroneous as to enable High Court sitting in revision to come to a contrary conclusion and to direct a retrial. At the same time, High Court cannot over-emphasise the fact that publishers must use great care and caution than what is expected of a man in the street, before any imputations are published. #### CASE CITED:

(A) ('41) AIR 1941 Bom 410: 43 Cri LJ 174

JUDGMENT: This is an application for revision of an order of acquittal in a defamation case.

(2) There were three imputations published in a local daily by the opponent. These imputations made were concerning the applicant. They were disparaging of the applicant and the opponent knew or had reason to believe that they were so disparaging.

(3) The opponent relied on Exceptions 1 and 9 to S. 499, I. P. C. The trying Magistrate held that the case of the opponent fell under these two exceptions. The opponent was therefore acquitted.

(4) The applicant moved the Sessions Court in revision as a preliminary to his approaching this Court, if that Court did not accept the application. The Sessions Judge observed that the findings about truth of the two defamations were far fetched and inferential. It may be stated that evidence about truth of the defamatory statements made was given in respect of one dated 29-8-50 only. As regards Exception No. 9, the learned Sessions Judge observed that the Magistrate had material before him for arriving at that conclusion and though there was room for differing from the conclusion of the Magistrate, it was not possible to say that the said finding was perverse or manifestly wrong.

(5) The applicant has therefore approached this Court in revision. The applicant seems to have thought that this Court can convert the finding of acquittal into one of conviction. It is with this erroneous view that the applicant has not moved the State Government to lodge an appeal under S. 417, Cr. P. C. In the revision application before me, the conclusions arrived at by the trying Magistrate that the case of the opponent fell under Exception No. 9 were challenged. Of course, the finding that the case of the opponent in respect of the statement dated 29-8-50 fell under Exception No. 1 was also challenged.

(6) First thing necessary to be considered is the approach this Court should have in the Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 26 of 1952, D/- 24-6-1953.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 439, 417 — Revision against acquittal.

Unless interference is demanded in the interest of public justice, an application for revision against an order of acquittal cannot be entertained. Under S. 439 the High Court can only direct a retrial.

(Para 6)

To this general principle of law, personal cases such as of defamation may be treated as an exception, the reason being that in disposal of this application. The established practice of the High Courts in considering such applications was stated by Broomfield J. on review of authorities in — 'Vinayak v. Shantaram', AIR 1941 Bom 410 (A). His Lordship observed as under:

"It is clear from these cases that for a long time past this Court, like most of the other High Courts, has consistently declined to interfere in revision with orders of acquittal except when interference is demanded in the interest of public justice."

The reasons for these observations are quite apparent. The law does not allow a private complainant to prefer an appeal against an order of acquittal. Such a complainant must move the State Government for preferring an appeal under S. 417. Even in cases of an appeal against an order of acquittal under S. 417, it has been held that there is what is aptly termed as a double presumption of innocence and unless the conclusion in question is impossible, it cannot be disturbed. Under S. 439, this Court can only direct a retrial. Hence, unless interference is demanded in the interest of public justice, such an application would not be entertained. There is no question of appreciation of evidence on a question of fact as would be done by a Court of appeal.

(7) The learned pleader for the applicant contended that the above observations would not apply to personal cases and in support of his contention, he relied on the Bombay case cited above. No doubt that case is an authority for the proposition of law contended for. But it is necessary to consider the reasons which led their Lordships to treat personal cases as an exception to the general principle of law stated. His Lordship Broomfield J. expressed the reason as under:

"The reason is that in cases of defamation, which from their very nature affect private parties and not the public, Government would usually be unwilling to interfere."

It will be seen that in the present case, the applicant is a member of the State police force. There were serious allegations made against him which were disparaging of him and which if true were such as to render him unfit to continue in service. Thus the allegations affected a public servant concerned with preservation of law and order. If these allegations were true, Government would be unwilling to continue him — (the applicant) — in service. If they were not true, the Government was bound to afford protection to its servants by assisting the applicant in prosecuting persons who were making such allegations against him. It is thus obvious that this is a matter in which the State Government was vitally concerned. Yet there is nothing to show that the applicant approached the Government to prefer an appeal against the order of conviction. In view of the facts stated above, the applicant's case is taken out of the exception mentioned in the Bombay case stated above.

(8) Thus the question to be considered is whether interference is demanded in the interest of justice. As regards statement dated 29-8-50, evidence was led by the opponent and it was believed by the trial Court. As regards two other statements, it was not contended that the imputations made were made maliciously and not for the protection of the public good. So the only question was whether they were made in good faith, and is with due care and caution. The question whether it was so done would not be entirely a question of fact. It was pointed out that the opponent had not made any enquiries before the publication of the charge and that he had not at his disposal or within his knowledge any of the materials which were sought to be established in the cross-examination of the applicant. It was therefore contended that there was no good faith established. The opponent could show that at Maska and thereabouts, many thefts committed were not detected, the applicant's son was suspected in one of the cases, the applicant used to remit money at Vagad though his income from the avocation followed by him was not such that he could do so and that the opponent was addressed two letters by some two persons suspecting the applicant in connection with certain thefts. These matters may be regarded as sufficient to raise a cloud of suspicion but not sufficient to definitely charge a person or to show good faith. It was for this reason that the learned Sessions Judge remarked that there was room for differing from the conclusions of the learned Magistrate.

(9) The question then is whether a retrial be directed on setting aside a finding that the case falls under Exception No. 9. It was observed in the Bombay case cited above, and with respects I agree with these observations, that the case would call for imposition of a sentence of fine and that it would be waste of time and money to direct a retrial. I would add that the applicant being a Government servant should have approached the Government for lodging an appeal from the order of acquittal and as he has not done so, this Court would not consider whether the finding of the learned Magistrate was so erroneous as to enable this Court sitting in revision to come to a contrary conclusion and to direct a retrial. At the same time, this Court cannot over-emphasise the fact that publishers must use great care and caution than what is expected of a man in the street, before such imputations are published.

(10) Result is that the application fails and it is dismissed.

Whether future interest should be allowed in a particular case is a question which must be decided on the facts of each case. There must be reasons both for grant or refusal. (Considering the nature of the suit, the get up of the plaint, the way in which the suit was conducted by the plaintiffs, held that this was not a fit case in which interest could be granted). JUDGMENT: The appellants have valued their memo as directed by the interim judgment delivered and have paid court-fees ad valorem on the valuation made. The only question that arises in this cognate appeal is whether the appellants are entitled to interest pendente lite and if yes, at what rate.

(2) The suit from which this appeal has arisen was brought by the appellants to recover damages from the respondents. The trial Court decreed the damages claimed with future interest from the date of the decree but did not grant future interest before judgment. The trial Court was of the opinion that future interest in a suit to recover damages could be allowed for special reasons. It held that there were no special reasons for allowing future interest before judgment.

(3) It was contended by the learned pleader for the respondents that no interest before judgment could be allowed on the amount adjudged as damages and reliance was placed on — 'Ratanlal v. Brijmohan', AIR 1931 Bom 386 (A). Section 34, C. P. C. provides that the Court may, in a decree for payment of money, order interest to be paid from the date of the suit to the date of the decree. Unless, therefore it was held that a decree for payment of money in a suit for damages is not a "decree for payment of money" within the meaning of that expression used in S. 34, C. P. C., interest before judgment can be awarded. The expression "decree for payment of money" used in S. 34, C. P. C. is not used in any technical or restrictive sense. It means every decree by which payment of money is directed. A suit for money due for rent or for price of goods sold may result in a decree for payment of money in the same way a suit for recovery of damages may result. Thus a decree in a suit to recover damages is a decree for payment of money. It is thus apparent that the Bombay view in the case cited above is against the plain provisions of S. 34, C. P. C. In the judgment delivered in that case, no reference was made to S. 34, C. P. C. The Bombay view expressed in that case was not followed in subsequent rulings of the Bombay High Court. The question came for consideration in — 'Bhagwant Genuji v. Ganganbisan Ramgopal', AIR 1940 Bom 369 (B). The Court in that case preferred to follow decided cases of the Madras and Calcutta High Courts and held that even in a suit for damages interest before judgment could be awarded. Referring to the previous case, it was observed that it was doubtful that the said case meant to lay down a general rule of law. In a still later case of that High Court, — 'Anandram Mangtaram v. Bholaram Tanumal', AIR 1946 Bom 1 (C), it was held that the important thing to be considered was whether the decree was for payment of money. Chagla J. remarked that he could not understand why the learned Chief Justice took the view that the Court could not grant interest from the date of the filing of the suit. Thus the Bombay view expressed in the case relied on by the learned pleader for the respondents has not been followed by the later cases which held to the contrary. Some support for the early Bombay view is to be found in a Calcutta case, — 'Crewdson v. Ganesh Das', AIR 1920 Cal 737 (D). That case proceeded on the view that on principle, no distinction between interest before suit and interest before judgment could be made and when interest before the suit could not be had, interest before judgment could not be allowed. Section 34 provides for payment of interest before judgment in a decree for payment of money and apart from the question that discretion may be properly exercised in refusing interest before judgment in a case in which interest before suit could not be allowed, the principle sought to be enunciated is against the plain provisions of S. 34, C. P. C. In a later ruling of that High Court, interest before judgment in a suit for damages was allowed — 'Pannalal v. Radha Kissen', AIR 1924 Cal 637 (E). Hence, the particular contention raised cannot be accepted.

(4) Next contention urged was that grant of future interest being discretionary with the trial Court and the trial Court in the exercise of discretion, having held that interest before judgment could not be allowed, this Court in appeal should not interfere with the order made by the trial Court. Discretion is to be exercised on sound principles and where it is so done, the Court of appeal has no reason to interfere with the order made. The trial Court seems to have thought that though interest from the date of the decree should be awarded, interest from the date of the suit could only be awarded for special reasons and as there were no such special reasons, interest from the date of the suit to the date of the decree could not be awarded. In support of the observations made, the learned trial Judge relied on — 'AIR 1940 Bom 369' (B). In that case, the question considered was whether the fact that damages were awarded was a ground for refusing to award interest from the date of the suit. It was held that if circumstances justified award of future interest upto the date of the decree, it could be so awarded even in a case where damages were awarded. The learned trial Judge did not properly understand the decision in that case. The learned pleader for the appellants contended that ordinarily interest before judgment should not be refused except for sufficient reasons and reliance was placed on the observations to that effect made by Messrs. Chitlay and Rao in their work entitled commentaries on the Code of Civil Procedure, 5th Edition at page 435 under the caption "award of interest under the section is a matter of discretion." In support of the observations aforesaid, the learned authors have relied on the following cases cited in the foot note: — 'Hari Krishna v. K. C. Gupta', AIR 1949 All 440 (F); — 'Kamakshya Narain Singh v. Bhuramull', AIR 1946 Pat 154 (G); — 'Yadao-rao v. Ramrao', AIR 1943 Nag 240 (H); — 'AIR 1940 Bom 369' (B) and — 'Murlidhar v. Hukam Chand', AIR 1932 Lah 312 (I). In the Bombay case, long delay under vexatious and oppressive circumstances in payment of contract money was taken into consideration as a reason in awarding interest before judgment. In the Nagpur case, the debt had remained unpaid since long and it was held as sufficient reason for allowing future interest. In the Lahore case, there was considerable delay in bringing the suit and that fact was considered sufficient for not awarding future interest. In the Patna case there was a claim for cess extending for a long period and that fact was held sufficient for awarding future interest. In the Allahabad case, there was a breach of contract for sale of immovable property. The trial Court did not give reason for not granting future interest. No general principle of law can be said to have been laid down in these cases. Whether future interest should be allowed in a particular case is a question which must be decided on the facts of each case. There must be reasons both for grant or refusal.

(5) Now the facts in this case are that the appellants sued the respondents to recover damages on the allegation that the latter did not act according to their instructions in conducting the business of the agency. The respondents were the agents of the appellants for sale of dates and it was alleged that they delivered the dates to the vendors without taking cash. The suit was filed immediately and interest upto the date of the suit was not claimed. The respondents did not specifically deny the term about cash against delivery but they relied on a business usage according to which delivery was to be given before cash and they contended that there was ratification by the appellants. In that state of pleadings it was evident that the suit could have been decided soon if it was intelligently tackled. Unfortunately, the appellants filed their plaint against a dead person and it was not till 29-9-48 that the plaint was allowed to be amended. After the written statement was filed, the appellants should have seen that proper issues were raised and the suit was fixed for hearing soon. Instead of doing so, the respondents were given an opportunity to deny the term and arguments were addressed to the Court to show that the term existed. Not only that but the appellants, suing the respondents for damages, in the alternative sued the vendors to recover price of goods. It was clear that if the vendors were able to pay the price, no loss was sustained. Further the fact to be considered is that the appellants were not entitled to interest before the suit. Thus considering the nature of the suit, the get up of the plaint, the way in which the suit was conducted by the appellants, this does not appear to be a fit case in which interest should be granted. The question of interest pendente lite became important as considerable period elapsed between the date of the institution of the suit and the date of judgment. Apparently the appellants were, if not mainly, substantially responsible for the delay caused. The learned pleader for the appellants contended that as defendants denied their liability, plaintiffs were entitled to interest pendente lite as compensation and reliance was placed on — 'Jethi Lalji v. Ghandhi Karson', AIR 1949 Kutch 6 (J). What that case laid down was that interest pendente lite was payable as compensation. At the time that case was decided, Civil Procedure Code, Act 5 of 1908, was not in force and hence it was laid down that interest pendente lite could be awarded as compensation. Now the provisions of S. 34, C. P. C. apply.

(6) I therefore hold that in this case discretion could properly be exercised in refusing interest before judgment. The decree passed by the trial Court is therefore confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 17 of 1953, D/- 5-8-1953.

Penal Code (1860), S. 120B — Charge: AIR 1938 Mad 130, Dissented from.

Criminal conspiracy, defined in S. 120A and made punishable under S. 120B, is a new substantive offence introduced by Chap. VIA in the Criminal Law of India. It follows that where it was alleged and prima facie shown that an offence of criminal conspiracy was committed, a charge under that section could be framed. If in pursuance of the said criminal conspiracy, offences were committed, there is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure which prohibits framing of charges for those offences along with the charge for criminal conspiracy. Charge for other offences may be for commission of substantive offence by one or more of the conspirators and abetment by others. There is nothing illegal in framing a charge of criminal conspiracy against certain persons and at the same time, framing charges of other offences, substantively or by abetment, alleged to have been committed in pursuance of the conspiracy. ORDER: This is a petition for revision of an order dated 18-6-1953, made by the Additional Magistrate, F. C. Anjar, in a criminal proceeding initiated by the petitioner, indicting commission of offences under S. 420, and S. 477A read with S. 109, Penal Code by opponents 1 to 3 and one Soni, since deceased. At the stage of framing charges, the learned Magistrate discharged opponent 3, held that a charge under S. 120B, Penal Code, could not be framed according to law and directed framing of charges under S. 420 against opponent 1 and under S. 420 read with S. 34 and S. 477A read with S. 109 against opponent 2. As the order discharging opponent 3 could be revised by the Sessions Court, Kutch, the petitioner was directed to move that Court for obtaining the relief sought.

(2) The facts of the case are that opponent 1 had taken a contract from the Sindhu Re-settlement Corporation, represented by the petitioner, for construction of cement foundations; opponent 2 was working as a manager of opponent 1; opponent 3 was supervising the work on behalf of the Corporation; all the opponents and Soni since deceased, conspired to defraud the Corporation and in pursuance of that conspiracy, false measurements were entered, running bills were encashed and thus the Corporation was cheated.

(3) It seems that at the stage of framing charges, the learned Magistrate was requested on behalf of the petitioner to frame a charge under S. 120B, Penal Code. The learned Magistrate, without considering the evidence led, observed that the section applied only when no offence was committed. In support of his observation, he relied on — 'In Re Venkata-ramia', AIR 1938 Mad 130 (A). He also mentioned the fact that the petitioner had not specifically mentioned indictment under S. 120B, Penal Code, in his complaint. It is urged on behalf of the petitioner that the view held by the learned Magistrate is not correct and therefore, the order be set aside.

(4) It is rare that this Court interferes in revision with interim orders made by Subordinate Courts in pending proceedings. The question of law raised for consideration by this petition is one of general importance which might govern other cases. Moreover, the position created by the order made is quite peculiar. The opponents are neither discharged nor charged, so far as the offence under S. 120B, Penal Code, is concerned. This Court has, therefore, to consider the legality of the order made.

(5) In Ratanlal's Law of Crimes, Edn. 18 at page 207, it is observed that S. 120B only applies where no offence has been actually committed. In support of this observation the learned authors have relied on the Madras case cited in para 2 above. The decision in that case mainly rested on the ground that sanction was necessary for initiation of a proceeding indicting commission of an offence under S. 120B. Incidentally, it was observed that where the matter had gone beyond the stage of mere conspiracy and offence was alleged to have been actually committed in pursuance thereof, these two sections were wholly irrelevant. The reasons stated were that where the offence was alleged to have been committed by two or more persons, such of them as actually took part in the commission should be charged with the substantive offence, while those who were alleged to have abetted it by conspiracy should be charged with the offence of abetment under S. 109, Penal Code.

(6) Criminal conspiracy, defined in S. 120A and made punishable under S. 120B, is a new substantive offence introduced by Chap. VIA in the Criminal Law of India. It follows that where it was alleged and prima facie shown that an offence of criminal conspiracy was committed, a charge under that section could be framed. If in pursuance of the said criminal conspiracy, offences were committed, there is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure which prohibits framing of charges for those offences along with the charge for criminal conspiracy. Charges for other offences may be for commission of substantive offence by one or more of the conspirators and abetment by others. It, therefore, does not appear how a charge under S. 120B, under the circumstances, cannot be framed, according to law or is irrelevant. If it was intended that a charge under S. 120B could only be made in those rare cases where no crime has been committed in pursuance of a criminal conspiracy, the legislature would have made its intention clear by adding a suitable proviso to S. 120B. The legislature had made it clear that criminal conspiracy was punishable 'where no express proviso is made in this Code for punishment of such conspiracy.'

For accepting the Madras view, it will be necessary to read a further proviso in S. 120B as under:

'and where no crime has been committed in pursuance of such a conspiracy.'

It was not held by the Madras High Court in the case cited that provision for punishment of substantive offence and abetment thereof committed in pursuance of a criminal conspiracy, was express provision made in the Code for punishment of such a conspiracy.

(7) In view of the discussion in the preceding para, it will be necessary to consider the view held by other High Courts. The learned counsel for the petitioner relied on — 'Emperor v. Ramrao Mangesh', AIR 1932 Bom 406 (B); — 'Vankata Hanumantha Rao v. Emperor', AIR 1934 Mad 88 (C); — 'Abdul Salim v. King Emperor', AIR 1922 Cal 107 (D) and — 'Kunwar Sen v. Emperor', AIR 1933 Oudh 86 (E). These cases do show that charges for offences alleged to have been committed in pursuance of a criminal conspiracy were framed along with a charge for criminal conspiracy. But it does not appear that the question under consideration was raised in those cases. Reliance was also placed on — 'In re Surajpalsingh Indrapalsingh', AIR 1938 Nag 328 (F). Referring to the Madras case, it was observed by the Nagpur High Court, that it was legal to try an accused person on a charge of criminal conspiracy to commit an offence even though the substantive offence had been carried out.

The learned Pleader for the opponents relied on — 'Jugeshwar Singh v. Emperor', AIR 1936 Pat 346 (G). In that case, it was held that where a criminal conspiracy amounted to abetment under S. 107, it was necessary to invoke the aid of Ss. 120A and 120B. This view was based on the interpretation of the proviso

'where no express provision is made in this Code for the punishment of such a conspiracy' used in S. 120B. According to the view of the Patna High Court, S. 120B was designed to cover two classes of cases. First class is where conspiracy is found for commission of a serious offence but no act or illegal omission had taken place in pursuance of it. This is so because the proviso to the section provides that an agreement to commit an offence shall amount to a criminal conspiracy. Second class is where some act besides the agreement is done in pursuance thereof. It was observed that this conspiracy in no case would amount to abetment and where it amounted to abetment, it was unnecessary to invoke the aid of S. 120B. It was not held that a charge under S. 120B could not be framed under such circumstances. It seems that the view is expressed on the interpretation of the phrase 'where no express provision is made in this Code for the punishment of such a conspiracy.'

The Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Sind has come to a contrary conclusion — 'Udhasing Tahilsingh v. Emperor', AIR 1916 Sind 95 (H), followed in — 'Kishanchand v. Emperor', AIR 1926 Sind 171 (I). In — 'Emperor v. Pir Muindin', AIR 1944 Sind 225 (J), it was held that in such a case it would be sufficient that the persons concerned be proceeded against for the crime itself and abetment thereof and that they need not necessarily be charged also with criminal conspiracy.

(8) I prefer to follow the view of the Nagpur High Court and hold that there is nothing illegal in framing a charge of criminal conspiracy against certain persons and at the same time, framing charges of other offences, substantively or by abetment, alleged to have been committed in pursuance of the conspiracy. The view so held by me is supported by authorities vide — 'Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Monmohan Roy', AIR 1915 Cal 688 (2) (K); — 'Ba Chit Maung v. Emperor', AIR 1930 Rang 114 (L), in which charges of offences committed in pursuance of the conspiracy were joined with the charge of conspiracy. In — 'Emperor v. Karamalli Gaulamalli', AIR 1938 Bom 481 (M), it was held that where conspiracy was charged, it was always open to the prosecution to charge further that the illegal acts which were the object of the conspiracy had been carried out and that the said illegal acts should be separately charged for being separately punished.

(9) Result is that the order made by the learned Magistrate, in so far as it held that no charge could be framed under S. 120B as it only applied when no offence had been committed, is set aside. This judgment may not be taken to have decided anything more than the question of law raised. It will be open to the learned Magistrate to consider such other contentions to the framing of a charge under S. 120B, such as insufficiency of prima facie evidence, absence of sanction etc. as may be raised before him.

A/M.K.S.

Order accordingly.

State v. Ambaram and others, Opponents.
Criminal Ref. No. 23 of 1950, D/- 4-10-1950.
Criminal P.C. (1898), Ss. 350(1) Proviso (a) and 4(1)(k) — Trial — Meaning — Inquiry and trial — Distinction — Warrant case —
Charge framed — Case taken up by another
Magistrate — Charge is not wiped out.

The term "trial" as used in the Code pre-supposes the commission of an offence but an inquiry may cover inquiries into matters other than offences e.g. inquiries concerning disputes as to immovable property or as regards forfeiture of bonds executed by sureties etc. A trial means only the proceeding taken in Court after a charge has been drawn up. Although the law dispenses with the necessity of framing a formal charge in a summons case, it is incumbent upon the Magistrate to state to the accused the particulars of the offence and to ask him to show cause why he should not be convicted (Section 242). In summary trial also, the procedure prescribed for summons cases is to be followed in that class of cases, and that prescribed for warrant cases in cases of that class: Case law Rel. on. 25 Cal. 863 and AIR 1922 Lah. 49, Dissent. (Paras 5 & 6)

A proceeding before the Magistrate in a warrant case under Chapter XXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure is only an inquiry until a charge is framed. It becomes a trial only after a charge is framed.

Hence, in a warrant case if a charge has been framed by one Magistrate and then the case is taken up by another Magistrate, the charge is not necessarily wiped out because the accused chooses to exercise the right given to him by proviso (a) to sub-section (1) of S. 350. AIR 1915 Mad. 23, Foll.

KAUL C. J.: This case has been referred to a Bench by a learned Single Judge of this Court. A reference was made by the Additional District Magistrate Dhar, recommending that an order passed by the District Sub-Judge (First Class Magistrate) Sardarpur, dated 11th August 1949 be set aside. It came up before a learned Single Judge of this Court. He was of opinion that the question raised by the reference was one on which there was considerable difference of opinion among various High Courts in India, and accordingly has referred the matter to a Bench. The point of law which came up for consideration before the learned Judge arose thus:

Six persons were challaned by the Amzera Police to take their trial for various offences under sections 135, 314 and 444 of the Gwalior Penal Code (corresponding to sections 148, 452 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code). The case came up before the District Sub-Judge, Sardarpur, a first class magistrate. After recording some evidence, he framed the charges. After the prosecution evidence was closed and all the accused persons except one had been examined, the case was transferred under an order of the Law Department (Gwalior State) to another Magistrate—viz., Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Sardarpur. The case was taken up by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 15th of April, 1949, and on that day the accused asked for a de novo trial. The learned Magistrate directed that the prosecution witnesses be examined afresh. In an order recorded on 11th August 1949, he held that under section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure though the accused were entitled to demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard, the transfer of the case, from the court of the District Sub-Judge, Sardarpur, to his court did not have the effect of wiping out the charges that were framed. The accused went in revision against this order before the Additional Sessions Judge, Dhar, who made this reference recommending that the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Sardarpur, be set aside.

The question for consideration therefore is, whether on a correct interpretation of section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure if, a warrant case pending before a Magistrate is, as a result of his transfer or for some other reason taken up by another Magistrate, and the accused makes the demand referred to in Proviso (a) to sub-section (1), is the charge framed by the first Magistrate necessarily wiped out, and must the entire proceeding in the case, be commenced afresh before the second Magistrate? Section 350(1) reads as follows:

"Whenever any Magistrate, after having heard and recorded the whole or any part of the evidence in an inquiry or a trial, ceases to exercise jurisdiction therein, and is succeeded by another Magistrate who has and who exercises such jurisdiction, the Magistrate so succeeding may act on the evidence so recorded by his predecessor, or partly recorded by his predecessor and partly recorded by himself; or he may re-summon the witnesses and recommence the inquiry or trial:

Provided as follows:

- (a) in any trial, the accused may, when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings, demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard;
- (b) the High Court, or, in cases tried by Magistrate subordinate to the District Magistrate, the District Magistrate may, whether there be an appeal or not, set aside any conviction passed on evidence not wholly recorded by the Magistrate before whom the conviction was held, if such Court or District Magistrate is of opinion that the accused has been materially prejudiced thereby, and may order a new inquiry or trial.

(2) An examination of Sub-s. (1) will show that of the two options given by it to the Magistrate, the first is controlled by two provisos. For the purposes of the present discussion we need consider only proviso (a). The Sub-section empowers the Magistrate:

- (1) Either to proceed on the evidence recorded by his predecessor or partly by his predecessor and partly recorded by himself, or
- (2) to resummon the witnesses and recommence the inquiry or trial.

If he adopts the latter course i.e., resummons the witnesses and recommences the entire proceeding, the charge is automatically wiped out with the rest of the proceeding, and the question which forms the subject-matter of this reference does not arise. In case, however, the Magistrate decides to proceed on the evidence recorded by his predecessor or partly by his predecessor and partly by himself, the accused, if he is on trial can demand that the prosecution witnesses or any of them whose evidence was not recorded by the second Magistrate be re-summoned and re-heard. This demand must be made at the commencement of the proceeding by the second Magistrate.

(3) It is noteworthy that the language used in the sub-section is different from that used in proviso(a). While under the sub-section, the Magistrate may if he so chooses, "recommence the inquiry or trial", but if he decides otherwise, the only demand an accused on trial can make is, "that the witnesses or any of them may be re-summoned and re-heard". We cannot assume that the distinction between the language employed at two places in the same sub-section is devoid of significance.

(4) Reading the words of sub-section and of proviso (a) in their ordinary natural meaning we find that it is open to the succeeding Magistrate either of his own accord or at the request of the accused, to re-summon all the witnesses and re-commence the entire proceeding. The question, however, is whether the accused has a right to insist that the entire proceeding should be re-commenced. As the proviso omits the word 'inquiry' and refers only to 'trial', it is clear that if the proceeding before the Magistrate is only an inquiry, the accused cannot make a demand that the witnesses be re-summoned and re-examined. He can do so only in a trial. We have, therefore, to determine when does a proceeding detailed in Chapter XXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure become a trial. Is it a trial from its inception as held in — 'Gomer Sirda v. Queen Empress', 25 Cal 863, i.e., when the case is called on with the Magistrate on the Bench, the accused in the dock, and the representatives of the prosecution and for the defence if the accused be defended, present in Court for the hearing of the case. Or is it that the proceeding till the stage before the charge is framed and is read out to the accused, or some analogous procedure is adopted is only an inquiry which develops into a trial only after this is done. A comparison of the definitions of certain terms in the Codes of 1861, 1872, 1882 and 1898 may be helpful in determining the question.

"Year"	"Inquiry"	"Enquired into"	"Trial"
1861	Not defined	Comprises every proceeding preliminary to trial.	Not defined.
1872	Includes every inquiry conducted by a Magistrate or Court under the Code.	Comprises every proceeding preliminary to trial.	Proceedings taken in Court after a charge had been drawn up.
1882	Do.	Not defined.	Not defined.
1898	Includes every inquiry other than a trial conducted by a Magistrate or Court under the Code.	Not defined.	Not defined.

(5) The Act of 1872 further provided that for purposes of Chapters XVI and XVIII a "trial" includes all proceedings from the time that accused appears in a Court. It will be noted that the Indian Legislature has always maintained a distinction between an inquiry and a trial and though the Code of 1882 did not contain any definition of the expression "trial" and defined 'inquiry' as including every enquiry conducted by a Magistrate or a Court under the Code, the High Court of Calcutta held in — 'Haridas San-yal v. Saritulla', 15 Cal 608, that an inquiry did not include a trial. The Legislature made it clear in the Code of 1898 that the view taken by the Calcutta High Court was correct. As has been seen the Code of 1872 expressly laid down that "trial" meant only the proceeding taken in court after a charge had been drawn up. The fact that this definition was dropped and not reproduced in the Code of 1882, need not lead to the inference that there was an intention to give the term "Trial" a connotation different from what it bore in the Code of 1872. Nor should the headings of Chapters XX and XXI lead us to a different conclusion. These chapters are headed "Trial of summons cases by Magistrate" and "Trial of Warrant cases by Magistrates". It does not necessarily follow from these headings that every section contained in these chapters relates to the proceeding known as "trial". The term "trial" as used in the Code pre-supposes the commission of an offence but an inquiry may cover inquiries into matters other than offences e.g., inquiries concerning disputes as to immovable property or as regards forfeiture of bonds executed by sureties etc. etc. See: — 'Hemasingh v. Emperor', AIR 1929 Pat 644; — 'Charan Mahto v. Emperor', AIR 1930 Pat 274; — 'Queen Empress v. Chotu', 9 All 52; — 'Palaniandy v. Emperor', 32 Mad 218; — 'Narayanaswami Naidu v. Emperor', 32 Mad 220; — 'Shriramulu v. K. Veerasalingam', 38 Mad 585; — 'S. Mohammad Husain v. Mirza Fakhrulla Beg', AIR 1932 Oudh 298; — 'Sher Muhammad v. Emperor', AIR 1923 Lah 270.

(6) I am aware that a different view has been expressed in some reported cases. These cases like — 'Gomer Sirda v. Queen Empress', 25 Cal 863, do not take into account the considerations to which reference has been made above and proceed mainly on the popular meaning of the word 'trial'. The view taken in — 'Sahib Din v. Emperor', AIR 1922 Lah 49 at p. 54 was that a trial cannot be said to commence only when a charge is framed. It was pointed out that if a trial be held not to commence before a charge is framed, then what is spoken of as a trial of summons cases and a summary trial are not really trials at all but only inquiries. With the greatest respect, I may point out that under our Code though the law dispenses with the necessity of framing a formal charge in a summons case, it is incumbent upon the Magistrate to state to the accused the particulars of the offence and to ask him to show cause why he should not be convicted (section 242). In summary trials also the procedure prescribed for summons cases is to be followed in that class of cases, and that prescribed for warrant cases in cases of that class. The only difference is that the record of the proceeding shall not be elaborate but will be as provided in sections 262 and 264.

(7) I respectfully agree with the view of law taken in — 'T. Shriramulu v. K. Veerasalingam', 38 Mad 585, that the proceeding before the Magistrate in a warrant case under Chapter XXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure is only an inquiry until a charge is framed. It becomes a trial only after a charge is framed. If this distinction is borne in mind, the answer to the question raised by this reference is clear. If in proceedings relating to a warrant case a charge has been framed by one Magistrate and then the case is taken up by another Magistrate the charge is not necessarily wiped out because the accused chooses to exercise the right given to him by proviso (a) to sub-section (1) of section 350. In the case under reference the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Sardarpur, decided not to re-commence the inquiry. He, however, acceded to the demand of the accused that the prosecution witnesses be re-summoned and re-examined. This in my opinion was sufficient compliance with the law.

(8) The reference made by the Additional District Magistrate, Dhar is therefore, rejected.

(9) MEHTA J.: I agree.

Criminal Ref. No. 15 of 1951, D/- 20-7-1951.

Criminal P.C. (1898), S. 497 — Principles governing bail — Anticipatory bail.

Anticipatory bail is repugnant to the provisions of the Code. (Para 5)

Bail under S. 497 cannot be granted merely because a person is accused of a non-bailable offence and he appears before the Court. There must be some restraint on the applicant and if he is not already arrested there must be a warrant for arrest against him. If under such circumstances he appears before Court and surrenders himself he may be released on bail: AIR 1950 EP 53 (F.B) and AIR 1950 Sind 19, Rel. on. (Para 5)

Where the applicants do not state that they are accused of any offence at all, much less of a non-bailable offence, and all that they state is that the police are trying to implicate them in some case and are about to arrest them, there is no case which would justify taking action under S. 497. ORDER: This is a reference under S. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The facts of the case out of which this reference has arisen are briefly as follows:

Hirachand and others presented applications to the railway magistrate, Lashkar, that they had come to know that the police were trying to implicate them in some false case and arrest them. Hence, explanation be asked for from police and the applicants be admitted to bail. The railway magistrate asked for explanation from the police and released all the three applicants on bail of Rs. 2,000/-, with a surety of Rs. 4,000/- each. Against this order a revision was filed by the Government in the court of the sessions judge, Gwalior. The learned Sessions judge being of the opinion that the order of the lower court was improper has made this reference to set aside the order.

(2) The question for consideration in this case is whether a person, who is not under any restraint, can apply for what is known as anticipatory bail. Section 497 states that when any person accused of any non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station, or appears or is brought before a court, he may be released on bail, etc. The section, no doubt lays down that a person accused of any non-bailable offence, who appears before a court, may be released on bail. The question for determination is "does the section contemplate that a person is to be released when he appears before a court even though he is under no restraint"?

(3) The word 'bail' is defined in Wharton's Law Lexicon as follows:

"to set at liberty a person arrested or imprisoned, on security being taken for his appearance on a day and at a place certain, which security is called bail, because the party arrested or imprisoned is delivered into the hands of those who bind themselves or become bail for his due appearance when required, in order that he may be safely protected from prison, to which they have, if they fear his escape, etc., the legal power to deliver him."

In Stroud's Judicial dictionary 'Bail' is described as follows:

"'Baile' is when a man is taken or arrested for felony, suspicion of felony, indicted of felony, or any such case, so that he is restrained of his liberty. And, being by law bailable, offereth surety to those which have authority to baile him, which sureties are bound for him to the King's use in a certain sum of money, or body for body, that he shall appear before the Justices of Gaol-delivery at the next sessions & c. Then upon the Bonds of these Sureties, as is aforesaid he is bailed, that is to say, set at liberty untill the day appointed for his appearance."

Both these definitions make it amply clear that it is only when a person's liberty is restrained that he is released on bail, that is, delivered into the hands of those, who stand surety for him.

Apart from the dictionary meaning of the word 'bail' a perusal of chapter XXXIX of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which deals with the subject-matter of bail, leads one to the same conclusion. Section 500 enjoins that as soon as the bond has been executed a person, for whose appearance it has been executed shall be released. Section 501 requires that if insufficient sureties have been accepted through mistake, fraud or otherwise or if afterwards they become insufficient, the court may issue a warrant of arrest directing that the person released on bail be brought before it and may order him to find sufficient sureties and on his failing so to do, may commit him to jail. Similar provisions are found in Section 502, under which all or any of the sureties may apply to the magistrate to discharge the bond. All these three sections indicate that a person is to be released from some custody and where sureties are found to be insufficient or where they become insufficient or where the sureties desire to discharge their bond, a person released is to be committed to the custody again. This lends support to the view that a person can be released on bail only when he is placed under some restraint.

(4) This question came up for consideration before a Full Bench of the East Punjab High Court (Vide — 'Amir Chand v. The Crown', Cri. Misc. Case No. 204 of 1949, reported in — '5 Dom LR (EP) 43') Khosla J. in that case came to the following conclusion:

"My conclusion may now be briefly summarised. The very notion of bail presupposes some form of previous restraint. Therefore, bail cannot be granted to a person who has not been arrested and for whose arrest no warrant has been issued. Section 498, Criminal P. C., does not permit the High Court or the court of session to grant bail to any one whose case is not covered by Ss. 496 and 497, Criminal Procedure Code. It follows, therefore, that bail can only be allowed to a person who has been arrested or detained without warrant or appears or is brought before a court. Such person must be liable to arrest and must surrender himself before the question of bail can be considered. In the case of a person who is not under arrest but for whose arrest warrants have been issued bail can be allowed if he appears in court and surrenders himself. No bail can be allowed to a person at liberty for whose arrest no warrants have been issued."

Both the learned Judges Harnam Singh J. and Kapur J. who along with Khosla J. constituted the Full Bench agreed with Khosla J. With great respect I agree with the view taken by the East Punjab High Court. A similar view has also been taken by Sindh High Court in — 'Md. Abbas v. The Crown', AIR 1950 Sindh 19.

(5) From the discussion above, it is clear that bail under Section 497 cannot be granted simply because a person is accused of a non-bailable offence and appears before a court of law. He must be under some restraint. If he is not already arrested there must be at least a warrant of arrest issued against him. If there be a warrant of arrest and he appears before a court and surrenders himself then he may be released on bail. But anticipatory bail is repugnant to the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(6) In the present case applications of Hira-chand, Nandlal and Shyamlal do not even state that they have been accused of any non-bailable offence. They do not even state that they have been accused at all. All that the applications state is that the police are trying to get them falsely implicated in some case and are about to arrest them. Such a case does not justify an action under Section 497 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The persons released have neither specifically been accused of any non-bailable offence nor have they been arrested or detained nor has any warrant of arrest been issued against them. In these circumstances the railway magistrate was wrong in releasing Shyamlal, Hirachand and Nandlal on bail.

(7) The reference is, therefore, accepted and the orders passed by the railway magistrate releasing Hirachand, Shyamlal and Nandlal on bail are set aside.

Criminal Revn. No. 141 of 1951, D/- 19-3-1952.

Criminal P.C. (1898), Ss. 514 and 439 — Forfeiture of bond — Conditions which must be fulfilled before court can realise penalty — Realisation of penalty without notice to show cause is illegal.

Before an order for forfeiture can be passed under S. 514, the court should come to a finding based on some evidence that the bond has been forfeited and then it has to record the grounds of such proof. It is only when this is done, that a notice is to be issued to show cause why the penalty should not be realised. (Para 2)

Where the Court realises the penalty without giving notice to surety to show cause why the penalty should not be paid, the order is illegal and would be set aside in revision. AIR 1949 EP 221 and AIR 1928 Cal. 261, Rel. on. (Para 3)

ORDER: The only point raised in this case is that, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was wrong in forfeiting security without issuing notice to the parties concerned. It appears that on 13-11-1950 the surety was asked to produce the accused before the court on 22-12-1950. On that date, neither the accused nor the surety was present in the court. Hence the Sub-Divisional Magistrate forfeited the security. Against that order, an appeal was preferred before the District Magistrate. That appeal was dismissed, and the order of the trial court was confirmed. Consequently the surety has filed this revision.

(2) Section 514, sub-section (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code reads as follows:

"Whenever it is proved to the satisfaction of the court, by which a bond under this Code has been taken, or of the court of a Presidency Magistrate or of the Magistrate of the First Class, or, when the bond is for appearance before a court to the satisfaction of such court, that such bond has been forfeited, the court shall record the grounds of such proof, and may call upon any person bound by such bond to pay the penalty thereof, or to show cause why it should not be paid."

There are thus two stages which have to be followed according to section 514. First is that it must be proved to the satisfaction of the court that the bond has been forfeited whereupon the court is to record the grounds of such proof, and the second is that the court, on being satisfied as aforesaid, may call upon the person bound by such bond to pay the penalty thereof or to show cause why it should not be paid. The first stage, therefore, is that the court should come to a finding based on some evidence that the bond has been forfeited, and then, it has to record the grounds of such proof. It is only when this is done, that a notice is to be issued to show cause why the penalty should not be realised. The court in this case has not recorded the grounds of forfeiture. Therefore, the stage of giving notice has not yet arrived. The view I have taken is supported by — 'Mt. Taro v. The Crown', AIR 1949 EP 221, — 'Mon Mohan v. Emperor', AIR 1928 Cal 261 and — 'Ram Bilas v. Emperor', AIR 1940 Pat 375. The revision, therefore, has no force.

(3) It appears, however, that directly after the order of forfeiture was passed, the accused presented himself before the court and paid the penalty. If that be so, the trial court was wrong in realising the penalty without giving notice to show cause why it should not be paid. There does not appear any order on record calling upon the surety to pay the penalty or to show cause why it should not be paid. Penalty, therefore, was illegally realized. In — 'Mt. Taro v. Crown', AIR 1949 EP 221, it has been held that where the action, under this section (514 Cri. Pro. Code) to recover the penalty is taken before the person bound by the bond is called upon to pay the penalty or to show cause why it should not be paid, it is illegal. The same view has been taken in — 'Mon Mohan v. Emperor', AIR 1928 Cal. 261. In these circumstances, realization of penalty without giving notice to show cause, was illegal.

(4) Accordingly, invoking the powers under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it is directed that the penalty realized be refunded and after giving notice to the surety to pay the penalty or to show cause why it should not be paid, suitable orders be passed according to law. The revision petition is allowed.

KAUL C. J. AND MEHTA J.

Mulla Tyebali, Applicant v. Dwarka Harikishan, Opponent.

Civil Misc. Appln. No. 15 of 1950, D/- 20-9-1951.

Houses and Rents — Madhya Bharat Sthan Niyantran Vidhan of S. Y. 2006 (15 of 1950) — Validity of, so far as it extended to Mhow — (Constitution of India, Art. 246 and Sch. 7, List I — Union List, Item 3).

On the date when the Constitution of India came into force viz., 26-1-1950 and on the date when Sthan Niyantran Vidhan was made applicable to Mhow on 9-2-1950, Mhow was not Cantonment town and, therefore, Madhya Bharat Legislature had the authority to extend the provisions of Sthan Niyantran Vidhan to Mhow. Mhow ceased to be a Cantonment town by virtue of the notification No. 219, Political, published in Government of India Gazette Extra-Ordinary dated 12-8-1947 by the Government of India. It was not recognised as a Cantonment town by the Holkar State after it was retroceded by the Crown Representative nor was it recognised as a Cantonment by the Madhya Bharat State when Holkar State was integrated in Madhya Bharat. Hence on the 9th February, 1950, the Madhya Bharat Government was perfectly competent to extend the provisions of the Sthan Niyantran Vidhan and to repeal the Mhow Neemuch Rent Control Order. The Act was, therefore, not 'ultra vires' of the Constitution of India, Sch. 7, List 1, Union List, Item 3, so far as Mhow was concerned. (Para 15)

V. R. Dhodapkar, for Applicant; Advocate General, for the State as amicus curiae.

MEHTA J.: The facts leading to this miscellaneous application are as follows.

(2) There is a house No. 113-B situated in Bajaz Galli Mhow Cantt. The ownership of this originally vested in the Cantonment Mhow. Subsequently this house was purchased by Mulla Tyebali in September, 1946 under a registered sale-deed from Cantonment Board Mhow.

(3) At that time Dwarka, son of Harikishan, the opponent lived in the house as a tenant of the Cantonment Board. Dwarka agreed to continue as tenant of Mulla Tyebali as the latter purchased the house from Cantonment Board.

(4) Mulla Tyebali wanted the premises for his own use and wanted to rebuild it. He, therefore, served a notice dated 25-10-1948, asking the non-applicant Dwarka to vacate the premises before the 30th of November, 1948.

(5) Under section 11 of the Mhow and Neemuch House Rent Control Law, 1946, a tenant can exercise option to renew or extend his tenancy. Dwarka, the tenant, sent a counter notice dated 10-11-1948, intimating his desire to extend the tenancy by one year, i. e. upto 1-12-1949 as provided in Section 11. The landlord made an application on 16-11-1948 to the Rent Controller, Mhow for disallowing the extension of tenancy. The Rent Controller, Mhow, after recording evidence disallowed the landlord's application with the result that the tenancy of Dwarka was extended to one year. On 8-11-1949, the landlord filed an appeal to the District Magistrate, Mhow.

(6) Pending the disposal of this appeal, the Sthan Niyamtran Vidhan of S. Y. 2006 was made applicable to Mhow on 9-2-1950. On 25-2-1950, the Additional District Magistrate Indore dismissed the appeal on the ground that the Sthan Niyamtran Vidhan of S. Y. 2006 had repealed the Mhow and Neemuch House Rent Control Law and therefore the appeal was competent.

(7) Now the main contention of Mr. Dhodapkar, learned pleader for the applicant, is that the Sthan Niyamtran Vidhan of S. Y. 2006 is ultra vires so far as Mhow Cantonment is concerned. He urged that having regard to the Seventh Schedule, List I-Union list, item No. 3, the delimitation of cantonment areas, local self-government in such areas, the constitution and powers within such areas of cantonment authorities and the regulation of house accommodation (including the control of rent) in such areas, shall be within the competence only of the central Legislature. According to Article 246 of the Constitution, Parliament has exclusive power to make laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List I in the Seventh Schedule, Union List. Therefore, he contended that the Madhya Bharat Legislature was not competent to legislate for the Mhow cantonment.

(8) This will lead to a consideration whether Mhow was a Cantonment town on the date the Constitution of India came into force viz. 26-1-1950.

(9) If Mhow was a Cantonment town on 26-1-1950, then certainly the State legislature had no right to extend the provisions of Sthan Niyamtran Vidhan to Mhow Cantonment. If not, then the Madhya Bharat legislature had a right to extend the provisions of Sthan Niyamtran Vidhan to Mhow Cantonment.

(10) On the 14th August, 1947 Mhow was retroceded to Holkar State and the Maharaja Holkar assumed sovereignty over Mhow Cantonment.

(11) As a historical retrospect, it may be mentioned that Mhow was given to British for subsidiary treaty for the purpose of quartering British troops. As soon as the treaty rights came to an end on the 14th August, 1947, the Central India Agency issued a Notification dated 9-8-1947, Notification No. 219, Political, Government of India Gazette Extra-ordinary dated 12-8-1947, stating that all laws existing in Mhow Cantonment shall cease to exist. Subsequently, the Mhow Cantonment Act ceased to have operation from 9-8-1947. Then on 14th August, 1947, the Holkar State Notification No. 5012-R dated the 14th

August, 1947 stated that the Crown Representative has retroceded to the Holkar State with effect from the 14th August, 1947, the jurisdiction exercised by him in the area now comprising the Cantonment of Mhow. The Holkar Government Notification of 14th August, 1947 stated that all the laws of Holkar State shall apply to the Cantonment. Only such of the existing laws in force in the Cantonment as are hereinafter specified shall continue in force temporarily in the Cantonment after retrocession.

(12) In my opinion the Holkar State Government did not recognise Mhow as a Cantonment town after it was retroceded to the Holkar State by the Crown Representative. Holkar State did not recognise Mhow as a Cantonment after its retrocession but only continued some of the laws that were prevalent in Mhow Cantonment.

(13) Mhow was not declared a Cantonment town under the provisions of section 3 of the Cantonment Act of 1924. According to Section 3 of the Cantonment Act of 1924, the Local Government with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, may, by notification in the Local Official Gazette, declare any place or places in which any part of His Majesty's regular forces or regular air force is quartered or which being in the vicinity of any such place or places, is or are required for the service of such forces to be a cantonment for the purposes of this Act. Now in this particular case after retrocession there was no declaration by the Holkar State declaring Mhow as a Cantonment town.

(14) Mhow ceased to be a cantonment town by force of order dated 9-8-1947, Notification No. 290, Political, published in Government of India Extraordinary Gazette dated 12-8-1947. According to this Notification of the Government of India all laws existing in Mhow Cantonment ceased to exist and Cantonment Act also ceased to have any operation. The Notification of the Holkar State No. 5012-R dated 14th August, 1947 did not recognise Mhow as a Cantonment Town. Holkar State armies were not quartered at Mhow. It appears to me obvious that the intention of the notification of the Holkar State Gazette of 14-8-1947 was to continue some of the laws in Mhow Cantonment temporarily. Just because of the laws of the Cantonment of Mhow are continued, it would not tantamount to a declaration of Mhow as a Cantonment town as envisaged in Section 3 of the Cantonment Act of 1924. Supplement to the Madhya Bharat Government Gazette dated the 16th September, 1950 has reproduced the Central Act, Ordinance No. 18 of 1950 of the 8th July, 1950 issued by Ministry of Defence in the Gazette of India. The Notification of 8-7-1950 issued by the Government of India declared Mhow to be a Cantonment town for the purposes of Cantonment Act of 1924. This was for the first time that the Government of India declared on 8th July, 1950 that Mhow is a Cantonment town within the meaning of Section 3 of the Cantonment Act of 1924. If Mhow had been recognised as a Cantonment town under the Cantonment Act of 1924, it was not necessary to declare it as a Cantonment town on the 8th July, 1950.

(15) Thus, it is clear that on the date when the Constitution of India came into force viz. 26-1-1950 and on the date when Sthan Niyamtran Vidhan was made applicable to Mhow on 9-2-1950, Mhow was not a Cantonment town and, therefore, Madhya Bharat legislature had the authority to extend the provisions of Sthan Niyamtran Vidhan to Mhow. Mhow ceased to be a Cantonment town by virtue of the notification No. 219, Political, published in Government of India Gazette Extraordinary dated 12-8-1947 by the Government of India. It was not recognised as a Cantonment town by the Holkar State nor was it recognised as a Cantonment by the Madhya Bharat State when Holkar State was integrated in Madhya Bharat. Hence I am clearly of opinion that on the 9th February, 1950, the Madhya Bharat Government was perfectly competent to extend the provisions of the Sthan Niyantiran Vidhan and to repeal the Mhow Neemuch Rent Control Order.

(16) The result is that I dismiss the application with costs.

(17) KAUL C. J.: I agree with the conclusion arrived at by Mehta J. and concur in the order passed by him.

(c) Hindu Law — Religious office — Yajman Vriti and Man Vriti compared — Divisibility of right of Yajman Vriti.

Both Yajman Vriti and Man Vriti are offerings made to a Purohit by a devout Hindu on the occasion of his officiating at religious ceremonies and functions. A Man Vriti, however, differs in this respect that the relation between a Yajman and Purohit is casual or temporary. There is no fixity of character and in consequence it is not a heritable asset. But a Yajman Vriti creates a permanent relation, which is regarded as a heritable property and some times transferable as well. The right to Yajman Vriti being a right in property which is heritable it is also divisible. Case law referred.

KHAN J.: This is a Special Appeal under S. 23 of the Madhya Bharat High Court of Judicature Act (Act 8 of 1949) against the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Mehta, in Civil Second Appeal No. 3 of 1948, decided by him on 18-10-1948, in which he set aside the judgment and decree of the two Courts below and non-suited the plaintiffs.

(2) I shall briefly state such facts of the case only as are necessarily for the purpose of this appeal without stating the case of parties in full.

(3) The plaintiffs, Ghisibai Brahmin, and Ram Kisan, the adopted grand-son of Bhawarlal, have brought this suit against the defendants on the allegation that the Yajman Vriti of Khandelwal Mahajan community of Indore was performed by the members of the family of the plaintiffs and the defendants, that the ancestors of the plaintiffs and the defendants had entered into an agreement regarding the division of income between them in the proportion of 2:3, that as a matter of fact the parties used to divide the income between themselves half and half. This suit was:

(1) For a declaration that the plaintiffs are entitled to 2/5th share of the income derived from the Yajman Vriti.

(2) for settlement of accounts.

(3) for the recovery of a sum that may be found due on the accounts being taken.

(4) The defence was that Yajman Vriti belonged exclusively to the defendants, and, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any share from this income. It was admitted that Bhawarlal did officiate at the ceremonies but it was at the instance of the defendants, and this did not entitle the plaintiffs to any share in the Yajman Vriti.

(5) The trial court held that the plaintiffs were entitled to 40 per cent of the income from Yajman Vriti and ordered accounts to be taken of this income from 1-3-1937 to the date of the decree. In appeal the District Judge, Indore confirmed the decision of the trial Court and dismissed the appeal. In Second Appeal No. 3 of 1948 before the High Court, Mr. Justice Mehta stated that Yajman Vriti could be founded either on usage or it may be the result of a grant, and as there was no evidence on record to establish the nature and the origin of the right, he allowed the appeal and non-suited the plaintiffs.

(6) It is apparent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Mehta, that he addressed himself to the question of discovering the origin of Yajman Vriti and expounded the proposition of law as to how it comes into existence. But let us consider whether for the purpose of this case it is necessary to trace the nature and the origin of Yajman Vriti.

(7) From a perusal of para 3 of the plaint and the corresponding para of the written statement, it appears that the plaintiffs based their claim on the fact that Yajman Vriti had been in existence in the families of the two (the plaintiffs and the defendants) for generations and that by an agreement between the ancestors of the two families, the profits accruing from Yajman Vriti were shared by them in the ratio of 2:3—the plaintiffs taking 2 parts and the defendants 3. In the written statement, the defendants admitted the existence of Yajman Vriti, but said that they were entitled to the income from the Yajman Vriti exclusively and that no offerings were divided as alleged.

(8) In view of what is stated in the pleadings, where the existence of Yajman Vriti is admitted by the parties and is a common ground, the only real dispute is with regard to the right of the plaintiffs in the Yajman Vriti and if that is proved, we have to ascertain the extent of the plaintiffs' share therein. This naturally obviates the necessity of going into the origin of the right. But I think that para 3 of the plaint and the written statement were not brought to the notice of Mr. Justice Mehta.

(9) It may also be stated that because there was no dispute as to the existence of the right of Yajman Vriti between the parties, no issue was deemed necessary and as a matter of fact no issue bearing on the point was framed by the Courts below.

(10) The learned counsel for the appellants has argued that the evidence in the case shows that for 20 years the conduct of the parties has been to divide the income from Yajman Vriti and this proves the establishment of the right of Yajman Vriti by usage, which fact Mr. Justice Mehta has overlooked. Mr. Chitale has referred to Easements and Licenses by K. N. Joshi 1948 Edition p. 141. As I have stated above, it is common ground that Yajman Vriti existed, so the point not being in issue, I need not look at the evidence which establishes the right. But I am afraid that a reference to Joshi's Law of Easements and Licenses is not helpful. It is a treatise on the well-known Law of Easements and Licenses. But nowhere has it been shown, nor can it be assumed that the right of Yajman Vriti is in the nature of a servitude, by reason whereof the Law of Easement becomes applicable to it. An Easement in English Law has been defined as a "privilege without profit which the neighbour of one neighbouring tenement has of another tenement" and the definition of the term Easement given in S. 4 of the Easements Act (Act 5 of 1882) needs only to be read to convince one that there is not even a remote affinity between the right of Yajman Vriti and the right of Easement. The learned counsel for the respondents has pointed out that there is nothing common between the two rights and that the Law of Easement and Licenses is a Law applicable to Easement and Licenses only, and, therefore, the argument that the right of Yajman Vriti was acquired by its existence for 20 years is not sustainable. I agree with the learned counsel for the respondents. The page to which our attention has been invited is 141 of the book. The discussion on the page is under S. 15 of the Easements Act, which deals with the mode of acquisition of an easement by prescription. And the discussion in the main centres round the 'fiction of a lost grant' in India. But all this refers to the acquisition of an easement. On a careful consideration of the entire Law on the subject, I am of the opinion, that it is not proper to bracket the right of Yajman Vriti with the right of easement or treat the two as being on the same level and plane. The reason which perhaps induced the learned counsel for the appellant to refer to it is the use of the word 'grant' because a grant can be the basis of a right of easement as well as that of the right of Yajman Vriti.

(11) Issue No. 6, framed by the trial Court, was directed towards finding out whether "Yajman Vriti" was the indivisible right of the defendants and that plaintiffs had no share in the same? In the settlement of the issue, the court, on the basis of evidence adduced by the parties, recorded its finding that the plaintiffs were entitled to participate in the income of Yajman Vriti and that their share was 40 per cent of the yield. This finding of fact has been confirmed by the District Judge and in view of this concurrent finding, it is not open to us to go behind it in a second appeal, much less so in the third appeal, which the present appeal before us purports to be. In — 'Durga Chaudharani v. Jewahir Singh', 17 Ind. App. 122 (FC), the Privy Council has laid down that there is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of erroneous finding of facts, however gross the error may seem to be.

(12) The learned counsel for the respondents has made several submissions which deserve to be noted. He has argued that the right in question is not Yajman Vriti, but it is Man Vriti, that as such the suit cannot be regarded as being one of civil nature under S. 9 of the Civil P. C., that income from the source is casual and personal and is not divisible and that even if it is proved that there was an agreement to divide the income, it should be deemed to have come to an end at the death of those who were parties to the contract. I propose to examine these submissions one by one.

(13) First, it is said that the right claimed is not Yajman Vriti, but Man Vriti. Before we proceed we must have a clear idea as to what Yajman Vriti and the Man Vriti are.

(14) There is no lack of decisions, which not only set out but also differentiate between the two rights. Both are offerings made to a Purohit by a devout Hindu on the occasion of his officiating at religious ceremonies and functions. A Man Vriti, however, differs in this respect that the relation between a Yajman and Purohit is casual or temporary. There is no fixity of character and in consequence it is not a heritable asset. But a Yajman Vriti creates a permanent relation, which is regarded as a heritable property. Yajman Vriti is a well-known institution which has been the subject of consideration in many cases. In — '43 All 356 (35?)', the right to the partition of Yajman Vriti was recognised. In — 'Sukhlal v. Bishambhar', 39 All 196, a mortgage of such right was given effect to. In short the right of Yajman Vriti has been held to be heritable and sometimes transferable as well. There is a very able discussion of the entire question in — 'Sarda Kunwar v. Gajanand', AIR 1942 All 320. It may pertinently be asked if it is necessary for us to decide whether the right claimed is in the nature of Yajman Vriti or Man Vriti. I think it is not necessary to do so. The reason is that according to para of the plaint the right claimed is Yajman Vriti and the defendants in para 3 of their written statement have referred to the right of Yajman Vriti also. The position taken up by the parties in all the courts through which this case has passed was with regard to the right of Yajman Vriti and not Man Vriti. The plea of Man Vriti is a new one and obviously it is sought to shift the ground. But having adopted one attitude in the courts below, the defendants shall not be permitted to advance a new and inconsistent plea, so as to place the plaintiffs at a disadvantage.

(15) As to the argument that the present suit is not of a civil nature, I would only say that the claim, on the foundation of which the plaintiffs have instituted this suit, has been held to be in respect of the right of Yajman Vriti and there is authority galore that such a right is a right in property and further more, that it is heritable. See — 'Beni Madho v. Hiralal', 43 All 20; — 'Mt. Sarda Kunwar v. Gajanand', AIR 1942 All 320; — 'Narayanan Lal v. Chulhan Lal', 15 Cal L J 376: 14 Ind. Cas 677; — 'Ramchander v. Chhabhu Lal', 1923 All L J 358; — 'Lachman Lal v. Baldeo Lal', AIR 1917 Pat 37. The argument, therefore, that the suit is not of a civil nature under S. 9 of the C. P. Code is not well founded.

(16) No authority has been cited by the learned counsel for the respondents for the proposition that income derived from Yajman Vriti is personal and not divisible. The right to Yajman Vriti being a right in property is heritable and in consequence it is also divisible. — 'Ramchander v. Chhabhu Lal', AIR 1923 All 350 is a case in which partition of Yajman Vriti was held to be valid.

(17) Regarding the last contention of the learned counsel of the respondents, namely that even if the parties agreed to divide the income from Yajman Vriti, the agreement should be regarded to have come to an end by the death of the parties and no further division is now possible. This contention is based on an argument which overlooks the nature of the Yajman Vriti right. This right has been held to be a right in the property, which is also heritable — 'Sarda Kunwar v. Gajanand', AIR 1942 All 320. This right is another name for the property which it represents and the property comes into being by operation of law. It is not a right or property that has come into existence as a result of any contract of partnership between the claimants. In this view of the matter, the question of the agreement continuing after the death does not at all arise. Besides this I may as well state that the defendants have not taken that plea in any of the Courts below and at this stage of the case, they shall not be permitted to raise new pleas. — See 'Ganga Bakhsh Singh v. Gokul Prasad', AIR 1918 Oudh 62.

(18) In result, the appeal is allowed and setting aside the judgment and decree of this Court passed in Civil Second Appeal No. 3 of 1948, on 18-10-1948, we confirm the judgment and decree of the courts below. The cost throughout would abide the event.

(19) SHINDE C. J.: I agree.

(b) Civil P.C. (1908), S. 115 — Jurisdiction — Irregular exercise — Rejection of evidence.

Section 115 is not directed against conclusions of law and fact in which the question of jurisdiction, to which alone it applies, is not involved. AIR 1917 PC 71. Rel. on. (Para 8)

An erroneous decision of a subordinate Court does not by itself involve that the Court has acted illegally or with material irregularity so as to justify interference in revision under cl. (c). Nevertheless, if the erroneous decision results in that Court exercising a jurisdiction not vested in it by law or failing to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law a case for revision arises under cl. (a) or cl. (b). AIR 1949 PC 239, Rel. on. (Para 8)

Ordinarily an order rejecting certain evidence as inadmissible cannot be called an irregular exercise of jurisdiction. Even where the decision is wrong, it cannot be said that the Court had failed to exercise jurisdiction. But yet there may be interlocutory orders of an extraordinary character involving an erroneous decision resulting in the irregular exercise of jurisdiction, as where the Court, as a result of faults of procedure and of not applying its mind to all the mandatory provisions of law on the question or as a result of wrong interpretation, refuses to admit in evidence the single document upon which the plaintiff's whole case depended and proceeds with the suit. In such a case if the error is palpable and gross and results in injustice, interference in revision is called for. (Paras 10 & 12)

Where under a deed possession was given to the creditor on the understanding that he was to retain the land for a period of 12 years and appropriate the income, determined at Rs. 100 a year, towards the discharge of the debt and in the same document the debtor also bound himself to pay the mortgage debt with interest at a specified rate in the event of the debt not being repaid.

Held (i) that it was clear from the contents of the document that the parties intended to maintain the relation of debtor and creditor and to maintain accounts and determine the balance of debt due on taking of such accounts and that the transfer was made to secure the debt. (Para 15)

(ii) that though there was no express provision for redemption, the mortgagor was entitled to redeem because it was implied in the condition that the mortgagee's right to the land was to cease after the expiry of the stipulated period during which he was entitled to retain possession of it and appropriate its income and profits. (Paras 15)

(iii) that the transaction was not a simple usufructuary mortgage, because there was the personal liability of the mortgagor to pay the debt and also because there was his right to redeem, the absence of which characteristics was essential to a simple usufructuary mortgage, and (Para 15)

(iv) that therefore it was an anomalous mortgage, a combination of simple and usufructuary mortgage, and not a Zuri-peshgi lease and this nature of it was not altered by the fact that calculation was made beforehand of the period for which rent and profits would be sufficient to pay off the debt. JUDGMENT: Plaintiff-petitioner filed a suit in the Court of Additional Munsiff, Hatod, against the defendant-opponent for a sum of Rs. 940/-. The facts of the case which gave rise to this suit are as follows: Plaintiff's father had money dealings with, and had lent money to, Kanhiram, brother of the defendant. On 3-5-1940 the accounts were settled and a balance was struck. Rs. 1200/- were found due to the plaintiff's father in Kanhiram's account. Kanhiram agreed to pay Rs. 1200/- and it was arranged that the plaintiff's father should take the defendant's field known as 'Khajurwala khet' for a period of 12 years and get his liability discharged by crediting Rs. 100/- every year for the enjoyment or occupation.

(2) The agreement was reduced to writing and recorded in the account-book of plaintiff's father and is alleged to have been signed by the defendant and his brother Kanharm. The agreement is in the following form:

"The balance due today is Rs. 1200/-. In lieu of this amount I give my field Khajurwala to the plaintiff for a period of 12 years. The Government dues will be paid by the plaintiff. I will have no objection to this. In case debt is not discharged I shall pay interest at the rate of Re. 1 annas 8 per month from this date and shall pay the debt in one lump sum."

(3) According to the plaint, the plaintiff's father continued in possession of the field for two years; but thereafter he was ousted. For a period of 4 years thereafter, the defendants paid Rs. 40/- every year upto Samvat 2002, but subsequently there was no payment. The plaintiff's father and Kanhiram are both dead. The plaintiff has, after giving credit to Rs. 360/- filed a suit for recovery of the balance.

(4) The defendant resisted the claim on many grounds, one of them being that the document of mortgage being unregistered is not admissible in evidence and it cannot be the basis of a suit. The learned Munsiff has decided this point in favour of the defendant.

(5) I am now asked by the petitioner, to interfere under S. 115, Civil P. C. and a preliminary objection has been raised on behalf of the opposite party that the order is not revivable. Reliance is placed by Mr. Pandit on — 'Raghubar Singh', AIR 1933 Oudh 345 (1), wherein a Division Bench held that an application under S. 115, Civil P. C. to revise the order of refusal to receive documentary evidence by the lower court does not lie as such order cannot be construed to be a decision of a case, nor is there any illegality in exercise of the jurisdiction which is vested by law. This was a suit for redemption wherein the defendants, after the issues had been framed, but before the evidence was commenced, filed an application for permission to tender in evidence certain documents in support of their defence. Permission was not granted by the trial Court and the order was held to be only an interlocutory one. The learned Judges, however, felt that the order passed by the subordinate Court was wrong and observed:

"We would, therefore, formally reject these applications, but we cannot take leave of them without pointing out to the learned Subordinate Judge that having regard to the nature of the documents which these applicants tendered in evidence before the trial commenced, he would have been better advised to have received them and to have proceeded to decide the case on the merits. We trust that the learned Subordinate Judge will do so when he is moved in that behalf again by these applicants."

(6) With respect to the learned Judges, I fail to appreciate the effect of this formal rejection of the revision. For all practical purposes, the revision seems to have been accepted.

(7) In — 'Isa Adam v. Bai Mariam', AIR 1927 Bom 664 also it was held that an interlocutory order of the lower Court rejecting certain evidence as inadmissible during the pendency of a suit is not revisable.

(8) There has formerly been a divergence of judicial opinion on the question whether a revision could be entertained against an interlocutory order. The entire case law on the subject has been carefully considered by a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court in — 'Gurdevi Bibi v. Mohammad Bakhsh', I. L. R. (1943) Lah. 257, which has held that the word 'case' in S. 115, Civil P. C. is wide enough to include interlocutory orders. The High Court thus is competent to entertain revision against an interlocutory order provided the three conditions mentioned in the first part of S. 115 are satisfied. In — 'T. A. Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Ayyar', 40 Mad 793, the Privy Council pointed out that S. 115 applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise, or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it, and that the section is not directed against conclusions of law and fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved. In a recent case — 'Joy Chand Lal v. Kamalaksha Chaudhury', AIR 1949 P. C. 239, Sir John Beaumont, delivering the judgment of the Board observed:

"There have been a very large number of decisions of the Indian High Courts on S. 115, to many of which their Lordships have referred. Some of such decisions prompt the observation that High Courts have not always appreciated that although error in a decision of a Subordinate Court does not by itself involve that the Subordinate Court has acted illegally or with material irregularity so as to justify interference in revision under subsection (c), nevertheless, if the erroneous decision results in the subordinate Court exercising a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or failing to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, a case for revision arises under subsection (a), or Sub-s. (b) and Sub-s. (c) can be ignored."

(9) It is difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule on the question, when does an erroneous decision result in Subordinate Court exercising a jurisdiction not vested in it by law or failing to exercise a jurisdiction so vested. Each case must be considered on the facts and circumstances of that case.

(10) Ordinarily an order of the lower Court rejecting certain evidence as inadmissible cannot be called an erroneous decision resulting in the irregular exercise of jurisdiction. The Lower Court has perfect jurisdiction to decide the question and it can decide it rightly as well as wrongly. Even if it decides wrongly it cannot be said that the Court failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law. But there may be interlocutory orders of extraordinary nature, e.g., if a plaintiff comes to depose and he is not allowed to be examined, surely, this will be a case of an erroneous decision resulting in the irregular exercise of jurisdiction. Then, as Sir Lawrence Jenkins said in 41 Cal 323, S. 115 can be called in aid when the failure of justice has been due to one or other of the faults of procedure; and, where the Court fails to apply its mind at all to the mandatory provisions of law relevant on the question — 'Raghubir Singh v. Mulchand', I. L. R. (1937) All 805 (FB), it acts in the exercise of its jurisdiction with material irregularity.

(11) In — 'Mt. Sukhia v. Kirpa Ram', I. L. R. (1945) All. 604, a wrong interpretation of the provision of law rendered the orders of the lower Court open to revision; and in — 'Mahomed Intisham Ali v. Lachhman Prasad', 15 Luck. 641, it was held that where a Judge proceeds with a suit as a result of misinterpretation of law he acts with material irregularity.

(12) So if a plaintiff's whole case depends upon a single document, as in the present case, and if as a result of the faults of the procedure, and of not applying the mind at all to the mandatory provisions of the law relevant on the question, or as a result of wrong interpretation or mis-interpretation of the provisions of law, the document is not admitted in evidence, and the Court proceeds with the suit, it will be virtually striking at its very foundation, denying the plaintiff a chance of presenting his case at all. In my opinion, this will amount to an erroneous decision resulting in the subordinate Court failing to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law; and if the error is gross & palpable and is likely to lead to injustice, it is an error such as S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure definitely intended to correct. I, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection and hold that this revision is competent.

(13) Now I take the point whether the agreement in question, reduced to writing, but not registered, can be admitted in evidence. The deed is drawn up in rather a crude and inartistic language. It gives possession of land to the creditor and authorises him to retain possession for a fixed period of twelve years only. He also binds himself to repay the mortgage-money, and where a mortgagor incurs a personal liability to repay, the mortgage cannot fall within the definition of a pure 'usufructuary mortgage' — 'Bishan Das v. Nand Ram', AIR 1936 Pesh. 48, the principal characteristic of this mortgage being an absence of a personal liability of the mortgagor to pay and the remedies of foreclosure or sale not being open to the mortgagee — 'Lachhman Singh v. Natha Singh', AIR 1940 Lah. 401 (FB).

(14) Either it is an 'anomalous mortgage, or it is a lease. In constructing a document as to whether it is a lease or a mortgage, according to the Privy Council in — 'Nidhasah v. Murlidhar', 25 All. 115, at p. 119, the following test may be applied:

"If it is not a security for the payment of any money or for the performance of any engagement, if no accounts are to be rendered or required, and if there is no provision of redemption, expressed or implied, it is simply a grant of land, for a fixed term free of rent, in consideration of a sum made up of past and present advances, though it may be described as a mortgage."

(15) In this case it is quite clear from the contents of the document that the transfer was made only to secure a debt and the parties intended to maintain the relation of a debtor and a creditor rather than that of landlord and a tenant. The existence of debt was specifically mentioned and the sentence "in case debt is not discharged then I shall pay interest at the rate of Rs. 1 annas 8 and shall pay the debt in one lump sum", implied that the accounts are to be maintained, and after taking the accounts it was to be seen how much debt, if any, remained. Moreover, the nature of the contract is not altered by the fact that the calculation is made beforehand of the period for which rent and profits will be sufficient to pay off both the principal and interest. It is true that there was no express provision for redemption but the creditor was to take possession of the field for 12 years and appropriate the income in liquidation of the debt, and it was clearly implied that after the expiry of the said period the right to the land was to cease. In — 'Tukaram v. Ramchand', 26 Bom 252 at p. 258 (FB), it was held that in such case the mortgagor was entitled to redeem. The Full Bench further observed:

"There is no apparent reason why such a contract should not come within the category of anomalous mortgages as defined in S. 98 of the T. P. Act, which lays down, that "the rights and liabilities of the parties shall be determined by their contract, as evidenced in the mortgage-deed, and, so far as such contract does not extend, by local usage".

After taking every thing into account I am of opinion, that the transaction in the present case was not a 'Zur-i-peshgi' lease, as held by the learned Munsiff, but was an anomalous mortgage—a combination of simple and usufructuary mortgage. The document created personal liability as divisible from a property obligation. The suit filed by the plaintiff was simply for the money debt and not for enforcement of lien, or charge, or, for possession of the property. The document, in fact, is not tendered in evidence for the purpose of proving a "transaction affecting property", nor does the plaintiff seek to establish the amount he is entitled to recover as compensation for relinquishing possession of that property. As there is an express covenant on the part of the mortgagor to repay the loan the document can be used as the basis of a claim for return of the money acknowledged to be due therein.

(16) Although the bond is not registered, in such a case, it can well be received in evidence in support of a claim to enforce the money obligation: vide — 'Sheo Pal v. Prag Dat', 3 All 229 (FB); — 'Gomaji v. Subbarayappa', 15 Mad 253; — 'P. V. M. Kunhu Moidu v. T. Madhava Menon', 32 Mad 410; — 'Basant Lal v. Jowahar Singh', AIR 1925 Lah. 356; — 'Baru Mal v. Daulat Ram', AIR 1932 Lah. 400 and — 'Khan-tamoni Dassi v. Biswa Nath', AIR 1933 Cal 786. In my opinion the document was clearly admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving a monetary transaction.

(17) I, therefore, allow the revision, set aside the order of the trial Court and send the case back to that Court so that it may decide this case after taking into consideration the document which it has rejected as inadmissible. Costs will abide the result.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 476 (B) and 476 — Offence under S. 193, Penal Code — Order under S. 476-B — No enquiry and preliminary order under S. 476 — Validity — (Penal Code (1860), S. 193).

Section 476-B does not contemplate that the appellate Court should, after hearing the parties, first pass a preliminary order stating that prima facie there was sufficient material for issuing notice to the parties concerned to show cause why they should not be prosecuted and then the Court should after again issuing a notice to the parties and hearing them, pass a final order disposing of the appeal. The appellate Court can after giving a notice of the appeal to the parties concerned proceed to hear the appeal and pass an appropriate order disposing of the appeal. (Para 2)

The power to make a preliminary inquiry under S. 476 is in the discretion of the Court and whether an inquiry is necessary or not depends on the facts and circumstances of each case. Where the persons proposed to be proceeded against under S. 193, Penal Code, do not produce any evidence to show that there is no material for instituting the complaint against them, the judge is entitled to consider the material on record before him and come to the conclusion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that those persons should be prosecuted for that offence. Where he records such finding after discussing the materials before him and directs the institution of the complaint under S. 193, Penal Code, before the magistrate having jurisdiction to entertain the same, it is an order which is in conformity with the provisions of Ss. 476 B and 476, even though he may inappropriately call it a "report". Bhagwandas Gupta, for Applicants; Shiv Dayal, Dy. Govt. Advocate, for the State.

ORDER: This is a petition to revise an order passed by the Sessions Judge, Gwalior, in an appeal under S. 476 (B) of the Cr. P. Code, directing that a complaint for the prosecution of the applicants for giving false evidence be filed before the City Magistrate, Lashkar. It appears from the record that the proceedings under S. 476 of the Code arose out of a Civil suit disposed of by the City Civil Judge, Lashkar. After the disposal of the suit, one Rampyaribai who was a party to the suit applied to the City Civil Judge that the applicants who had appeared in that Civil suit as witnesses be prosecuted for giving false evidence. The learned Civil Judge refused to make a complaint against the applicants. Thereupon, Rampyaribai appealed to the Sessions Judge, Gwalior. A notice of the appeal was given to the applicants and on 26-2-51, the learned Sessions Judge after hearing the parties passed an order expressing the opinion that a prima facie case had been made out for the prosecution of the applicants and directing a further notice to be issued to them to show cause why proceedings in respect of an offence under S. 193 I.P.C. should not be instituted against them.

In response to this notice, the applicants stated on 22-3-51, that there was no material, whatsoever, for commencing against them proceedings under S. 193 I.P.C. On 7-5-51, the learned Counsel appearing for Rampyaribai and the applicant Pitambardas and others requested the Court to pass whatever order it thought fit on the material before it. Thereafter on 20-8-51, learned Sessions Judge in what was styled by him as a 'report', but which was in fact an order, after referring to the various statements made by the applicants in the Civil suit, recorded a finding that it was expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be made against the applicants in respect of an offence under S. 193 I.P.C. On the same date, the learned Sessions Judge passed a separate order stating that the report was ready and that it be sent to the City Magistrate for disposal according to law. It is from this latter order that this revision petition has been filed.

(2) Learned Counsel for the applicants contends that the order passed by the learned Sessions Judge directing that a complaint for the prosecution of the applicants be filed, is illegal and without jurisdiction inasmuch as the learned Sessions Judge held no inquiry under S. 476 of the Code and did not record a finding, after such an inquiry, to the effect that it was expedient in the interest of justice to prosecute the applicants. There is no substance in this contention which seems to me to have been raised on account of an error in the procedure followed by the Sessions Judge in disposing of the appeal before us under S. 476(B) of the Code and on account of the wrong use of the word 'report.' Section 476(B) of the Code does not contemplate that the appellate Court should after hearing the parties first pass a preliminary order stating that prima facie there was sufficient material for issuing notice to the parties concerned to show cause why they should not be prosecuted and then the Court should after again issuing a notice to the parties and hearing them, pass a final order disposing of the appeal. The appellate Court can after giving a notice of the appeal to the parties concerned proceed to hear the appeal and pass an appropriate order disposing of the appeal. It was, therefore, unnecessary in this case, for the learned Sessions Judge to record an order of preliminary nature and to issue notices a second time to the applicants to show cause why they should not be prosecuted.

The argument of the learned Counsel for the applicants that the Sessions Judge was bound to hold an inquiry under S. 476, is not supported by the wording of the section itself. The power to make a preliminary inquiry is in the discretion of the Court and whether an inquiry is necessary or not depends on the facts and circumstances of each case. The object of the inquiry is only to give an opportunity to the person or persons likely to be prosecuted to explain their position in connection with the charge alleged against them and to enable them to place before the Court the necessary evidence in support of their explanation. In the present case, it is clear from the order passed on 7-5-51 that the applicants did not desire to produce any evidence in support of their earlier statements that there was no material for instituting any complaint against them. The learned Sessions Judge was, therefore, quite justified in forming his own opinion on the material on the record and in coming to the conclusion that it was expedient in the interest of justice that the applicants should be prosecuted for the offence under S. 193 I.P.C. The learned Sessions Judge recorded this finding on 20-8-51 in what he described as a 'report' but which is really an order of the court discussing the material on record, recording a finding that it was expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be made in respect of the offence under S. 193 I.P.C. and directing that a complaint for the prosecution of the applicants under S. 193 I.P.C. be filed before the City Magistrate, Lashkar. The use of the word "the report" by the Sessions Judge was, no doubt, inappropriate. That, while using the word 'report', the learned Sessions Judge really meant "an order of the Court disposing of the appeal" is clear from the substance of the so-called report and also from the order dated 30-5-51 of the Sessions Judge wherein he mentioned that "that order was not yet ready." The order passed by the learned Sessions Judge is, therefore, in conformity with the provisions of Ss. 476 and 476 (B) of the Code.

(3) Before I conclude, I must observe that when this petition was put up for hearing before another Judge of this Court, the learned Deputy Government Advocate took an objection as to the competency of this revision petition, under section 439 Cr. P.C. It seems to have been then argued that the proceedings out of which this revision petition arose were civil proceedings. In view of the fact, that the learned Counsel for the applicant proposed to attack the order of the lower Court as one being without jurisdiction, the question whether this revision petition should be entertained on civil or criminal side was merely of academic interest. Learned Counsel for the parties did not, therefore, press before me the point.

(4) The result is that this revision petition is dismissed.

ORDER: The applicant Kailashnath filed a suit for the determination of fair rent in the court of the Civil Judge, Gwalior, under sub-section (4) of section 5 of the Accommodation Control Ordinance Samvat 2004. During the pendency of the suit Sthan Niyantiran Vidhan S. 2006 came into force on the 9th of February, 1950. The trial Court holding that as Sthan Niyantiran Vidhan has come into force it has no jurisdiction to try the suit, returned the plaint under Order VII rule 10. The District Judge held that the order of the trial Court viewed in the light of section 10 of the Sthan Niyantiran Vidhan is correct. The plaintiff being aggrieved by the decision of the District Judge has filed this revision.

(2) The present suit for the determination of fair rent was filed on 2-5-1949. Sthan Niyantiran Vidhan came into force on 9th February, 1950. So there is no doubt that at the time when the suit was instituted it was governed by the provisions of Accommodation Control Ordinance Samvat 2004. The question for consideration is whether the jurisdiction of the civil Judge to try a suit filed during the life time of the Accommodation Control Ordinance has been ousted by Sthan Niyantiran Vidhan Samvat 2006.

(3) It is a fundamental rule of the construction of statute that no statute except one dealing with the procedure is to be construed to have retrospective operation unless such a construction appears very clearly in the terms of the Act or raised by necessary and distinct implication. (Vide Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes 9th Edn. P. 221). Enactments dealing with procedure are always retrospective in the sense that their provisions will apply to proceedings already commenced at the time of their enactments. The reason for this is that no person has a vested right in any course of procedure; but where some of the provisions of the enactment of procedure do affect vested rights whether substantive or remedial, rule against retrospective operation of statute will apply, unless there is an indication to the contrary in the Act. This principle is now so well established that it is hardly necessary to support it by any authorities. I shall, however, content myself with quoting only one authority, which is a recent case of the Bombay High Court. In — C. P. Bannerjee v. B. S. Irani AIR 1949 Bom, 182, the facts were briefly as follows. Plaintiff filed a suit on 12th September, 1947 to recover a sum of Rs. 1000/-. Under section 21 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, as it then stood, the plaintiff had the election to institute the suit in the High Court. In about May 1948 the Bombay Legislature enacted Act No. 44 of 1948 called the Presidency Small Causes Courts (Bombay Amendment) Act and by section 2 thereof the election which was given to the plaintiff to file a suit in the High Court was deleted. The Bombay legislature also simultaneously enacted Bombay Act No. 41 of 1948 called the Bombay High Court Letters Patent Amendment Act. By section 3 amendment was made in clause 12 of the Letters Patent of the High Court. The amendment read as follows:-

"Except that the said High Court shall not have such original jurisdiction in cases falling within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court at Bombay, or the Bombay City Civil Court".

(4) The question for consideration before the Bombay High Court was whether it had further jurisdiction to try and determine the cases even though the suit was rightly received and entertained at the date when the same was instituted. In the course of the judgment Bhagwati J. made some important observations on the law relating to the subject matter of jurisdiction. As these observations have a very great bearing on this case, I propose to quote his observations in extenso:

"Normally it would not have a retrospective operation. It has been laid down as a fundamental rule of the English law, which we have been following here, that no statute shall be construed to have a retrospective operation unless such a construction appears very clearly in the terms of the Act or arises by necessary and distinct implication. There is no doubt that so far as the statutes are concerned, a distinction is broadly made between procedural statutes and statutes which affect the substantive rights of the parties. There is no vested right which a subject has in regard to procedure. But with regard to the jurisdiction of the Court in which he has a right to institute proceedings a subject can have a vested right. That this is so is amply borne out by authorities and I shall only content myself with quoting one of them, which is an authority of the Federal Court, a judgment of Varadachariar J. reported in 'Venugopala v. Krishnaswami AIR 1943 F. C. 24 and the passage at P. 27 Col. 1, thereof:

"It will be noticed that in that case the Judiciary Act was passed during the pendency of the action in the Court of first instance and their Lordship's decision recognised that, from the date of the initiation of the action, the suitor had a right of appeal to a superior tribunal according to the state of the law, as it stood at the time of the commencement of the proceeding. This necessarily involves the recognition of an equally valuable right that the proceedings should in due course be tried and disposed of by the tribunal before which it had been commenced. This principle that a statute should not be so interpreted as to take away an action which has been well commenced has been affirmed in various cases in differing circumstances. In 'Marsh v. Higgins', (1850) 9 C. B. 551 it was observed by Wilde C. J. that it must have been well known to both branches of the legislature that strong and distinct words would be necessary to defeat a vested right to continue an action which has been well commenced'.

"These observations of the Federal Court are enough to show that where an action has been rightly instituted in a court which had jurisdiction to entertain it, would require strong and fore, he himself had a right of pre-emption superior to that of the plaintiff. It was also stated that the real sale price is Rs. 1820/- and not Rs. 1500/-. The trial Court decreed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had a superior right of pre-emption. It held that the eaves of the Patars in the plaintiff's house extended over the pre-empted house, and water from these eaves is discharged over it; also that there is a common wall and there is a staircase in the plaintiff's house attached to this common wall; that there is a Khassi Mori (Spout) in this common wall; that rain water from the pre-empted house through this Khassi Mori flows in the drain of the plaintiff's house and then passes on to the Mori of the pre-empted house before flowing in the public gutters on the road. The Court further held that the apertures in the house of the defendant Dattatraya are newly built and no right of easement is proved. The plaintiff was, therefore, held to have a superior right of pre-emption and his suit was decreed on certain conditions.

(2) The defendant vendee appealed and the findings of the trial Judge were set aside by the first appellate Court which held that there was a mistake in the sketch map of the houses, that on inspection of the site, it was found that there is no staircase of the plaintiff attached to the common wall, that drains of the two houses are separate and that the plaintiff has no right of easement over the pre-empted property. The appeal was allowed and the suit was dismissed.

(3) The plaintiff filed an appeal to the Gwalior State High Court, and the learned Judge on the single Bench, who heard the appeal, was of opinion that the plaintiff had put in specific grounds in para. 4 of the plaint, one of which could give him a superior right of pre-emption. He could not afterwards be allowed to take up new grounds (viz. of easements) and the appeal was therefore dismissed. The plaintiff then approached the Judicial Committee of the Gwalior State which came to the conclusion that the grounds stated in para. 4 of the plaint should be taken to be illustrative only and not as exhaustive. The Judicial Committee set aside the judgment and decree of the Gwalior State High Court and remanded the case back for disposing the appeal according to law after hearing arguments on the evidence adduced by the parties in the case. It was in these circumstances, that this appeal was pending in the Gwalior State High Court when the merger took place. This appeal was then transferred to this Court.

(4) Mr. Motilal Gupta, learned counsel for the respondents, urged that this Court is not bound by the directions of the Gwalior State Judicial Committee and should ignore them. In our opinion Issue No. 1 "Has the plaintiff a superior right of pre-emption" is sufficiently wide and as evidence has been allowed and has been adduced in the case about the easements and no party can be taken by surprise now, we decided to hear the counsel on the merits.

(5) Our attention was invited to the fact that the judgments of all the three Courts are based upon the local inspection of the Judges. In — 'Raj Chandra v. Iswar Chandra', AIR 1925 Cal 170 it was held that though O. 18 R. 18 of the Civil P. C. empowers the Court to go on local inspection of any property in respect of which it is called upon to decide a question in controversy, it is still the duty of the Court not to make the result of such inspection the foundation of its judgment which must be based upon evidence adduced by the parties. It does not entitle the Judge to put his view obtained by means of such inspection in place of evidence. The Judge is to hold such inspection for the purpose of better following and understanding the evidence adduced before him or to test its accuracy.

(6) In a suit about damages for injuries on G. I. P. Railway where the Judges of the Bombay High Court visited the scene of the accident and based their judgment on their own observations, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee disapproved the mode of deciding the case on impressions and of casting to the winds the legal evidence in the case — 'Kessowji v. G. I. P. Rly.', 31 Bom 381 at p. 392.

(7) In — 'Ahmad Sahib Shutari v. Magnesite Syndicate Ltd.', 39 Mad 501 it was held by a Divisional Bench that the inspection which a Judge makes should be used by him only to test the accuracy of the evidence let in. He should not, without submitting himself to the test of cross-examination make his knowledge the sole evidence for determining the question raised before him. I respectfully concur with this view. The same view has been expressed in — 'Dawarka Prasad v. Makhu Lal', AIR 1919 Pat 517. In — 'Abdul Baqi v. M. Fakhrul Islam', AIR 1937 Pat 333, Wort J., further remarked that by understanding the evidence, is not meant 'contradicting a witness' and a witness may make a statement which from the local inspection may appear to be untrue but a Judge is not entitled to say that it is untrue from what he himself observes.

(8) The trial Court has, of course, discussed the evidence adduced by the parties in the case; but the learned District Judge has based his decision on the local inspection and on nothing else. In my opinion, this judgment cannot be sustained. I would, therefore, allow this appeal and reverse the decree of the District Judge and remit the case to him for disposal of the appeal according to law. Costs will abide the result.

(9) KAUL C. J.: I agree.

Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 151 and 107, O. 41 R. 23 and O. 43 R. 1 (u) — Remand under inherent power — No appeal lies.

The power of remand under S. 107 is limited to the case described in O. 41, R. 23. But nothing in that section restricts in any manner the application of the principle of inherent power recognised by S. 151 of the Code. A Court can, therefore, order a remand in cases other than the case specified in O. 41 R. 23, if it be necessary for the ends of justice. But no appeal lies against such order of remand even if the judge has ordered refund of stamp on appeal. (Paras 3, 6 and 7).

JUDGMENT: This second appeal by the defendant is directed against an order of remand passed by the first appellate court and arises out of a suit filed by the respondents plaintiffs on the basis of a 'Bahikhata' account which the appellant defendant did not admit to be genuine. There were six issues framed in this case by the trial court; and, on the ground that the plaintiff had not been able to prove his dues against the defendant, the suit was dismissed by the trial court. An appeal was filed to the District Judge, Miorena, and the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that certain issues were wrongly framed and wrongly decided, that application for interrogatories was wrongly rejected and it should now be allowed, and, that material evidence in the case had not at all been considered by the trial court. After reframing certain issues and after issuing necessary directions for the trial court for a proper approach to the case, the learned District Judge remanded the case back for retrial allowing an opportunity to the parties to adduce fresh evidence if necessary. Against this order of remand, the defendant has filed this second appeal.

(2) A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondents as to the competency of this appeal. It is urged on their behalf by Mr. Patankar that the order from which this appeal has been preferred is not one which comes within the purview of O. 41 Rule 23 of the Civil Procedure Code and that therefore no appeal lies to this court from that order. Strictly speaking, the objection taken on behalf of the respondents is well founded, for the order does not in point of fact conform to the provisions of O. 41 R. 23 which contemplates an order of remand being passed in a case in which the trial court disposed of a suit upon a preliminary point. Mr. Ramrup Tiwari, learned counsel for the appellant on the other hand, contends that the lower appellate court should have dealt with the appeal on merits and if it was of opinion that further evidence was necessary on any point, it should have acted under O. 41 R. 25.

He places reliance on — 'Kalu Dalpat v. Narain Dagadu', AIR 1927 Bom 111: 100 Ind Cas 578. Mr. Tewari also contends that the District Judge has ordered the stamp on appeal to be refunded. This under Section 13 of the Indian Court Fees Act could be done only in the case of remand under Order 41 R. 23. The learned counsel, therefore, argues that the remand in this case was intended to be one under O. 41 R. 23 and the appeal is competent. He also urges that an order passed by the appellate court in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction is an appealable order even though it may not come within the scope of O. 41 R. 23. A large number of cases have been cited by both the parties in support of their respective contentions.

(3) It is well settled now that the power of remand under Section 107, Civil Procedure Code is limited to the case described in O. 41 R. 23. But nothing in that section restricts in any manner the application of the principle of inherent power recognised by Section 151 of the Code. The powers of the appellate court as regards remand are thus not restricted to the case specified in O. 41 R. 23, but the court, by reason of its inherent jurisdiction, recognised and prescribed in the Code, may order a remand in cases other than the case specified in O. 41 R. 23, if it be necessary for the ends of justice. — 'Ghuznavi v. The Allahabad Bank Ltd.', 44 Cal 929 (FB).

(4) If the Code recognises the power of an appellate court to direct a remand in circumstances other than those specified in O. 41 R. 23, the question arises, whether an order passed by the appellate court in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction is an appealable order?

(5) There are two sets of decisions in the reports. In one set, which is the earlier one, it is laid down that though an order passed by the Court of appeal below might not be in strict accord with the provisions of O. 41, R. 23 read with O. 32 R. 1 (u), if the order of the appellate court purported to be an order under O. 41 R. 23 an appeal would lie from such order. It was added that an order passed by the appellate court in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction was an appealable order though it may not come within the scope of O. 41 R. 23. As an illustration of this set reference may be made to — 'Agent, Bengal Nagpur Rly. v. Beharilal Dutta', 52 Cal 783: 29 Cal WN 614: AIR 1925 Cal 716; — 'Umesh Narain v. Secy. of State', AIR 1925 Cal 1157; — 'Mohammad Ali v. Karam Ali', AIR 1935 Cal 134; — 'Mt. Sahebji v. Mohammad Sarwar Khan', AIR 1928 Lah 116; — 'Gopal Singh v. Mangal Singh', AIR 1928 Lah 341 and — 'Radha Lal v. Fateh Mohummed', AIR 1937 Lah 454.

(6) In the other series of cases it is laid down that there can be no appeal from an order of remand unless it falls under O. 41 R. 23, or unless it can be said to amount to a decree within the meaning of Section 2 (2). It was added that an order of remand which does not fall within the purview of O. 41 R. 23 cannot be deemed to be one under it simply because the judge purported to act in accordance with its provisions. The rights conferred are of substance and cannot be enlarged or whittled down by what judges do or purport to do. Where the remand order has not covered the whole of the subject matter of the suit, an order directing refund of the whole of the court fees paid on appeal is wrong, as this could be done only in the case of a remand under O. 41 R. 23. The mere order of the lower appellate court that stamp on appeal be refunded cannot be taken to be an indication as to the law under which the appellate court below intended to make, the order of remand.

Hence, it has been laid down that even if the judge has ordered refund of stamp on appeal, if the order of remand does not fall under O. 41 R. 23 no appeal lies. As an illustration of the latter class reference may be made to — 'Chandrika Prasad Singh v. Mithu Rai', 6 Pat 380; AIR 1927 Pat 296: 103 Ind Cas 722; — 'Halima Khatun v. Abdul Majeed', AIR 1935 Pat 49; — 'Sheolal Balmakund v. Jugal Kishore', ILR (1940) Nag 538: AIR 1940 Nag 349: 1940 Nag LJ 350: 191 Ind Cas 566; — 'Pradyat Kumar Tagore v. Jyotish Chandra', AIR 1942 Pat 195: 197 Ind Cas 13; — 'Baldeo Singh v. Niras Singh', AIR 1946 Pat 272: 222 Ind Cas 210; — 'Jagdish Singh v. Kateshar Singh', AIR 1945 Oudh 133; — 'Ashfaq Hussain v. Moharram Ali', AIR 1948 Oudh 220 and — 'Jahangeer Khan v. State of Rajasthan', AIR 1951 Raj 108.

It will be seen that since 1940, the trend of the decisions has definitely been in favour of the latter view. — 'Sheolal Balmukund v. Jugal Kishore', ILR (1950) Nag 538, is the leading case on the subject and the latter cases upon which the respondent relies do little more than follow the 'ratio decidendi' of Stone C. J. and Vivian Bose J. (as he then was) in — 'Sheolal Balmukund's case'. I need hardly emphasize the elementary principle that no appeal can lie unless the right has been expressly conferred by statute and further that a court cannot override an express provision of law under colour of its inherent powers. In this view of the matter, I respectfully concur with the view expressed in — 'Sheolal's case' and also in other reported cases after the year 1940.

(7) In the case before me the suit was disposed of on merits by the trial court. It was not disposed of on a preliminary ground. The order of remand of the lower appellate court was under its inherent jurisdiction, and not under O. 41 R. 23. Hence I hold that it was not appealable.

(8) Once it is conceded that the lower appellate Court had inherent jurisdiction to remand the case, this appeal cannot be converted into a revision unless it is shown that some illegality or material irregularity has occurred in the exercise of inherent jurisdiction within the meaning of sub-section (c) of S. 115, Civil P. C. No such point has been taken in arguments before me, and I do not think that the present is a fit case in which I should be inclined to interfere in revision.

(9) I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Cantonments Act (1924), Ss. 103 and 81 to 83 — Applicability — Demand of information under S. 103 to ascertain liability to pay octroi — Legality.

Since Ss. 81 to 83 of the Act are a special provision dealing with octroi duties, S. 103 which is a general provision dealing with general taxes must be read as excluding from its operation the cases which have been provided for in Ss. 81 to 83. Hence an Executive Officer of the Cantonment cannot under S. 103 require an inhabitant of the Cantonment to give information regarding goods imported into the Cantonment to ascertain liability to pay octroi. Failure to give such information cannot entail conviction under S. 103(2). Section 103 also cannot be regarded as one meant for demanding information which may enable the Executive Officer to detect an evasion of a tax. The only object of this section is to enable the Executive Officer to ascertain the liability of any particular inhabitant of the Cantonment to pay any tax. (Paras 8 & 9)

ORDER: This is a reference by the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Indore, recommending that the conviction of the petitioner under Section 103, Sub-section (2) of the Cantonments Act and the sentence to pay a fine of Rs. 20/- passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, First Class, Mhow, in criminal case No. 53 of 50 of his file be set aside.

(2) The facts are that the petitioner is the proprietor of the Modern Radio House at Mhow. The Cantonment Executive Officer served on him a notice (Ex. P/1) dated the 19th November 1949, which is as follows:

"You are hereby required to furnish the following information to me within 10 days of receipt hereof namely:

(a) A statement of the entire Radio goods and other goods with quantity and description, imported by you into this Cantonment during the month of April 1949, giving the dates of import and value of the goods.

(b) Place or places from where imported and the names and addresses of the persons or firms from whom you purchased the goods with their corresponding invoices.

(c) Routes and conveyance (such as by rail, motor, cart, post, etc.) by which the goods were brought into this Cantonment and through which Naka or Octroi Post."

(3) The petitioner did not furnish any information and the Cantonment Board, Mhow, lodged a complaint against him in the Court of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Mhow Cantonment. The petitioner was convicted as stated above.

(4) Section 103 of the Cantonments Act, 1924, runs as follows:

"The Executive Officer may, by written notice, call upon any inhabitant of the Cantonment to furnish such information as may be necessary for the purpose of ascertaining:

(a) Whether such inhabitant is liable to pay any tax imposed under this Act;

(b) At what amount he should be assessed; or

(c) The annual value of the building or land which he occupies and the name and address of the owner or lessee thereof.

(2) If any person, when called upon under sub-section (1) to furnish information, neglects to furnish it or furnishes information which is not true to the best of his knowledge or belief, he shall be punishable with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees."

(5) Mr. Sanghi, on behalf of the petitioner, contends that the object of Section 103 is to ascertain whether any inhabitant of the Cantonment is liable to pay any tax imposed under the Cantonments Act. Mr. Sanghi lays emphasis on the words "is liable to pay"; and, he argues that it is the present liability to pay any tax which is to be ascertained and not any past liability of the inhabitant who, in the past, might have imported some articles in the Cantonment area without paying octroi duty. He puts an important question in this way: Whether the Executive Officer can call upon any inhabitant in 1951 to furnish information what articles he had been importing since 1939? Mr. Sanghi then argues that Section 103 is a general provision dealing with general taxes and sections 81, 82 and 83 of the Cantonments Act deal with octroi duties and Mr. Sanghi contends that where there are special sections about octroi then it should be presumed that the general Section 103 does not apply to octroi.

(6) Mr. Maharshi, on behalf of the Cantonment Board, has drawn my attention to chapter 5 of the Cantonments Act which deals with taxes. Section 60 deals with general powers of taxation; Section 61 with framing of preliminary proposals; Section 62 with objections and disposals; Section 63 with imposition of tax. Then Section 64 defines what annual value is and Section 65 deals with incidence of taxation. Sections 66 to 74 deal with assessment list; Ss. 75 to 79 with remission and refund and Section 80 with charge on immovable property. Sections 81 to 83 deal with Octroi, Terminal tax, and Toll. Then there is a procedure about appeals in sections 84 to 88 and about payment and recovering of taxes in sections 89 to 96. Then there is a heading 'Special provisions relating to taxation' and sections 97 to 105 cover this subject.

(7) Mr. Maharshi contends that Section 103 is not a general provision but is a special provision relating to taxation. He urges, and in this, is supported by the Government Advocate that 'liable to pay any tax imposed under this Act' covers a very wide ground and the Executive Officer is empowered to ascertain liability of inhabitant in the Cantonment area to pay any tax imposed under the Act. According to him, the words 'any tax' are of very wide import and include octroi duty. He is, therefore, of the opinion that the Executive Officer was empowered under Section 103 to ascertain from the petitioner the entire Radio goods and other goods imported by him into the Cantonment area in April 1949, giving the dates of import and value of the goods. Mr. Maharshi, therefore, contends that inasmuch as the petitioner did not furnish information when demanded under Section 103 he has rightly been convicted.

(8) There is no doubt that the word 'tax' in its widest sense includes all money raised by taxation and it may include rates, octroi duties and other charges levied by the Cantonment Board. Neither 'tax' nor 'octroi' has, however, been defined in the Cantonments Act of 1924. 'Octroi' is the French name of local duty levied upon goods entering a town or district as distinguished from custom duties which are those levied at the front. In Chapter V of the Cantonments Act 'Octroi' has been included in the general subject "Taxation" and it can be taken to be a kind of tax imposed by the Act; but from the scheme of this Chapter it appears that the subject of "Octroi", terminal tax or tolls is a special one dealt with separately under Chapter V. The collection of octroi, terminal tax and toll can be leased by the Board for one year under Section 83. If the contractor makes default in payment of the contract amount, he can be sued for money due under the contract — 'Mohamad Ibrahim v. Municipality of Anakapalli', 16 Cri LJ 702 (Mad). Apparently this is not applicable to other taxes. Section 81 then authorises inspection of goods by an Officer of the Board who can inspect, examine, or weigh goods, vehicles, or animals brought or received within the limits of the Cantonment area. The Officer authorised by the Board can demand any information, any bill, invoice or document which such person may possess relating to such goods, vehicles or animals. This section, in fact, enjoins upon the person bringing or receiving such goods within the limits of Cantonment area to disclose liability to pay octroi. Section 103 similarly enjoins upon an inhabitant of the Cantonment to disclose liability to pay any tax. It is suggested that Section 103 deals with duties and obligations of an inhabitant of a Cantonment; and the latter has double obligation to disclose liability to pay octroi; first, as receiver or bringer of goods under Sec. 81; and, then, as an inhabitant of the Cantonment area under Section 103. I do not think the Legislature intended to differentiate between the obligation in this respect of an inhabitant of the Cantonment area and an outsider; or intended to impose a double obligation on the inhabitant of the Cantonment area as suggested above. It has to be borne in mind that octroi is imposed on the article as soon as it is brought or received within the limits of a town. The bringer of the goods, or the receiver of the goods, after paying octroi, can sell the imported goods in the town and go outside the town taking the price with him and making a profit by the transaction. Once octroi duty is paid, the goods can be sold within the Cantonment area again and again, no further octroi can be levied. Any evasion of octroi, terminal tax, or toll, or any attempt at evasion is especially dealt with under section 82 and is made punishable with fine which may extend either to ten times the value of such octroi, terminal tax or toll, or to fifty rupees, whatever is greater, but which shall not be less than twice the value of such octroi, terminal tax or toll, as the case may be. In Sub-clauses (3) and (4) of Section 82, the duties and powers of Executive Officer of the Board in this respect are also dealt with. It will thus be seen that octroi as a form of indirect taxation or a form of non-recurring taxation has received special treatment at the hands of the legislature in the Cantonments Act of 1924. Having bestowed its attention to this particular subject and provided for it, the Legislature is reasonably presumed not to intend to alter this special provision by a subsequent general Section 103. The general Section 103 can then be read as silently excluding from its operation the cases which have been provided for by sections 81 to 83. Generalia Specialibus Non-Derogant.

(9) Section 103 also cannot be regarded as one meant for demanding information which may enable the Executive Officer to detect an evasion of a tax. The only object of this section is to enable the Executive Officer to ascertain the liability of any particular inhabitant of the Cantonment to pay any tax.

(10) In this view of the matter, I accept the reference, and would set aside the conviction and sentence passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, First Class, Mhow, on the petitioner on 30-9-50 and would acquit him.

Ramprasad, Applicant v. War Profits Tax Officer, Gwalior, Opponent.

Civil Ref. No. 2 of 1951, D/- 12-5-1952.

(a) Constitution of India, Art. 276 and Proviso to Art. 276 (2) — Applicability to tax under Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance — (Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance, 2001).

Art. 276 is not applicable to the War Profits Tax under the Ordinance as it is purely a tax on income. The Proviso to Art. 276 (2) is also not applicable as the War Profits Tax was not in force in the financial year immediately preceding the commencement of the Constitution.

(Paras 2 and 17)

(b) Constitution of India, Arts. 277 and 278 (1) (a) — Tax under Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance — Levy of — Agreement between President and Rajpramukh — Validity — (Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance (2001)).

Per Shinde C. J.: Article 277 is not relevant in considering whether the War Profits Tax could be assessed and realised for the accounting period that ended on 30-6-46. But the Ordinance is still in force by virtue of Art. 278 (1) (a). The Madhya Bharat authorities for War Profits Tax can assess and realize the War Profits Tax after the 26th of January, 1950 by virtue of Art. 278 (1) (a), and the agreement entered into thereunder. The financial agreement entered into between the President and the Rajpramukh on 25-2-1950 is valid in law.

(Paras 3 and 6)

Per Dixit J.: The tax under the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance is a tax which was being lawfully levied by the Madhya Bharat Government immediately before the commencement of the Constitution & as such in view of Art. 277, the Madhya Bharat Government is entitled to continue to levy and collect it after the commencement of the Constitution from the persons liable to pay the tax under the Ordinance. The tax is not a tax leviable in the sense in which the word "leviable" is used in Art. 278 (1) (a).

(Paras 19 and 21)

(c) Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance (2001) — Liability of assessee — Restriction on — (Constitution of India, Art. 276).

As Art. 276 of the Constitution is not applicable to the tax under the Ordinance, the liability of the assessee cannot be restricted to Rs. 250.

(Para 7)

(d) Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance (2001), Cls. 9, 10 and 13 — Whether any transaction has reduced profits — Question of fact — Discretion of War Profits Tax Officer.

Per Shinde C. J.: Clauses 9 and 10 are independent of each other. Even if the method of accounting has been accepted as regularly employed by the assessee, the War Profits Tax Officer has power under Cl. 10 to disallow deduction in respect of any transaction, if it appears to him that the transaction has artificially reduced the profits. Whether any transaction has artificially reduced the profits is a question of fact. It is left to the discretion of the War Profits Tax Officer to take a decision in this respect. Consequently this is not a question of law.

(Para 8)

Per Dixit J.: There is nothing in Cls. 9, 10 and 13 of the Ordinance to suggest that when a person is served with a notice to produce his accounts to support the return furnished by him of the profits of his business, the War Profits Tax Officer, unless he declares the account books of the person as fraudulent or erroneous, is bound to accept them for the purposes of assessment or that having accepted the account books he is bound to accept as correct every entry made therein. (Para 15)

(e) Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance (2001), Cl. 10 — Correctness of entry in account book — Burden of proof.

The burden of proving the correctness of a particular entry in an account book is on the assessee even though other entries of the same account book may have been accepted by the War Profits Tax Officer to be true.

(Paras 11 and 15)

(f) Constitution of India, Arts. 265 and 277 — "Levy" and "imposition" — Distinction.

Per Dixit J.: There is a distinction between "imposition" and "the levy, i.e., assessment and collection" of a tax. The imposition of a tax is by an Act of the competent Legislature and is purely a legislative act. The levy and the collection of a tax is a process subsequent to the imposition of the tax by the statute. A tax cannot be levied or collected before it is actually imposed by an Act of the competent Legislature. This is clear from Art. 265. Article 277 nowhere speaks of the imposition of a tax. The Article assumes the existence immediately, before the commencement of the Constitution of a valid law imposing a tax and permits the Government of the State to assess the persons liable to pay the tax and collect it from them, after the coming into force of the Constitution. It is the tax that was actually being levied immediately before the commencement of the Constitution that is saved by Art. 277, and it makes no difference whether the tax levied was in the case of a tax, one imposed on income or profits accruing in a period immediately before the commencement of the Constitution or a period anterior to it.

Patankar, for Applicant; Advocate General, for the State.

SHINDE C. J.: This is a reference under cl. 46 (2) of the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance Samvat 2001. The relevant facts of the case are as follows. The War Profits Tax Ordinance, S. 2001 was promulgated by His Highness the Maharaja Scindia imposing a tax on excess profits arising out of certain businesses in Gwalior State. The said Ordinance came into force on the 1st of July, 1944. The assessee Messrs Ramprasad Ramnarayan, who are wholesale dealers and Commission agents for cloth and yarn, were assessed for the chargeable accounting period 1-7-45 to 30-6-46 by the War Profits Tax Officer. Being aggrieved by the order, the assessee firm preferred an appeal to the Revenue Commissioner, who was the appellate authority for War Profits Tax. The appellate authority also upheld the order of the War Profits Tax Officer. Consequently at the instance of the assessee, the Commissioner for War Profits Tax has made this reference under clause 46 (2) of the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance.

(2) Nine questions of law have been referred to us. We propose to deal with them seriatim. As questions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are inter-allied I propose to deal with them together. The first question raised is whether the War Profits Tax Ordinance, Samvat 2001 is still subsisting. The second question is whether the Madhya Bharat authorities for War Profits Tax can assess and realize the War Profits Tax after 26th January, 1950. The third question is whether the financial agreement referred to by the appellate authority is valid in law. The counsel for the assessee contends that Entry 82 of the Union List given in the seventh schedule of the Constitution makes it quite clear that taxes on income other than agricultural income fall within the category of Union List. Consequently under Article 246 Parliament has exclusive power to make laws with respect to tax on income other than agricultural income. As War Profits Tax is a tax on income Madhya Bharat Government has no authority either to impose or to realize tax on income after the commencement of the Constitution.

It may be stated at the outset that the tax in question is assessed for the chargeable accounting period 1-7-45 to 30-6-46. The assessment order was passed on 6th May, 1950. The question that we have to consider is whether there is any restriction in the Constitution for the assessment and realization of a tax for the accounting period that ended on 30-6-46. Art. 246, no doubt, lays down that Parliament has exclusive power to make laws with respect to taxes on income other than agricultural income. The question here involved is not whether the Madhya Bharat State can make any laws in respect of tax on income other than agricultural income. Therefore, Article 246 is not of much assistance for the decision of the questions at issue. The counsel for the assessee contends that the tax in this case is not covered by Arts. 276, 277 or 278 and consequently Madhya Bharat Government cannot realize it.

It is no doubt true that the tax in question is not covered by Article 276. Article 276 refers to tax on professions, trades, callings and employments. The tax in question is purely a tax on income. It is imposed on the amount by which the profits during any chargeable period exceed the standard profits (Vide clause 4 of the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance). It is thus clear that it is a tax on income. Proviso to sub-clause (2) of Article 276 is also not applicable to this case. Because the proviso only applies when in the financial year immediately preceding the commencement of the Constitution a tax is in force in any State. As the War Profits Tax was not in force in the financial year immediately preceding the commencement of the Constitution the proviso to sub-clause (2) of Article 276 is not applicable to this case. Article 276 therefore, is not applicable to the present case.

(3) Article 277 is also not relevant to this case. It runs as follows:

"Any taxes, duties, cesses or fees which, immediately before the commencement of this Constitution, were being lawfully levied by the Government of any State or by any municipality or other local authority or body for the purposes of this State, municipality, district or other local area may, notwithstanding that those taxes, duties, cesses or fees are mentioned in the Union List, continue to be levied and to be applied to the same purposes until provision to the contrary is made by Parliament by law".

The wording of this Article clearly indicates that it refers to existing taxes. As already pointed out War Profits Tax was not being levied immediately before the commencement of the Constitution. It is admitted by the parties that after 1946 the tax has not been levied. This Article, therefore, has no application to the present case.

(4) Article 278, however, stands on a different footing. It runs as follows:

"1. Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution, the Government of India may, subject to the provisions of clause (2), enter into an agreement with the Government of a State specified in Part B of the First Schedule with respect to

(a) the levy and collection of any tax or duty leviable by the Government of India in such State and for the distribution of the proceeds thereof otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter.....

2. An agreement entered into under cl. (1) shall continue in force for a period not exceeding ten years from the commencement of this Constitution;

Provided that the President may at any time after the expiration of five years from such commencement terminate or modify any such agreement if after consideration of the report of the Finance Commission he thinks it necessary to do so."

This Article clearly gives power to the Government of India to enter into an agreement with the Government of a Part B State with respect to levy and collection of any tax or duty leviable by the Government of India in such State irrespective of the fact that the tax is included in the Union List. In accordance with the provisions of this Article a Financial Agreement was entered into between the President of India and the Rajpramukh of Madhya Bharat on 25th February, 1950. Item 9 of this agreement is as follows:

"In respect of the taxes mentioned below, which pertain to items included in List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution of India and are not in fact levied by the Government of India, the State will be allowed to continue to make assessments and to collect all the arrears outstanding, even after federal financial integration in respect of the liability of assessee up to the 31st March, 1950:—

Gwalior War Profits Tax.
Indore Excess Profits Tax.
Indore Industrial Profits Tax.
Indore Stock Exchange & Forward Transactions Tax.
Ratlam Royalty on Cloth Production."

This item of the agreement clearly indicates that the Madhya Bharat State has been allowed to continue to make assessment and collect all the arrears outstanding under Gwalior War Profits Tax in respect of the liability of assessee up to 31st March, 1950. The liability of the assessee is for the accounting period 1-7-45 to 30-6-46. According to this agreement therefore, the tax can be assessed and collected.

(5) The learned counsel contends that Article 278 (1) (a) is not applicable to the present tax; because the tax in question was not leviable by the Government of India in Madhya Bharat State in 1946. This argument is fallacious. Art. 278 gives power to the Government of India to enter into an agreement with the Government of a Part B State in respect of tax leviable by the Government of India in the State under the Constitution. The underlying idea of this Article is not to withdraw suddenly a source of revenue available to a Part B State until the commencement of the Constitution. The subject matter of this Article, therefore, is a tax which was available to a Part B State until the commencement of the Constitution and which after the commencement of the Constitution became part of the Union List.

It is not, therefore, correct to say that Art. 278 (1) (a) refers to a tax which was leviable by the Government of India in a Part B State at the time of the levy. Before the commencement of the Constitution there was no Union and there was no Part B State. The Constitution, therefore, could not have referred to a tax leviable by the Union of India in a Part B State, at the time of levy. Besides to say that the tax should be leviable at the time of the levy is to import into the Article words which do not find place in the Article itself. All that the Article states is that a tax which after the commencement of the Constitution is included in the Union List may be allowed to be levied and collected by a Part B State provided there is an agreement between the Government of India and the Government of that State.

The contention of the assessee, therefore, cannot be sustained. The result is that the tax is covered by Article 278 (1) (a); and as there is an agreement between the Government of India and Madhya Bharat State and as the liability of the assessee is for the accounting period ending in 1946, assessment can be made and the tax can be collected. Questions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are, therefore, answered as follows:

(6) The War Profits Tax Ordinance, Samvat 2001, is still in force by virtue of Article 278 (1) (a). The Madhya Bharat authorities for War Profits Tax can assess and realize the War Profits Tax after the 26th of January, 1950 by virtue of Article 278 (1) (a), and the agreement entered into thereunder. The financial agreement entered into between the President and the Rajpramukh on 25th February, 1950 is valid in law.

(7) The question No. 4 has already been dealt with in the discussion in respect of questions Nos. 1, 2 and 3. As already pointed out Article 276 has no application to the present tax. Consequently the liability of the assessee cannot be restricted to Rs. 250/-. Question No. 4, therefore, is answered in the affirmative.

(8) Question No. 5 is as follows:

'Can the War Profits Tax Officer and Appellate Authority assess the tax arbitrarily even when the authorities concerned have not declared account book of the assessee fraudulent or erroneous?'

This question has been raised on the strength of clauses 9 and 10 of the War Profits Tax Ordinance. Clause 9 is as follows:

'Profits and gains shall be computed, for the purposes of this Ordinance, in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed by the assessee;

Provided that, if no method of accounting has been regularly employed or if the method is such that, in the opinion of the War Profits Tax Officer the profits cannot be properly deduced therefrom then the computation shall be made upon such basis and in such manner as the War Profits Tax Officer may determine'.

Clause 10 runs as follows:

'In computing profits for the purposes of this Ordinance, no deduction shall be made in respect of any transaction or operation of any nature, if and so far as it appears that the transaction or operation has artificially reduced or would artificially reduce the profits.'

Clause 9 only states that profits will be computed in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed by the assessee. War Profits Tax Officer has apparently done so. The counsel for the assessee, however, contends that when the method of accounting has been accepted as regularly employed by the assessee, War Profits Tax Officer should not disbelieve the entry of Rs. 51,500/- shown as sum borrowed from the mother of Shrikrishna and the entry of Rs. 2264-6-3 shown as interest paid on the above sum. Cls. 9 and 10 are independent of each other. Even if the method of accounting has been accepted as regularly employed by the assessee, the War Profits Tax Officer has power under clause 10 to disallow deduction in respect of any transaction, if it appears to him that the transaction has artificially reduced the profits. Whether any transaction has artificially reduced the profits is a question of fact. It is left to the discretion of the War Profits Tax Officer to take a decision in this respect. Consequently this is not a question of law. Kanga in his Law and Practice of Income Tax 1950 Edn. at page 463 states as follows:

'The question whether cash credits or other entries in the accounts represent undisclosed or secreted profits is a question of fact.'

The result is that this question could not be referred under clause 46 (2) of the War Profits Tax Ordinance. The question has been so framed as to give it a colour of a question of law. But the arguments advanced disclose clearly that the assessee desires us to give an opinion as to whether the two items mentioned above have been rightly disallowed by the War Profits Tax Officer or not. As already stated even though the War Profits Tax Officer accepts the method of accounting as being regularly employed by the assessee, under cl. 10 he has full discretion to refuse a deduction in respect of any transaction which he thinks has artificially reduced the profits. There is no question of arbitrary decision involved in this case. As the question virtually is a question of fact we refuse to answer it.

(9) Question No. 6 is as follows:

'Do the principles of the Income Tax Law of the Hindu undivided family apply to War Profits Tax?'

Clause 2 Sub-Clause (13) of the Ordinance gives a definition of the word 'person'. That definition reads as follows:

'Person' includes any company or body of individual or any other association of persons whether incorporated or not and also includes a Hindu undivided family'.

There is, therefore, no doubt that the word 'person' includes also a Hindu undivided family. In view of this definition the counsel for the assessee did not press this point. The answer to this question, therefore, is in the affirmative.

(10) Questions Nos. 7, 8 and 9 are as follows:

"(7) What is the effect of the decision of a criminal court on a relevant issue on the judgment of War Profits Tax Authorities?"

(8) On whom lay the burden of proving the correctness or incorrectness of a particular entry when other entries of the same account books have been accepted to be true?

(9) Can War Profits Tax Authorities assess tax upon income which has not accrued within the taxable year?"

Questions Nos. 7 and 9 have not been pressed by the counsel for the assessee. There is no need, therefore, to give any opinion on these questions.

(11) With regard to question No. 8 it has been pointed out in the discussion of question No. 5 that under clause 10 the War Profits Tax Officer has a discretion in disallowing deduction in respect of any transaction if it appears to him that the transaction has artificially reduced the profits. This power is available to him even if he accepts the method of accounting as regularly employed by the assessee and accepts most of the entries as correct. Even if the War Profits Tax Officer accepts most of the entries as correct he is not deprived of his power to disallow deduction in respect of any transaction which he thinks has artificially reduced the profits.

Mr. Patankar, who appeared on behalf of the assessee, did not seriously urge this point. In view of clause 10 the War Profits Tax Officer has full discretion to disallow deduction in respect of any transaction which he thinks has artificially reduced the profits, although he may have accepted most of the entries in the account book to be correct. The result is, in our opinion, the onus of proof as regards the correctness of any entry is always on the assessee. Our answer to question No. 8 is that the burden of proving the correctness of a particular entry is on the assessee even though other entries of the same account book may have been accepted by the War Profits Tax Officer to be true.

(12) We, therefore, answer the reference accordingly.

(13) DIXIT J.: This is a reference under section 46 (2) of the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance, Samvat 2001 by the War Profits Tax Commissioner for the opinion of this Court on certain questions. The relevant facts may be shortly stated as follows:

(14) On 20-1-47, a notice under section 13 (2) of the Ordinance was given to Messrs Ram Prasad Ram Narain, of Naya Bazar, Lashkar, by the War Profits Tax Officer, Gwalior State, requiring the firm to furnish within the prescribed period a return of the profits earned by the firm during the period from 1-7-45 to 30-6-46 for the purposes of determining the liability of the firm to War Profits Tax under the Ordinance. The assessment proceedings lasted from 20-1-47 to 6-5-50 on which date the War Profits Tax Officer passed an order assessing the firm to excess profits tax and calling upon the firm to pay the amount of the tax before the date specified in the order. The Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance under which the assessment was made was promulgated by the Maharaja of Gwalior on 1-7-1944 and after the formation of Madhya Bharat, it continued in force in the territory comprising of the former Gwalior State by virtue of the Madhya Bharat Ordinance No. I (1) of 1948 & the Regulation of Government Act No. I (1) of 1948 which replaced the Ordinance No. I (1) of 1948.

The firm being dissatisfied with the assessment filed an appeal against the assessment order before the Revenue Commr., the duly constituted Appellate Authority. The appeal was rejected and thereafter the firm moved the War Profits Tax Commissioner under section 46 of Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance challenging the validity of the assessment on a number of grounds and requesting the Commissioner to state the case to this Court for opinion on the questions raised by him. The questions submitted by the War Profits Tax Commissioner for the opinion of this Court are these, namely,

"Q. 1. Is the War Profits Tax Ordinance Smt. 2001 still subsisting?"

Q. 2. Can the Madhya Bharat Authorities for War Profits Tax assess and realise the War Profits Tax after 26-1-1950, i.e. the commencement of the Indian Constitution?

Q. 3. Is the financial agreement referred to by the Appellate Authority valid in law?

Q. 4. In view of the Provisions of Indian Constitution, can the War Profits Tax Authorities assess the liability for more than Rs. 250/-?

Q. 5. Can the War Profits Tax Officer and Appellate Authority assess the tax arbitrarily even when the Authorities concerned have not declared account books of the assessee fraudulent or erroneous?

Q. 6. Do the principles of the Income Tax Law of the Hindu undivided family apply to War Profits Tax?

Q. 7. What is the effect of the decision of a Criminal Court on a relevant issue on the judgment of War Profit Tax Authorities?

Q. 8. On whom lay the burden of proving the correctness or incorrectness of a particular entry when other entries of the same account books have been accepted to be true.

Q. 9. Can War Profit Tax Authorities assess tax upon income which have not accrued within the taxable year."

(14a) At the hearing before us Mr. Patankar learned Counsel for the assessee firm abandoned questions Nos. 7 and 9 and did not press them before us. In relation to question No. 1, he also did not advance before us the contention raised by the assessee before the War Profits Tax Commissioner that the War Profits Tax Ordinance Samvat 2001 ceased to be operative after the expiry of Madhya Bharat Ordinance No. I (1) of 1948 and cannot be said to have been continued by virtue of the Regulation of Government Act Samvat 2005 (Act No. I

(1) of 1948). Instead, learned Counsel for the firm contended that the War Profits Tax Ordinance was not subsisting on the date of the assessment as it became inoperative on the commencement of the Constitution of India. Question No. 1 as argued before us is therefore really covered by question No. 2.

Question No. 3 raises the general question about the validity of the financial agreement dated 25-2-50 between the Government of India and the Madhya Bharat Government. But it appears to me that the general question whether this agreement which deals with many matters which are not relevant here, is valid, does not arise in the present case. The precise question which we have to consider is whether by virtue of clause IX of this agreement, the Madhya Bharat Government is competent under Article 278 (1) (a) to levy and collect the tax under the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance Samvat 2001 from Messrs Ram Prasad, Ram Narain. Question No. 3 is really a part of question No. 2.

The question raised in question No. 4 as to the maximum amount of tax leviable is also connected with question No. 2 and can conveniently be dealt with while answering question No. 2. There are thus really four questions for consideration, namely the questions numbered as 5, 6 and 8 in the reference, and the important question whether after the coming into force of the Constitution of India, the Gwalior War Profit Tax Ordinance has become inoperative so as to preclude the Madhya Bharat Government from levying and collecting the tax under the Ordinance from the firm of Messrs. Ram Prasad Ram Narain.

(15) As regards questions Nos. 5, 6 and 8, I concur in the answers which My Lord the Chief Justice has given to those questions. I would only add that I do not find anything in sections 9, 10 and 13 of the War Profits Tax Ordinance to suggest that when a person is served with a notice to produce his accounts to support the return furnished by him of the profits of his business, the War Profit Tax Officer, unless he declares the account books of the person as fraudulent or erroneous, is bound to accept them for the purposes of assessment or that having accepted the account books he is bound to accept as correct every entry made therein. The burden of proving that a particular entry in the account books is correct and genuine is clearly on the prospective assessee.

In view of the fact that for the purposes of the War Profit Tax Ordinance, "a person" has been defined in section 2 (13) as including a Hindu undivided family, question No. 6 does not merit any consideration and learned Counsel for the firm did not press this question when his attention was drawn to the definition of the word "person" given in Section 2 (13).

(16) I also agree with my Lord, the Chief Justice that the assessment of the firm Messrs Ram Prasad Ram Narain to tax under the Ordinance for the chargeable period from 1-7-45 to 30-6-46 is valid. But my reasons for this conclusion are somewhat different. On the questions Nos. 1 to 4, the argument of the learned counsel for the firm is that as under Art. 246, Parliament alone has the power to legislate with respect to item 82 "Taxes on income other than agricultural income" and as under Article 366 (29) "Tax on income" includes a tax in the nature of excess profits tax, the Gwalior

War Profits Tax Ordinance, Samvat 2001, has after the commencement of the Constitution become inoperative; that it is not protected by Article 276; and that if it is protected by Article 276 then under clause 2 of Article 276, the total amount of tax payable by the firm cannot exceed two hundred and fifty rupees.

It is further contended that as under the Ordinance, no tax could be charged on profits accruing after 30-6-46, the tax under the Ordinance is not a tax which was levied immediately before the commencement of the Constitution and that, therefore, the Madhya Bharat Government cannot claim that they have a right under Article 277 to levy this tax after the coming into force of the Constitution.

As regards the financial agreement, it is said on behalf of the firm that under Article 278 (1) (a), an agreement with respect to the levy and collection of any tax or duty could be entered only if the tax or duty was one leviable by the Government of India; but inasmuch as prior to 26-1-1950 the Government of India could not impose income-tax in Madhya Bharat, the tax under the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance, 'Samvat' 2001, is not a tax leviable by the Government of India and that, therefore, the Madhya Bharat Government cannot derive under clause IX of the agreement purported to have been entered under Article 278, any authority to levy and collect the tax.

(17) I find myself unable to accept the contention of Mr. Patankar learned Counsel for the assessee firm that the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance ceased to be operative after the commencement of the Constitution. It is true that under Article 246, Parliament has the exclusive power to legislate with respect to taxes on income other than agricultural income. But here we are not concerned with a law of the Madhya Bharat State enacted after 26-1-1950 and imposing income-tax. The Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance, 'Samvat' 2001, was in force at the commencement of the Constitution in the territory of Madhya Bharat comprising of the former Gwalior State and the question of its invalidity on the ground of legislative competence under Art. 246 does not arise.

The real question for determination is whether after the commencement of the Constitution, the Ordinance has become inoperative under any provision of the Constitution. This necessitates a consideration of Articles 276, 277 and 278. I agree with the learned Counsel for the firm that Article 276 has no applicability in the present case. This Article draws a distinction between a tax on professions, trades, callings or employments and a tax on income accruing from or arising out of professions, trades, callings and employments. Clause 1 of Article 276 provides that if a law of the Legislature of a State imposes a tax on professions, trades, callings and employments it shall not be invalid on the ground that it relates to a tax on income which falls within the legislative authority of the Parliament.

Clause 2 prescribes the limit as to the maximum amount of such a tax payable by a person when it is imposed by the State. The proviso to clause 2 relates to the paying of such a tax in force in any state in the financial year immediately preceding the commencement of the Constitution. The last clause of Article 276 provides that the power of a Legislature of a

State to impose a tax on professions or employments in no way limits the power of Parliament to make laws with respect to taxes on income accruing from or arising out of professions, trades, callings and employments. The tax under the Gwalior War Profit Tax Ordinance is not a tax on a profession or a trade. It imposes a tax on the profits accruing from them. Article 276 is, therefore, not relevant here. The position is, to my mind, so obvious that I should serve no purpose by amplifying my reasons.

(18) In my view, it is Article 277 which enables the Madhya Bharat Government to levy the tax under the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance after the coming into force of the Constitution and to recover it from the assessee. This article reads as follows:

"Any taxes, duties, cesses or fees which, immediately before the commencement of this Constitution, were being lawfully levied by the Government of any State or by any Municipality or other local authority or body for the purposes of this State, municipality, district or other local area may, notwithstanding that those taxes, duties, cesses or fees are mentioned in the Union List, continue to be levied and to be applied to the same purposes until provision to the contrary is made by Parliament by law."

(19) It is clear from this Article that if the tax under the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance is a tax which was being lawfully levied by the Madhya Bharat Government immediately before the commencement of the Constitution, then, the Government is entitled to continue to levy it even after 26-1-50. It is not disputed that until at least the commencement of the Constitution the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance was a valid law imposing a tax on profits. There is also no dispute that until 26-1-1950, a person to whom the Ordinance applied could be assessed to the tax under the Ordinance in respect of the profits which accrued during the prescribed chargeable period. What is contended by the Counsel for the firm is that inasmuch as the Ordinance did not impose any tax on profits accruing after 30-6-46, it cannot be said that the tax under the Ordinance is a tax which was levied immediately before the commencement of the Constitution.

I fail to see how the fact that the Ordinance did not impose any tax on profits accruing after 30-6-46 affects the operation of the Ordinance as regards the imposition, and the assessment and collection of the tax in respect of profits during the chargeable period before 30-6-46. The contention of the learned Counsel for the firm is based on the assumption that the expression "any tax levied immediately before the commencement of the Constitution" in relation to a tax in the nature of an income tax or excess profits tax, means a tax which was imposed on income or profits accruing in a chargeable period immediately before the commencement of the Constitution. I do not think that the language of Article 277 warrants any such construction of the expression "any tax levied immediately before the commencement of the Constitution."

It must be remembered that there is a distinction between "imposition" and "the levy, i.e., assessment and collection" of a tax. The imposition of a tax is by an Act of the competent Legislature and is purely a legislative act. The levy and the collection of a tax is a process subsequent to the imposition of the tax by the statute. A tax cannot be levied or collected before it is actually imposed by an Act of the competent Legislature. This is clear from Art. 265. The levy, that is to say, the assessment of a tax, and the collection of the tax are executive processes regulated by provisions made in that behalf. Article 277 nowhere speaks of the imposition of a tax. It does not confer on any State the power to impose a tax after the coming into force of the Constitution, if the tax had not been already imposed by the law of the State immediately before the commencement of the Constitution.

The Article assumes the existence immediately before the commencement of the Constitution of a valid law imposing a tax and permits the Government of the State to assess the persons liable to pay the tax and collect it from them after the coming into force of the Constitution. It is the tax that was actually being levied immediately before the commencement of the Constitution that is saved by Article 277 and it makes no difference whether the tax levied was in the case of a tax, such as in the present case, one imposed on income or profits accruing in a period immediately before the commencement of the Constitution or a period anterior to it.

If the distinction between the imposition of a tax, and the levy and collection thereof is borne in mind in construing Article 277, then the contention of the learned Counsel for the assessee firm clearly fails. In my opinion, the tax under the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance is a tax which was being lawfully levied by the Madhya Bharat Government immediately before the commencement of the Constitution and as such the Madhya Bharat Government is entitled to continue to levy and collect it after the commencement of the Constitution from the persons liable to pay the tax under the Ordinance.

(20) In the view I take of Article 277 it is really not necessary for me to consider whether by virtue of the Financial agreement dated 25-2-50, the Madhya Bharat Government validly derives under Article 278 (1) (a) the authority to levy and collect the tax under the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance. But as some reliance has been placed on behalf of the State on this agreement to support the validity of the assessment on the firm Messrs. Ram Prasad Ram Narain, I think it proper to say a few words about the view though not a concluded one which I am at present, inclined to take of Article 278 (1) (a).

It seems to me that the object of Article 278 (1) (a) is to enable any State specified in Part B of the First Schedule of the Constitution to receive a larger share of the proceeds of certain taxes, than they would be entitled to under the earlier provisions of Chapter 1 of Part XII. With this object the Article permits the Government of India and the Government of any 'Part B' State to enter into an agreement with respect to the levy or collection of a tax imposed by an Act of the Parliament and thus leviable by the Government of India in that State. A tax is not leviable by the Government of India unless it is actually imposed by an Act of Parliament. The words "tax or duty leviable by the Government of India" in Article 278 (1) (a) do not mean a tax or duty which can be imposed by the Union Government. It means a tax or duty having been imposed by an Act of the Parliament is leviable by the Union Government.

The agreement contemplated by this Article is with respect to the executive act of the levy and collection of any tax or duty and not with regard to the conferment on the State of the power to impose a tax or to save an existing law of the State imposing a tax. For if a State has or is given the power to impose a tax, then, it is unnecessary to provide that it shall have power to levy and collect the tax by an agreement entered into in that behalf with the Government of India, as the power to levy and collect a tax is necessarily implied in the power to impose a tax.

(21) The tax under the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance is not a tax leviable in the sense I take of the word "leviable" as used in Article 278 (1) (a). I am, therefore, disposed to think that the clause IX of the Financial Agreement is not of much assistance to the State in supporting the assessment on the Firm Messrs. Ram Prasad Ram Narain under the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance.

(22) For the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that the assessment of the firm to tax under the Gwalior War Profits Tax Ordinance is legal and valid and I answer the reference accordingly.

The word "guarantee" has acquired a technical meaning and the legislature was aware of it. The essence of guarantee is that a guarantor agrees to discharge his liability only in one event, i.e., when the principal debtor fails in his duty. In other words, a guarantee pre-supposes the existence of a principal debtor and if in any contract there never was at any time another person who can be properly described as "the principal debtor" in respect of whose default a guarantee can be given, there cannot be said to have been any "guarantee" either in its technical meaning or in its ordinary meaning. So a promissory note executed jointly by a Company and its Managing Agents does not come within the purview of section 87 D.

Government Advocate, for the State; S. M. Samvatsar, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT: The State has filed this appeal under section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against the order dated 21st August 1950 passed by the Additional City Magistrate, Indore in criminal case No. 143 of 1950 acquitting the two respondents of an offence under section 87 (D) of the Indore Companies Act.

(2) Respondent No. 1 Seth Hiralalji is the Managing Director of the Kalyanmal Mills Ltd., Indore, incorporated under the Indore Companies Act (Act No. 6 of 1914) and respondent No. 2 is his son who is also a permanent Director of the above said Mills. Both the respondents are proprietors of the Firm Tilokchand Kalyanmal and Co., Indore, which seems to be a joint-family business firm. This firm works as Secretaries, Treasurers and Agents of the Kalyanmal Mills Ltd., Indore.

(3) On 17th November 1947, the Kalyanmal Mills Ltd., and Tilokchand Kalyanmal and Co., both executed a promissory note for a sum of Rs. 2 lacs at four and a half per cent interest in favour of the Bank of Indore Ltd. wherein they jointly and severally promised to pay the sum to the Indore Bank. This pro-note was renewed from time to time till 11th March 1948, and then the loan was repaid to the Indore Bank. Respondent No. 1 Seth Hiralalji executed and signed on behalf of the Kalyanmal Mills Ltd., as well as on behalf of the Tilokchand Kalyanmal and Co. It is admitted that the sum of Rs. 2 lacs went to the Mills who subsequently paid it back to the Indore Bank.

(4) Then on 11-9-1948, Tilokchand Kalyanmal and Co. and the Kalyanmal Mills Ltd., approached the Manager, the Bank of Indore Ltd., and took another loan of Rs. 1 lac at four and half per cent. interest. The pro-note in favour of the Bank was executed and signed by respondent No. 1 Seth Hiralalji on behalf both of Tilokchand Kalyanmal and Co. and the Kalyanmal Mills Ltd. This is a joint and several promise to pay to the Bank of Indore Ltd., the sum of Rs. 1 lac. Ex. P/1 shows that there was a request by the Mills as well as by the Tilokchand Kalyanmal and Co. to the Bank of Indore to pay an amount thereof to "one of us", viz. Tilokchand Kalyanmal. The receipt Ex. P/2 was also executed by Tilokchand Kalyanmal and Co., on 11-9-1948, and there is no doubt that this sum of Rs. 1 lac was taken not by the Mills but by the Managing Agents, Tilokchand Kalyanmal and Co. It is this pro-note that is to be interpreted in this appeal.

(5) In the report of the Auditors, S. B. Billimoria and Co., Bombay, dated 8th June 1948, this liability of the Mills on behalf of the Managing Agents was objected to in the following words:

"The Company and the Secretaries, Treasurers and Agents have jointly passed a Promissory note to the Bank of Indore Ltd., for Rs. 1,00,000 which sum has been received by the Secretaries, Treasurers and Agents, and not by the Company, and there is no entry in respect thereof in the Company's Books. This appears to be in contravention of section 87-D of the Indore Companies Act."

(6) On the basis of the Auditor's report, Mr. Jagjiwandas Tulsiram Shah, a share-holder of the Mills, lodged a complaint on 21-1-50 against the two respondents under section 87-D of the Indore Companies Act which is identically the same as section 87-D of the Indian Companies Act. The complaint also alleged that the loan had been repaid to the Bank on 31-12-48. The complaint was dismissed and the accused acquitted as stated above, and the State has filed this appeal against the order of acquittal. The main point taken in the appeal is that by agreeing to execute a promissory note jointly and severally with the Managing Agents in favour of the Indore Bank, the Mills had taken a liability upon themselves which was in contravention of the spirit underlying sections 86-D and 87-D of the Companies Act.

(7) The Government Advocate contends that signing of the promissory note by Kalyanmal Mills for the loan that was going to the Managing Agents clearly meant that the Mills took the liability upon themselves and thus guaranteed the loan. The learned Government Advocate argues that it was nothing short of guaranteeing a loan made to the Managing Agents within the meaning of the expression used in section 87-D.

(8) Mr. Samvatsar, learned counsel for the respondents, argues that the first loan of Rs. 2 lacs was taken by the Mills and the pro-note was also jointly and severally executed by the Mills and the Managing Agents. The Managing Agents had taken liability to the extent of 2 lacs of Rupees which went to the Mills. When the Managing Agents had become liable for payment of Rs. 2 lacs which went to the Mills, the learned counsel contends, that there was nothing wrong, when in consideration of this liability, the Mills executed the pro-note for the money (Rs. 1 lac) which went to the Managing Agents. Mr. Samvatsar urges that this joint and several "pro-note" executed in this manner cannot come within the term "guaranteeing a loan". In his opinion the word "guarantee" in section 87-D should be literally construed; but in the opinion of the learned Government Advocate, it should be construed in a liberal sense and its meaning should not be restricted to mean a contract of guarantee as defined under section 126, Contract Act.

(9) The portion of section 87-D, Indore Companies Act which is similar to the same section of Indian Companies Act, that is material for the purposes of this appeal, runs as follows:

87-D.

1. No Company shall make to a Managing Agent of the Company or to any partner of the Firm, if the Managing Agent is a firm... .., any loan out of the monies of the company or guarantee any loan made to the Managing Agent.

3. In the event of any contravention of sub-section (1) any Director of the Company who is a party to the making of the loan or giving of the guarantee shall be punishable with fine which may extend to Rs. 500, and if default is made in repayment of the loan or discharging the guarantee shall be liable jointly and severally for the amount unpaid."

(10) Mr. Samvatsar rightly contends that under sub-section (3) the only person who can be punished is the Director of the Company who is a party to the making of the loan or giving of the guarantee. And as the pro-note was executed by respondent No. 1 and not by respondent No. 2 the latter cannot be held guilty. In our opinion this contention is well-founded, and we order that this appeal should be dismissed, so far as respondent No. 2 Shri Narendra Kumar Singh is concerned. The question then remains whether the first respondent No. 1 can be held guilty under section 87-D.

(11) It has to be borne in mind that the Legislature has used the word "guarantee" in sub-sections (1) and (3) quoted above. The first and most elementary rule of construction is, that it is to be assumed that the words and phrases of technical legislation are used in their technical meaning, if they have acquired one, and, otherwise in their ordinary meaning, (Maxwell page 3). The word "guarantee" has acquired a technical meaning and the legislature was aware of it. The essence of guarantee is that a guarantor agrees to discharge his liability only in one event i.e. when the principal debtor fails in his duty. "Let him have the loan, I will see you paid," or "if he does not pay I will" ... are phrases ordinarily used when a guarantee is given. In other words, a guarantee pre-supposes the existence of a principal debtor, and if in any contract there never was at any time another person who can properly be described as "the principal debtor" in respect of whose default a guarantee can be given, there cannot be said to have been any "guarantee" either in its technical meaning or in its ordinary meaning. So, in my opinion a promissory note executed jointly by a Company and its Managing Agents does not come within the purview of Sec. 87-D.

(12) It is true that because the money had gone to Tilokchand Kalyanmal and Co., the Mills could not have shaken off their individual & separate obligation for the debts incurred. Under the terms of the promissory note, the entire liability for the money borrowed from the Bank of Indore could have been borne by the Managing Agents alone, or by the Kalyanmal Mills alone. In case of default, the Bank could have sued either of the two and could have under section 43 of the Contract Act excluded the right of a joint promisor to be sued along with the co-promisor. In this sense, it can be said, the Mills took a liability for the loan which had not been received by them. In other words, by executing the pro-note they facilitated a loan by the Indore Bank to their Managing Agents and adopted a device which ought to be stopped by the Legislature. But as the wording of section 87D is, I am clear in my mind that the action of the Mills in executing the pro-note does not come within the meaning of the expression "guaranteeing a loan".

(13) It has again to be noted that the provision contained in section 87D, is a penal provision and such a provision is to be construed strictly.

"But the rule of a strict construction requires that the language shall be so construed that no cases shall be held to fall within it which do not fall both within the reasonable meaning of its terms and within the spirit and scope of the enactment. Where an enactment may entail penal consequences, no violence must be done to its language to bring people within it, but rather care must be taken that no one is brought within it who is not within its express language.

"To determine that a case is within the intention of a Statute, its language must authorise the Court to say so, but it is not admissible to carry the principle that a case which is within the mischief of a statute is within its provision so far as to punish a crime not specified in the statute, because it is of equal atrocity or of a kindred character with those which are enumerated. If the Legislature has not used words sufficiently comprehensive to include within its prohibition all the cases which fall within the mischief intended to be prevented, it is not competent to a Court to extend them."

(15) Then at page 289 Maxwell adds that

"the effect of the rule of strict construction might almost be summed up in the remark, that, where an equivocal word or ambiguous sentence leaves a reasonable doubt of its meaning which the canons of interpretation fail to solve, the benefit of the doubt should be given to the subject and against the Legislature which has failed to explain itself."

(16) On the basis of these principles of interpretation, I find that the learned Additional City Magistrate's order seems to be correct and the principles do not allow a Court to extend the meaning of the word "guarantee" so as to include within it a joint pro-note executed by the Mills and the Managing Agents for facilitating a loan to the Managing Agents.

(17) The learned Government Advocate has also drawn our attention to an irregularity committed by the learned Additional City Magistrate in this case. As the respondents were exempted from attending the Court under an order of His Highness the Maharaja Holkar, the learned Magistrate, instead of examining them under section 342, recorded the statement of the counsel for the respondents. We are sure that this was not warranted by any provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure. We entirely disapprove of the procedure adopted by the Magistrate but we do not think the case necessitates a retrial in as much the appeal against order of acquittal cannot succeed.

(18) We, therefore, dismiss it.

JUDGMENT: This is defendant's second appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Judge, Gwalior, who dismissing the appeal of the defendant confirmed the decree of the trial court. The facts of the case briefly are that Sardar Madhorao Falke filed a suit against Premrao alias Hashmutulla and Mst. Basantibai in the Court of Sub-Judge, Lashkar. The plaint alleges that Hashmatulla defendant No. 1's mother Mst. Chatro was in the keeping of plaintiff's father Sardar Ramrao Falke. She had a son by Sardar Ramrao Falke who is defendant No. 1 Hashmatulla, that Ramrao Falke gave two houses Nos. 3/5 and 4/511 to Mst. Chatro for use, that after the death of Mst. Chatro defendant No. 1 continued to be in possession of these houses by permission, that on 1-4-32 defendant No. 1 executed a usufructuary mortgage of house No. 3/5 for Rs. 2500/- in favour of Basantibai defendant No. 2.

On these allegations the plaintiff prays for a declaration of title and for declaring the mortgage deed void as against the plaintiff and also for the possession of the house. The suit was decreed both by the trial court and the first appellate court. Hence Mst. Chandani Begam who is the daughter of Hashamatulla original defendant No. 1 has filed this appeal.

(2) The learned counsel for the appellant has raised two points before me. The first point is that issue No. 2 has been wrongly decided in favour of the plaintiff and the second is that the suit is time barred. Issue No. 2 is as follows:

“क्या मकान मुतदाविया म्युनिसीपल नंबर ३:५, मालियत मुद्दे है? और वालिद मुद्दे ने वाल्दा मुद्दाहलेह को आर यतन दिया है? और इसलिये मुद्दाहलेह नंबर १ उसके इतकाल का मजाज नहीं है.”

In order to support the claim of the plaintiff that the suit house belongs to the plaintiff, plaintiff has produced both documentary and oral evidence. Documentary evidence consists of the following documents: (1) Patta Parmat, dated 12-4-1897. (2) Teharir written by Lele dated 4-2-91. (3) Receipt by Bihari Thekedar. (4) Teharir by the defendant dated 4-11-14. (5) Copy of the order passed by the Home Member, Gwalior Government, dated 5-9-29. (6) Statement by Shankarrao Bhujang. (7) Statement by Dattraya Lonkar.

(On consideration of Patta Parmat his Lordship held that it related to the house in dispute and proceeded:)

(3-4) Teharir Municipality signed by Mr. Lele dated 4-2-91 states that Rs. 2123-2-0 have been duly received and that orders have been issued to the Overseer to hand over the three shops and the land in Patankar Bazar. It appears from the papers that actually the house was purchased in 1891. But the Patta was given in 1897. The counsel for the appellant contends that this Teharir has not been proved according to law. Under Section 90 of the Evidence Act a document 30 years old produced from proper custody and otherwise free from suspicions proves itself and no evidence of the handwriting, signature, sealing or delivery need in general be given. There is no doubt that the document purports to be 30 years old and that it is produced from proper custody. No circumstances have been pointed out to suspect its genuineness. There is no reason, therefore, why a presumption may not be drawn under Section 90 of the Evidence Act.

Besides the presumption is rebuttable. No evidence has been produced by the defendant. In — ‘Har Prasad v. Bikramajitsingh’, 61 Ind. Cas. 959 (Oudh) it has been held that the question whether a presumption under Section 90 should or should not be raised is primarily a question for the trial court. It has also been held in several cases that the appellate court will not interfere unless the discretion has been exercised arbitrarily, capriciously or perversely or without due consideration of relevant facts and circumstances of the case. Vide — ‘Special Manager, Court of Wards, Balrampur v. Tribeni Prasad’, 154 Ind Cas 965 (Oudh) and — ‘Gomti Mt. v. Meghraj Singh’, AIR 1933 All. 443. It has not been shown that the lower court has exercised its discretion without due consideration of the facts or circumstances of the case. I, therefore, see no reason to interfere with the discretion exercised by the lower court. The objection raised with regard to the proof of the Teharir dated 4-2-91, therefore, cannot be accepted.

(His Lordship after considering other evidence held that the house in dispute was the property of the plaintiff and proceeded:)

(5-7) Turning now to the second aspect of issue No. 2, that is, whether the plaintiff's father gave the house in dispute to the mother of the defendant No. 1 for use, it must be admitted that there is no direct proof of license. But license can be presumed from the relevant facts and circumstances of the case. (His Lordship after considering the evidence held that the house in dispute was given to Mst. Chatro for use only and proceeded:)

(8) The second point raised by the learned counsel for the appellant is that the suit is time barred. The first question to consider in this connection is whether article 142 applies to the case or article 144. From the facts already found it is clear that the defendant was in permissive possession of the property. Article 142 applies where the plaintiff being in possession is either dispossessed or discontinues his possession. A person can be said to be dispossessed or to discontinue his possession only when another person enters on the property in the possession of the plaintiff and such entry is adverse to the plaintiff.

Where the plaintiff is in possession and the defendant has entered on the property but his entry is under a right derived from the plaintiff or is permissive it cannot be said that the entry itself is in contravention of the plaintiff's title, though by reason of subsequent events his possession may become adverse to the plaintiff. Adverse possession means hostile possession, that is, possession which is expressly or impliedly in denial of the title of the true owner. Where possession which is permissive to begin with, becomes adverse to the plaintiff by some act of the defendant article 144 would apply and not article 142. In — ‘Zainuddin Hossain v. Muhammad Abdur Rahim’, AIR 1933 Cal. 102 their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court held as follows:

“In the present case there was no transfer of any interest in immovable property at all but only permission to reside in the premises, and so there was no dispossession, not any discontinuance of possession on the part of the plaintiff, notwithstanding the permission, such possession as the grantor of the leave or license could have, he had in the premises. It has also been argued that the defendants and their predecessors acquired by virtue of adverse possession for over twelve years a limited interest, namely, a right to reside which could not be defeated. One amongst several answers to this contention is that there was never any such right asserted adversely to the plaintiff at any time before the solicitor's letter Ex. C. In our opinion the article applicable to the case is article 144 of the Act and time began to run only after the plaintiff's right to Khas possession was denied....."

The same view has been expressed in — 'Jai-chand v. Girwarsingh', 41 All. 669. In the present case from the facts found above, it is clear that the defendant was in permissive possession. His first act which makes his possession adverse to the plaintiff is the execution of the mortgage deed on 1-4-32. The case, therefore, clearly attracts article 144 of the Limitation Act and the period of limitation of twelve years began to run from 1-4-32 when the possession of the defendant became adverse to the plaintiff. The suit was filed on 12-8-36. The suit is, therefore, clearly within time.

(9) The learned counsel for the appellant has raised a further contention that Sardar Ramrao Falke died in 1914. Hence license terminated on his death and the defendant's possession after his death became adverse to the plaintiff. It is true that Sardar Ramrao died in 1914. But from the facts as they appear on record, it is evident that the plaintiff impliedly gave permission to the defendant to use the house as before. Hashmatulla states in his deposition that Ajgarli, who was in the service of the plaintiff, used to realise the rent of the house in dispute and utilize it to meet his expenses. The fact that an officer of the Sansthan was allowed to realize the rent and spend it over the defendant testifies that the plaintiff had given implied permission to the defendant to use the house. The order of the Home Member dated 5-9-29 also supports the same conclusion. Rental of the house was treated as an allowance from the Sansthan to the defendant. From the same order it also appears that the plaintiff's Sansthan defrayed the expenses of the marriage of defendant's daughter.

Taking all these facts into consideration there is no doubt in my mind that the plaintiff gave implied permission to the defendant to use the house as before. In these circumstances the defendant's possession after the death of Sardar Ramrao Falke does not become adverse to the plaintiff. As already stated defendant's possession became adverse on 1-4-32, the day on which he executed the mortgage deed. The result is that the contention of the appellant that the suit is time barred fails.

(10) For the reasons given above the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

(a) Madhya Bharat Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act (3 of 1948), S. 11 — Mens rea — Necessity — Madhya Bharat Cotton Textile Control Order (1948) Ss. 13 and 15.

To make a person liable for an offence under the Act, he must have a mens rea. The effect of Section 11 is not to exclude mens rea but to draw a presumption of mens rea and to cast on the accused the burden of proving that he did not have the necessary mens rea. It is one thing to say that in an offence under a statute mens rea is excluded. It is quite different to say that a statute makes a presumption of mens rea and casts on the accused the burden of showing the absence of a criminal mind. DIXIT, J.: This is an appeal by the State from an order of the Additional City Magistrate, Lashkar acquitting the respondent Brij Lal Dhodi of the charge of having committed an offence under Section 8 of the Madhya Bharat Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act Samvat 2005 (Act No. 3 of 1948) by contravening the provisions of sections 15 and 13 of the Madhya Bharat Cotton Textile Control Order 1948 made under section 4 of the Act No. 3 of 1948. It was alleged by the prosecution that on 18-7-50, the respondent Brij Lal Dhodi sold 82 yards of cloth to Messrs Sharma brothers at a price in excess of the maximum price fixed by the Textile Commissioner under section 13 of the Cotton Textile Control Order. The ex-mill price of this cloth was Rs. 130-7-9. The respondent was entitled to charge for the cloth sold in addition to the above price an amount of Rs. 1-0-6 in respect of sale-tax and a further amount of Rs. 8-3-6 in respect of the customs duty.

Under notification No. 44 of 1949 dated the 6-12-49 (published in the Gazette of 17-12-49) the respondent was also entitled to make a surcharge of 14 per cent. on the ex-mill price of the cloth, namely Rs. 130-7-9. It was alleged by the prosecution that the respondent Brij Lal Dhodi illegally realised from Messrs Sharma Brothers 14 per cent. surcharge on Rs. 139-11-9 being the total of the ex-mill price, sales tax and the customs duty, whereas he could have charged the 14 per cent surcharge only on the amount of ex-mill price, namely, 130-7-9. The prosecution stated that the respondent thus made an overcharge of Rs. 1-9-10. The respondent did not dispute these facts. In his defence, he stated that at the time he sold the cloth to Messrs Sharma Brothers and prepared a cash memo in respect of the transaction, there were several customers in his shop and that through some mistake he calculated the 14 per cent. surcharge on Rs. 139-11-9 instead of on Rs. 130-7-9. The learned City Magistrate accepted this plea and held that the accused committed a bona fide mistake in calculating the 14 per cent. surcharge.

(2) In this appeal, Mr. Shiv Dayal Deputy Govt. Advocate, firstly contends that section 15 of the Cotton Textile Control Order 1948 and section 11 of the Madhya Bharat Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1948 by necessary implication rule out mens rea as a constituent part of the offence of a contravention of the Textile Control Order, 1948 and that, therefore, the Additional City Magistrate was not justified in taking into consideration the plea of the accused that he had committed a mistake in charging the 14 per cent. surcharge on Rs. 139-11-9. Mr. Shiv Dayal secondly argues that even if it is held that there can be no conviction under section 8 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1948 in the absence of mens rea, the evidence on the record amply shows the criminal mind of the accused in calculating the 14 per cent. surcharge in the manner he did.

(3) In my opinion, both these contentions advanced by the learned Government Advocate must be rejected. In support of his contention, that mens rea is not a constituent part of a crime under the Act No. 3 of 1948 and the Cotton Textile Control Order 1948, Mr. Shiv Dayal places reliance on a decision of a Division Bench of this Court in — 'State v. Genda Lal', AIR 1950 Madh. B. 89. In that case the question was whether all the partners of a firm could be said to have contravened the provisions of clause 12-A of Indore Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order when on a search of the partnership shop time-barred cloth was found therein. One of the contentions advanced on behalf of the accused persons in that case was that the partners of the firm were not liable as they did not know that time-barred cloth was kept in the shop and that they had no guilty knowledge. The Division Bench did not accept the contention holding that clause 11 of the Indore Essential Supplies Order under which the Indore Cotton Cloth And Yarn Control Order was made clearly recognised the principle of vicarious responsibility in offences arising out of the breach of the provisions of that order and that therefore, mens rea as an essential constituent of the crime was excluded.

Clause 11 of the Indore Essential Supplies Order was to this effect:—

"Offences of corporations. If the person contravening an order made or deemed to be made under section 3 is a company or other body corporate every director, manager, secretary or other officer or agent thereof shall, unless he proves that the contravention took place without his knowledge or that he exercised all due diligence to prevent such contravention, be deemed to be guilty of such contravention."

(4) In the case of — 'State v. Genda Lal', AIR 1950 Madh-B 89 the Division Bench referred to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in — 'Sri Niwas Mal v. Emperor', AIR 1947 P. C. 135 to the effect that,

"unless a statute, either clearly or by necessary implication, rules out mens rea as a constituent part of a crime, the defendant should not be found guilty of an offence against the criminal law unless he has got a guilty mind" and then observed that the Privy Council case clearly recognised that the law either expressly or by necessary implication rules out mens rea as a constituent element of the crime. The decision of the Division Bench is not an authority for the proposition that as a general rule mens rea is not necessary to constitute a crime. That decision only lays down that clause 11 of the Indore Essential Supplies Order, 1946 rules out mens rea as an essential constituent in offences of contravention of the Indore Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order.

On the basis of the Division Bench decision, it could, at the most, be argued that in offences under a statute where a provision exists similar to clause 11 of Indore Essential Supplies Order, 1946 mens rea is excluded. But the authority of the Division Bench decision even in respect of this limited proposition is now considerably weakened by a recent decision of the Supreme Court reported in — 'Joy Lal Agrawal v. The State', AIR 1951 S. C. 484. In this case their Lordships of the Supreme Court considered the element of mens rea in respect of a prosecution under the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act 1946, Section 9 of which is analogous to clause 11 of Indore Essential Supplies Order of 1946, and held that on the evidence in that case, an inference of mens rea could be drawn against the accused person. If by the wording of S. 9, the element of mens rea in an offence under the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946 had been excluded, it would have been unnecessary for the Supreme Court and the Calcutta High Court whose judgment was under appeal before the Supreme Court to consider the question of mens rea on the evidence adduced in that case.

I am therefore, inclined to think that in view of this decision of the Supreme Court, the question whether mens rea is an essential constituent of an offence under the Essential Supplies Act of 1946 or the Madhya Bharat Essential Supplies Act, 1948 (which is nothing but a reproduction of the Central Act 1946) is no longer res integra and it must be held that to make a person liable for an offence under the Act, he must have a mens rea. In this view, the effect of section 9 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act 1946 (Act No. XXV of 1946) or of section 11 of the Madhya Bharat Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1948 is not to exclude mens rea but to draw a presumption of mens rea and to cast on the accused the burden of proving that he did not have the necessary mens rea. It is one thing to say that in an offence under a statute mens rea is excluded. It is quite different to say that a statute makes a presumption of mens rea and casts on the accused the burden of showing the absence of a criminal mind. The contention, therefore, of the learned Deputy Government Advocate that in the present case the question of mens rea does not arise for consideration, cannot be accepted.

(5) On the question whether the respondent has succeeded in showing that when he charged the 14 per cent. surcharge on Rs. 139-11-9, he had not the necessary guilty mind, I see no reason to disagree with the finding arrived at by the learned Additional City Magistrate. The accused gave a cash memo to the purchaser Messrs Sharma Brothers immediately after the sale of the cloth. In the cash memo, it was entered that the cloth was being sold for "official purpose". In the cash memo no attempt was made to hide the amount on which the 14 per cent. surcharge was calculated. When the matter of this overcharge was discovered by the Sub Inspector of Enforcement Branch, the accused was questioned by the Sub Inspector Mr. Chaturvedi and at that time also the respondent stated that the overcharge was a mistake. According to the evidence given by this Sub-Inspector, he found the same amount of surcharge which was shown in the cash memo entered in the respondent's account books and that there were no erasures of any kind in his account-books and further in the other cash memos issued by the respondent there was no overcharge of the type in the present case.

Mr. Chaturvedi also admitted in his deposition the possibility of the 14 per cent. surcharge on Rs. 139-11-9 being a mistake. In these circumstances, it cannot be said that the conclusion drawn by the learned Magistrate that the overcharge was due to a bona fide mistake is unwarranted on the evidence on the record. A different view of the evidence may be possible but, as has been pointed out by the Privy Council in — 'Sheo Swarup v. Emperor', 1934 P. C. 227 (2) and by this Court in — 'State v. Hira Lal', Cri. Appeal No. 34 of 1950 (Madh. B.) that in appeals against acquittals the appellate Court must be slow to disturb a finding of fact arrived at by a Judge who had the advantage of seeing witnesses.

(6) For the above reasons, I do not think we would be justified in interfering with the acquittal of the respondent. The learned Additional City Magistrate has carefully considered all the facts and circumstances of this case and came to a conclusion which cannot be said to be wrong either in law or on facts.

(7) In my opinion, this appeal must, therefore, be dismissed.

ORDER: This is a revision petition by the defendant against a decree passed by the Small Cause Court, Indore.

(2) After hearing the learned counsel for both the parties I have come to the conclusion that the decree made by the Court of Small Cause in this case is not according to law and must be set aside.

(3) The defendant petitioner executed on 4-9-1946 a promissory note (Ex. P-2) for Rs. 300/- with interest at the rate of 1½ Rs. per cent per month in favour of the plaintiff who has a shop of milk in Indore. On the same date he executed an agreement (Ex. P-1) in favour of the plaintiff by which he promised to give milk to the plaintiff, daily, without fail, at 4.30 A.M. in the morning and at 5 P.M. in the evening at the rate of 3½ seers per rupee and further stipulated to give 17 Chhataks per seer. The milk to be given to the plaintiff was agreed to be pure and without water and of such a quality that one seer of milk should provide 20 tolas of Mawa. If the milk was not of this quality and would not provide the requisite weight of Mawa, it was further stipulated that the plaintiff would be entitled to deduct 2 annas per tola. The defendant agreed that from Bhadwa Badi 1 of Samvat 2003 to Shrawan Sudi Poonam of Samvat 2004 he would not sell his milk to anybody else and that if he failed to do so or if he failed to give milk to the plaintiff even once, the plaintiff would be entitled to deduct, at the rate of 2½ annas per seer, a sum, from the price of milk, to be paid to him for the milk given to the plaintiff during the past month. Then in para 3 of the agreement there is a reference to Rs. 300/- borrowed by the defendant and the para runs as follows: "Apse jo peshagi rupaye teen so liye hain un pete Bhois nag ek ka dudh deunga, aur rupaye pete khandi 30 mahwar jama karta jaunga. Agar khandi jama nahi karau wa mah das ke under jo bhi apne rupaye liye ada nahi karun to apko bakaya rupaye ka byaj jis tarikh se rupaye liye waha se apko rupaye deu. Wada tak rupaye ka byaj deunga."

(4) The defendant is illiterate and has affixed his thumb impression on the agreement as well as on the pro-note. The plaintiff, in his plaint, alleged that the defendant only paid Rs. 164/- and did not pay the whole amount of Rs. 300/- within a period of ten months as stipulated in the agreement and therefore he filed a suit for Rs. 185/- (i.e., Rs. 300/- principal plus Rs. 49 interest minus Rs. 165/- is equal to 185). The Court decreed the suit for Rs. 169/- only, rate of interest having been reduced to 1/- Re. only.

(5) The defendant resisted the suit on the ground that he had been regularly supplying milk to the plaintiff and the agreement was to supply milk worth Rs. 30/- per month & thus pay back Rs. 300/- within 10 months. He never promised to pay Rs. 30 in cash per month. In my opinion, the execution of pro-note and the agreement on the same day and the contents of the agreement, as stated above, definitely support the contention of the defendant.

(6) Mrs. Gandhe, on behalf of the non-applicant, contended that there were two transactions, one for milk; and another for Rs. 300/-; and that the agreement (Ex. P-1) should be read as referring to both. I do not think this contention can succeed. It is clear from para No. 3 of the agreement that the defendant wanted to pay Rs. 300/- by supplying milk worth Rs. 30/- per month. The words are clear.

"Ap se jo peshgi rupaye teen so (300 Rs.) liye hain un pete bhai nag ek ka dudh deunga aur rupaye pete kandi 30 Ru. mahawar jama karta jaunga."

(7) It is clear that Rs. 300/- were advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant only for the supply of milk regularly; otherwise the terms of the agreement would not have been so strict. Every term of the agreement is definitely in favour of the plaintiff and against the defendant, and prima facie, the whole bargain appears to be an unconscionable one. The defendant would never have agreed to the terms if he had not taken Rs. 300/- in advance for the supply of milk.

(8) Next thing that supports the defendant's contention is the Khata of the plaintiff. The defendant is never shown to have paid Rs. 30/- in cash in any month. On the other hand, milk had been supplied to the plaintiff for Rs. 30/- as 4 pies 6 in September; for Rs. 31-4-6 in October; for Rs. 37-1-0 in November for Rs. 39-4-6 in December; and Rs. 29-2-3 in January; for Rs. 23-14-9 in February & for Rs. 22/9/- in March. The average comes to about Rs. 30/- per month. I do not understand how the Court has overlooked the contents of the agreement and the figures in the Khata which speak for themselves.

(9) The Court has also, in its judgment, stated that in Ex. P-4 the account of milk supplied by the defendant is recorded and that every item bears the thumb impression of the defendant. The judgment seems to have been written in some hurry. The three items mentioned in the Khata (1) Rs. 21-10-3 for June 1947; (2) Rs. 26-8-0 for July 1947; (3) Rs. 48-2-3 for June and July do not bear the thumb impression in the original document, though in the copy it is mentioned underneath the item, "Ni. a. Khud Nathulal". The plaintiff has admitted this.

(10) Then the Khata was written by the brother of the plaintiff Ramchandra, who is alive and is in Indore. He has not been produced in this case and I do not understand how the Khata can be taken to have been proved.

(11) It will be apparent from the Khata that in one lump sum Rs. 76-5-6 have been deducted from the price of milk, presumably because the milk supplied was not of the quality, one seer of which would have supplied 20 tolas of Mawa and the plaintiff resorted to his right of deducting 2 annas per tola from the price of milk. But on what particular dates the milk was not of requisite quality & for what dates the deductions have been made has not been mentioned in the Khata. The Khata only mentions that the deductions have been made for the milk of past two months. The plaintiff in his testimony also, cannot mention the specific dates. The Khata is in the hand-writing of Ramchandra who could have said that everything was explained to the illiterate defendant when his thumb impression was taken, but in the absence of Ramchandra's testimony the items cannot be taken to have been legally proved.

(12) In cases of documents executed by ignorant and illiterate person it is difficult to draw the usual presumption arising under section 114, Evidence Act, — 'Udebhan v. Vithoba', AIR 1939 Nag. 78. In — 'Omanhene Kwamin Bassayin v. Omanhene Bendentu II', AIR 1937 P. C. 274, in an appeal from West Africa, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that where a person not knowing English has affixed his mark to a document written in English language, the onus to prove that the document was properly explained and interpreted to the person affixing his mark so as to make him understand its true importance is on the party relying on the document — ('Omanhene Kwamin Bassayin v. Omanhene Ben Dentu').

(13) In — 'Hoe Moh v. I. M. Seedat', AIR 1927 Rang. 319: 5 Rang. 527, the defendant to an action based on a promissory note for Rs. 3000/- had admitted his signature on the paper but stated that he had signed a blank note with only the figure of Rs. 300/- written on the top of the paper. Division Bench of the Rangoon High Court dealing with the question of onus of proof observed:

"The admission by the defendant did not establish the plaintiff's claim and if there had been nothing on the pleadings besides the plaint and the defendant's denial, the suit must have failed. It is quite true that the fact that the defendant's signature is on the pro-note is of great evidentiary value and in many cases of this nature it might be sufficient corroboration of evidence given by the plaintiff himself to establish the plaintiff's case. That would depend on the circumstances of the particular case. But the defendant did not and never has admitted the material propositions of fact, which would give the plaintiff a right to sue, and the burden of proving the loan, in our opinion, rested upon the plaintiff."

(14) In — 'Ebadut Ali v. Mohammad Fareed', 35 Ind. Cas. 56 (Pat.) it was pointed out that execution consists in signing a document read out and understood and does not consist of mere signing the name upon a blank sheet of paper. To be executed, a document must be in existence. Where there is no document in existence there cannot be execution. So where an executant clearly says that he signed a blank paper, the statement is a denial and not an admission of execution.

(15) In an Allahabad case, — 'Pirbhu Dayal v. Tula Ram', 62 Ind. Cas. 809: AIR 1922 All 401 (2), a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that an admission by a defendant regarding the putting of a signature or a thumb mark on a document while he mentions that the paper when he signed it was blank is not such an admission of the execution of the document as to thrust the burden of proving his case upon him and it is for the plaintiff in such a case to prove primarily the due execution of the document relied upon by him.

(16) In — 'Maung Bya v. Maung Po', 11 Ind. Cas. 916 (Rang.) an illiterate person had put her mark and thumb impression on a document for Rs. 3000/- but had denied execution of such a document; though she admitted executing a document which the plaintiff told her was only for Rs. 400/-. It was held that the burden of proof in such a case lies upon the plaintiff to prove consideration and genuineness of the transaction.

(17) Two rulings, one of Lahore — 'Ramji Lal v. Debi Sahai', AIR 1934 Lah 542, & another of Patna — 'Sahdeo v. Pulesar', AIR 1930 Pat 598, had held a contrary view to the effect that the burden is on the defendant to explain how the document having defendant's thumb impression came into existence and the Lahore High Court held that in such a case the onus about non-payment lies upon the defendant. In view of the decision of the Privy Council in 1937, these two rulings cannot be held to be good law.

(18) In — 'Ramlakhan Singh v. Gog Singh', AIR 1931 Pat 219, a Division Bench followed with approval the two rulings of — 'Hoe Moh v. I. M. Seedat', AIR 1927 Rang 319 and — 'Pirbhu Dayal v. Tula Ram', AIR 1922 All 401 (2) and held that where plaintiff proves identity of defendant's thumb impression on the pro-note but defendant pleads that it was taken on a blank paper, Courts are not bound to raise presumption of due execution in plaintiff's favour. It was further held that where the law places the onus on the plaintiff to prove that the document is duly executed, the onus cannot be discharged by merely proving the identity of a thumb impression, but it must be further proved that the thumb impression was given on the document after it had been written out and completed. If the evidence adduced by the plaintiff is unreliable or if there is no evidence then no onus is necessarily thrown on the defendant merely by reason of the fact that the defendant asserts that the thumb impression is his.

(19) From all that has been stated above, it follows that duty is cast on the Courts to keep in mind the strict rule of law in respect of onus, where the executant happens to be ignorant and illiterate. Mere illiteracy, without ignorance, will, of course, not be enough. A shrewd man of the world with business instincts and acumen may be illiterate, but he will not affix his mark to a document without taking special precautions to ensure that he has a true and accurate knowledge of the contents of that document. A rustic from a village, both ignorant and illiterate, stands on a different footing. He is in a position of special disadvantage and is likely to be dominated by the will of a shrewd literate man carrying on his business in the town, and will in all probability put his thumb impression on a document prepared by the latter, relying on him so far as the contents of the document are concerned. In such a case, it must be further proved that the thumb impression was given on the document by the defendant after learning the contents which had been explained to him.

In the case before me the defendant is both ignorant and illiterate; otherwise he would never have put his thumb impression on a document, every term of which placed him at a very great disadvantage. When the defendant admitted only some of the conditions but not the harsher ones embodied in the document, it was the duty of the plaintiff to have proved execution of the document. In the written statement, the defendant petitioner clearly mentioned that he had not stipulated for supplying 17 Chhataks milk for a seer. The learned Small Causes Court Judge while decreeing the suit, strangely enough, observed as to this point as follows:

"17 chatak dudh lekar 16 chatak jama karna awaji pi 1 me yaha karar nyaya poorna hain. Wadi ka kathan hain ki dudh napte samaya fes: foam: ka ek chatak kata jata hain, yaha kisi prakhar anyaya poorna widit nahi hota."

(20) I have carefully gone through the statement of the plaintiff non-applicant in this case, but I have not been able nor Mrs. Gandhe has been able, to trace the particular passage in the testimony of the plaintiff to this effect. In fact, there is nothing on the record which may incline me to the view that anything of the sort was deposed by any witness in the Court below. Even in the agreement (Ex. P-1) this usage of trade has not even been referred to. A usage of trade must be specifically alleged and proved. A court is not entitled to base its decision on conjectures and surmises so far as usage of trade is concerned. The plaintiff has not been able even to state the name of the scribe of the agreement Ex. P-1 and the execution of the document remains unproved. I have already stated above that the Khata Ex. P-3 and Ex. P-4 cannot be held to have been proved in the absence of Ramchandra's statement. Whatever money has been shown to have been deposited either as cash or as price of milk supplied, would amount to more than Rs. 300/-. If allowance is made in the amounts by adjusting one chhatak per seer of milk and if the sum of Rs. 76-5-6 which had been wrongly deducted on the basis of bad quality of milk is added to the amount alleged to have been paid by the defendant, it will be seen that the plaintiff non-applicant had already received from the defendant a sum much more than Rs. 300/- plus interest, whatever the rate of interest might have been.

In my opinion, the trial court has in this case misdirected itself by casting the burden of proof wrongly, by not drawing correct inferences from the documents on which the suit was based by basing its findings not on evidence but on conjectures or assumptions for which there is nothing in fact to support and by overlooking the important principles of law of Evidence; and this has contributed to gross miscarriage of justice in this case. I would, therefore, allow this revision petition, set aside the decree and judgment of the Small Cause Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. The defendant petitioner will be entitled to his costs both here as well as in the Court below.

Revision allowed.

State v. Raj Kumar Singh, Opponent.

Criminal Misc. Case No. 159 of 1950, D/- 2-4-1951.

Constitution of India, Art. 134(1)(c) — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court — Certificate of fitness — Principles — Question of interpretation of temporary Act — Quashing of proceedings against accused in view of interpretation — Case held not fit for appeal to Supreme Court.

Per Mehta J.: To justify a grant of leave to appeal under Art. 134(1)(c) there must at least be a substantial question of law or a disregard of the forms of legal process or some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise substantial or grave injustice must have been done, or it should be a matter of great public importance. The mere fact that the petitioner raised a point which may be a point of law does not justify his claim for a certificate under Art. 134(1)(c). AIR 1941 PC 132; AIR 1951 Mad. 213 and AIR 1950 Orissa 235 Ref.

Where the question of law is not well settled or where there is some doubt as to the principles of law involved or there is a conflict of judicial decisions, it may be that a substantial question of law can be said to arise which may require the final adjudication by the highest Court. (Para 12)

The construction of a legislative provision which is no longer in force and under which no further questions on the same point can arise, cannot be said to be of great public importance so as to justify the grant of such leave. (Para 14)

Per Kaul C. J.: It would not be proper for any Judge to attempt to define in what cases or classes of cases a certificate of fitness should be granted and thus, to restrict the wide generality of the language advisably used by the framers of the Constitution. A Judge might indicate in a negative form a class of cases in which the certificate contemplated by Art. 134(c) should not be granted. (Para 22)

Substantial and grave injustice to the party asking for leave to appeal has almost invariably been held to be the test which must be fulfilled before such leave would be granted in a criminal case.

It should not be granted if the question for consideration is only the interpretation of any section of a temporary Act which is not likely to affect a large number of cases and in respect of which it cannot be said that if the view taken by the High Court is erroneous it would result in grave and substantial injustice. (Para 22)

Where all that the High Court had done was to interpret the words "shall continue to remain in force until repealed or amended", as used in S. 3 of Madhya Bharat Ordinance No. 1 of 1948 and held that the use of these words could not have the effect of making a temporary Law or Order which was to remain in force for a special period, perpetual and in support of this view relied upon AIR 1941 FC 16 and in this view quashed the proceeding initiated against the accused for breach of notification under Indore Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Order, 1946 which had expired before the alleged breach was committed and the State filed an application for leave to appeal under Art. 134(1)(c) against the judgment of the High Court:

Held (1) that the case was not fit one for appeal under Art. 134(1)(c) as there was no substantial question of law or a question of public importance involved in the case. The mere fact that the view of Law taken by the High Court resulted in the acquittal of a person who had committed a breach of a rule made under a temporary Order or in a proceeding initiated against him being quashed does not necessarily constitute grave and substantial injustice, justifying the grant of a certificate. (Para 24)

MEHTA J.:— This is an application by the State through the Director of Food, Madhya Bharat for leave to file an appeal under Art. 134 (c) of the Constitution, against the judgment dated the 14th October, 1950 passed by a Division Bench of this Court in Criminal Reference No. 111 of 1950. The brief facts are that Seth Rajkumarsinghji was being prosecuted in the Magistrate's Court for a breach of Notification No. 27 dated 12th June, 1948, passed under Indore Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act of 1946, by which serving of food stuff to 151 or more than 150 persons at any religious, social function, or at any party without the permission of the Food Minister was prohibited. The Indore Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Order of 1946 came into force on 1st October, 1946 when the Holkar State was in existence and applied to the then Holkar State territories. It was extended from time to time and it was to remain in force till 30th September, 1948. It was contended before us that this Notification No. 27 dated 12th June, 1948 as well as its parent order viz. Indore Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Order, expired on 30th September, 1948. On the date viz. 14th February, 1949 on which Seth Rajkumarsingh was alleged to have committed the offence, there was no law in force in Indore restricting the distribution of food stuffs to a particular number of persons. This contention prevailed and the Criminal proceeding against Seth Rajkumarsingh was quashed by this court on a reference made by the Sessions Judge, Indore.

The contention of the Government Advocate was that the Madhya Bharat Ordinance No. 1 of 1948, and Madhya Bharat Ordinance No. 12 of 1948 continued in force, and kept alive the Indore Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Order even after 30th September, 1948. He placed reliance on S. 3 of Ordinance No. 1 of 1948 which runs as follows:

"When the administration of any Covenanting State has been taken over by the Raj Pramukh, or when any State has been merged in the State of Madhya Bharat, all laws, Ordinances, Acts etc., etc., having the force of law in the said State, shall continue to remain in force until repealed or amended under the provisions of the next succeeding section....."

(2) The main question for consideration before us was as to the meaning of "shall continue in force until repealed or amended" used in S. 3 of Ordinance No. 1 of 1948 promulgated by Raj Pramukh of Madhya Bharat.

(3) We held that the effect of S. 3 of the Ordinance was not to make perpetual a temporary order which expired with efflux of time. The Indore Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act of 1946 automatically ceased to be in force from 30th September, 1948 which was the duration fixed in the Act itself.

(4) We construed Section 292 of the Government of India Act and Art. 372 of the Constitution where similar words are used to ascertain the meaning of the words "shall continue in force until repealed or amended". We also followed the decision of the Federal Court in United Provinces v. Attiqua Begum, AIR 1941 F. C. 16 (reference P. 24).

(5) We held, on the aforesaid considerations that the purpose for which S. 3 of the Ordinance No. 1 of 1948, Madhya Bharat, was passed was to negate the possibility of the existing laws, Ordinances, Acts etc., prevailing in various integrating States, being held to be no longer in force by repeal of the authority or the law which authorised its enactment. It was never intended by S. 3 of the Ordinance No. 1 of 1948 to give perpetual life to temporary orders whose duration was limited by the temporary order itself. After the efflux of time viz. 30th September, 1948 the Indore Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act and Notification No. 27 dated 12-6-1948 automatically ceased to have any existence.

(6) The ground on which the Government Advocate supports the application for leave to the Supreme Court being granted is that the interpretation put by this Court on the words "shall continue to remain in force until repealed or amended", is open to question and is opposed to the plain and natural meaning. It was also contended that the decision given by this Court in Criminal Reference No. 111 of 1950 involves substantial questions of law and the effect of the decision given by this Court will be to render invalid all acts done under and prosecutions launched in respect of contraventions of the orders and notifications relating to essential commodities which were continued in force by the Indian Essential Supplies Order 1946. It is contended that the issues of laws decided in the case are of great public importance.

(7) It will be necessary to consider the scope of appeal under Art. 134 of the Constitution and the considerations which should weigh with the courts in granting leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against a final order and sentence in a Criminal proceeding.

(8) In — Pritamsingh v. State, AIR 1950 S. C. 169 their Lordships of the Supreme Court have laid down that generally speaking, Supreme Court will not grant special leave to appeal in criminal cases unless it is shown that exceptional and special circumstances exist, that substantial and grave injustice has been done and that the case in question presents features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision appealed against. It was further held that though the Supreme Court is not bound to follow the decisions of the Privy Council too rigidly since the reasons, Constitutional and administrative, which sometimes weighed with the Privy Council, need not weigh with the Supreme Court, yet some of those principles are useful as furnishing in many cases a sound basis for invoking the discretion of the Court in granting special leave.

(9) It is, therefore, clear that the scope of an appeal under Art. 134 of the Constitution to the Supreme Court against a final order or sentence in Criminal proceedings has not all been widened.

(10) In — King W. H. v. Emperor, AIR 1950 Bom 380 a Division Bench of Bombay High Court held that except in cases falling under sub-clause (a) and (b) of the Art. 134 (1) in all other criminal matters the Constitution of India intends that the High Court in the respective States in the territory of India should normally and ordinarily be the final Courts of appeal. This fact must, therefore, be borne in mind in deciding the question as to whether a certificate of fitness should be given in a case. There must at least be a substantial question of law or considerations must exist like those mentioned by Viscount Simon in — Mahomed Nawaz v. Emperor, AIR 1941 P. C. 132 e. g. a disregard of the forms of legal process or some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise substantial or grave injustice had been done, or it should be a matter of great public importance. The mere fact that the petitioner raised a point which may be a point of law does not justify his claim for a certificate under Art. 134 (a) (c). Vide also — Radhakrishnayya v. Sarasamma, AIR 1951 Mad 213 and — Arjuna Misra v. Indian Union, AIR 1950 Orissa 235.

(11) The Government Advocate argued that in the decision given by us a substantial question of law is involved but I do not see what substantial question of law is involved. We merely construed the very common phrase in legislative enactments "shall continue to remain in force until repealed or amended" and in doing so compared the language used in S. 292 of the Government of India Act 1935 and Art. 372 of the Constitution. We also followed the decision in Attiqua Begum's case, AIR 1941 F. C. 16 (reference P. 24.)

(12) Where the question of law is not well settled or where there is some doubt as to the principles of law involved or there is a conflict of judicial decisions, it may be that a substantial question of law can be said to arise which may require the final adjudication by the highest court.

(13) Here, there is no substantial question of law involved. There is no conflict of decisions on the point involved, and we merely followed the decision of the Federal Court in Attiqua Begum's case (AIR 1941 F. C. 16), which we were bound to follow. If we give permission to file appeal to the Supreme Court it would mean that the decision of Federal Court is doubtful. In my opinion there is no substantial question of law involved in this case, and merely raising a question of law is not enough.

(14) There is no matter of public importance involved in this case. The decision given by us affects only acts done and prosecutions launched in respect of acts done between 30th of September, 1948 and 18th January, 1950. The Madhya Bharat Feeding at Parties Restriction Order came into force on 19th January, 1950. The learned Government Advocate has not given particulars in his application for leave as to the number of prosecutions which are likely to be affected by our decision. But even if some prosecutions launched under the Indore Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Order are likely to be affected by our decision, the construction of a legislative provision which is no longer in force and under which no further questions on the same point can arise, cannot be said to be of great public importance so as to justify the grant of leave to appeal to the Supreme Court in a criminal matter in which by decision of this court an accused person has been discharged.

(15) For the reasons aforesaid, I would reject the application for grant of certificate and hold that this is not a fit case for appeal to the Supreme Court.

(16) KAUL C. J.: I have had the advantage of reading the order dictated by my learned brother Mehta J. and agree with him that the certificate applied for by the State should not be granted. I should, however, like to state very briefly my reasons for the view taken in my own words.

(17) Before the new Constitution came into force, the decisions of High Courts in the country in criminal matters were final. Appeals in criminal matters which had been determined by a High Court, could be entertained by the Judicial Committee by special leave which was granted in exercise of royal prerogative. A right of appeal was however allowed in a very limited class of cases under the Letters Patent of the High Court of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay (Clause 41). A change has been introduced by the new Constitution. Obviously no question of any prerogative can now arise. A discretionary power to grant special leave to appeal has, however, been conferred upon the Supreme Court by Art. 136 of the Constitution. The Supreme Court is also a court of criminal appeal for certain classes of cases specified in Art. 134 (1) Sub-clauses (a) and (b). Sub-clause (c) of that Article further provides for an appeal from any judgment, final order or sentence in a criminal proceeding given by a High Court, if the High Court certifies that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. No provision is found either in Art 134 or in any other Article of the Constitution to guide the High Courts in determining the cases or classes of cases in which a certificate of fitness as contemplated by Art 134 (1) (c) should be granted. The matter must therefore, be determined on general principles, and on such inferences as it may be possible to draw from any provision in our Statute Law.

(18) An indication of the way in which the discretionary power given to the Supreme Court under Article 136 shall be exercised in criminal cases, is to be found in the decision of that court in 'Pritamsingh's case', AIR 1950 S. C. 169. It was observed that in granting special leave in criminal cases, though the Supreme Court was not bound to follow the decisions of the Privy Council too rigidly, it was not inclined to depart from the principles laid down by the Judicial Committee which should normally govern the exercise of discretion of the court in grant of special leave to appeal in such cases.

(19) These principles stated briefly and in very general terms are that there must be something which in the particular case deprives the accused of the substance of a fair trial and the protection of law, which in general tends to divert the due and orderly administration of Law into a new course which may be drawn into an evil precedent in future,—'Reg v. Bertrand', (1867) 16 L. T. 752 or if by a disregard of a form of legal process or by some failure of principles of natural justice or otherwise substantial and grave injustice has been done — 'Re Dillet', (1887) 12 A. C. 459.

(20) It would appear that substantial and grave injustice to the party asking for leave to appeal has almost invariably been held to be the test which must be fulfilled before such leave would be granted in a criminal case.

(21) Under S. 5 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, all offences under the Indian Penal Code or any other Law can be inquired into, tried or otherwise dealt with only according to the provisions of that Code. S. 404 provides that no appeal shall lie from any judgment or order of a criminal court except as provided by the Code of Criminal Procedure or by any other Law for the time being in force. Under S. 430 judgments and orders passed by an appellate court upon appeal are final except in cases provided for in S. 417 and Chapter XXXII of the Code. It is legitimate inference to draw from the provisions above referred to and the general scheme of the Code that the decisions by the High Court given in exercise of its appellate or revisional jurisdiction or as a court of reference are, but for any Law that may provide otherwise, to be final. All the Laws in force in the territory of India before the commencement of the new Constitution have, by Art. 372, been continued to be in force, subject to the provisions of the Constitution. That Arts. 134 and 136 of the Constitution affect the finality of the determinations of the High Courts in criminal matters is clear. The question for consideration is how far it was intended that this finality should be affected in matters other than those specified in Art. 134 (1) (a) and (b). It is significant that the language of Sub Clause (c) of Art. 134 (1) has a very close resemblance to that used in clause 41 of the Letters Patent of the Calcutta, Bombay and Madras High Courts. It was held by a bench of Bombay High Court in — 'Re Bal Gangadhar Tilak', 33 Bom 221 that before granting a certificate for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, the High Court must be satisfied that there is a reasonable ground for thinking that grave and substantial injustice may have been done by reason of some departure from the principles of natural justice.

(22) The High Court, when considering an application for the grant of a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c), does not sit in judgment upon its own decision. It has, however, been authorised to grant a certificate of fitness to appeal to the Supreme Court in any case that it might consider appropriate. I am clear that it would not be proper for any Judge to attempt to define in what cases or classes of cases a certificate of fitness should be granted and thus to restrict the wide generality of the language advisably used by the framers of the Constitution. I believe, however, that I would not lay myself open to this charge, if I might indicate in a negative form a class of cases in which the certificate contemplated by Art. 134 (c) should not be granted. In my opinion, it should not be granted, if the question for consideration is only the interpretation of any section of a temporary Act which is not likely to affect a large number of cases, and in respect of which it cannot be said that if the view taken by the High Court is erroneous, it would result in grave and substantial injustice.

(23) I am further of opinion that when the State applies for grant of a certificate of fitness in a case where the High Court has either acquitted the accused or quashed the proceedings initiated against him, it must make out a strong case showing that the view taken by the High Court is erroneous.

(24) It was contended by the learned Government Advocate in support of this application that a substantial question of law was involved in the decision given by us and therefore a certificate of fitness should be granted. In the first place I am not satisfied that any substantial question of Law or a question of general importance is involved in the present case. All that we have done is to interpret the words "shall continue to remain in force until repealed or amended", as used in Section 3 of Madhya Bharat Ordinance No. 1 of 1948 and held that the use of these words could not have the effect of making a temporary Law or Order which was to remain in force for a specified period, perpetual. In support of our view, we relied on the decision of the Federal Court in Atiqur Begum's case AIR 1911 F.C. 16 reference p.24. Secondly, I am of opinion that even if our decision involved a substantial question of Law, we would not be justified in granting a certificate of fitness unless we were further satisfied that it resulted in grave and substantial injustice. The mere fact that the view of Law taken by us resulted in the acquittal of a person who had committed a breach of a rule made under a temporary order or in a proceeding initiated against him being quashed does not necessarily constitute grave and substantial injustice, justifying the grant of a certificate of fitness to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 134(1)(c) of the Constitution. To do so would be to affect the finality of the decisions of the High Court both on questions of fact and Law as envisaged by the Code of Criminal Procedure, beyond what was contemplated by Article 134 of the Constitution.

(25) For the reasons given above the application is rejected.

Dalpatri Jhanjhari. Applicant v. West End Watch Co., Bombay, Opponent.

Small Cause Revn. No. 21 of 1950, D/- 27-3-1952.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 19 and 20 — Plaintiff writing letter from Ujjain to defendant in Bombay that he is sending his watch for repairs by parcel — Defendant receiving parcel but finding it empty — Plaintiff's suit in Ujjain for recovery of price and damages — Cause of action held did not arise in Ujjain — Suit held one in tort — Held there was no offer — Ujjain Court held had no jurisdiction — (Contract Act (1872), Ss. 4, 10, 137 and 218) — (Tort-conversion).

Plaintiff, a resident in Ujjain, sent his wrist-watch to the defendant for repairs at Bombay and addressed a letter to the defendant, the material portion of which was "I have sent the above watch to you by registered parcel post separately for repairs which will reach you. On receiving the same kindly send an estimate of repairs and on approval I will write to you to carry on work for its repairs". The defendant opened the parcel and found nothing in it. The plaintiff filed a suit in Ujjain Small Causes Court for the recovery of the price of the wrist watch and damages:

Held that (1) the letter of the plaintiff was not an offer. There was no contract for repairs of the watch or for the return of the same at Ujjain. (Para 1)

(2) Even if the letter was an offer it must be held to be one made at Bombay where it was received. (Para 4)

(3) The mere fact that the plaintiff posted a letter at Ujjain and sent the parcel from there would be no part of cause of action, because there could be no proposal till it came to the knowledge of the person to whom the proposal was made. (Para 5)

(4) Even if it be assumed that the watch was received by the defendant at Bombay and repairs were carried out without formal acceptance of the offer the cause of action will arise in Bombay. (Para 6)

(5) The wrist-watch was entrusted to the care of the defendant at Bombay and could have been obtained from the defendant there. (Para 7)

(6) If a person wrongfully converted goods and received the amount, the owner of the goods may either sue in tort or may waive the tort, and recover the proceeds in an action for money had and received, which is based on an implied contract of agency, the defendant being fictitiously assumed to have rightfully received the money as the plaintiff's agent, and to have failed to pay it over to his principal. But, the plaintiff did not so elect, and there being no contractual relation disclosed in the plaint his suit would be taken to be in tort and the jurisdiction will be determined by S. 19, Civil P. C. Case law referred. (Paras 8, 9)

(7) The Court at Ujjain, therefore, had no jurisdiction to try the suit. (Para 12)

Anno: Civil P. C., S. 19 N. 1, 2; S. 20 N. 17, 18; Contract Act, S. 4 N. 1; S. 10 N. 4; S. 187 N. 1; S. 218 N. 1.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 19 and 20 — S. 20 is subject to limitation of S. 19. (Para 11)

ORDER: The only point in this case is whether the Ujjain Court had jurisdiction to hear the suit out of which this revision has arisen. The defendant non-applicant (West End Watch Company) carries on business at Bombay. The plaintiff applicant sent his wrist-watch there for repairs and a letter to the defendant, the material portion of which is in the following words:

"I had purchased a matchless wrist watch from an Indore dealer, while I was at Mhow. I have sent the above watch to you by registered parcel post separately for repairs, which will reach you. On receiving the same kindly send an estimate of repairs and on approval I will write to you to carry on the work for its repairs."

(2) The defendant's correspondence shows that they had opened the parcel but found nothing in it. After correspondence with the Presidency Post Master the defendant informed the plaintiff who was of the opinion that the Company is responsible for the loss sustained by him. He, therefore, brought this suit for recovery of Rs. 57/- as the price of the wrist watch and Rs. 58/- as damages (i.e. for the recovery of 115/- rupees in all). In para 7 of the plaint he mentioned that the plaintiff resides at Ujjain, that he sent the wrist watch from Ujjain and that the defendant ought to have returned it to him at Ujjain, therefore, the Ujjain Court had jurisdiction.

(3) The learned Small Causes Court, Ujjain, held that Ujjain Court had no jurisdiction. Aggrieved with this order, the plaintiff has filed this revision.

(4) The judgment of the Small Causes Court, I regret to observe, is rather unsatisfactory. He has not referred to any provision of the Civil Procedure Code, which in his opinion governed the case or to the question whether there was any agreement between the parties. The unsystematic approach to the whole question by the Court below has given rise to different kinds of argument at the Bar which will have to be referred to briefly. It is well settled law now, that the question of jurisdiction is to be determined with reference to the allegations in the plaint and not with reference to pleas. The basis of the suit, according to the plaint, does not appear to have been any agreement between the parties that the watch will be returned to Ujjain after repairs. The letter of the plaintiff referred to above was, firstly, not an offer. There was neither offer nor acceptance and there was no contract between the parties for repairs of the watch or for the return of watch to Ujjain. Secondly, even if the plaintiff's letter referred to above be regarded as an offer, (which it was not) then an offer must be deemed to have been made at the place where it was received and not at the place from which it was sent. — 'Ahmad Bux v. Fazal Karim', ILR (1940) Mad. 195; — 'Ratanlal v. Harcharanlal', ILR (1947) All. 44; — 'Manilal v. Venkatachalapathi Iyer', AIR 1943 Mad. 471; — 'Arthur Butlar Co. Ltd. v. Dist. Board of Gaya', 25 Pat. 292 and — 'Dhanraj Mills Ltd. Libitity Co. v. Narsingh Prasad', 27 Pat. 723. Section 4 of the Indian Contract Act is clear on this point.

(5) Mr. Vyas contends that the letter was sent from Ujjain and the cause of action in part arose at Ujjain within the meaning of Section 20(c) C.P. Code. In my opinion the mere fact that the plaintiff posted a letter at Ujjain and sent the parcel from Ujjain would be no part of cause of action because there could be no proposal till it came to the knowledge of the person to whom the proposal was made. If a person travelling in a car or a train gets down at one place to post a letter and despatches the parcel from a Post Office in the way; can it be said that the place where the letter and parcel were posted had anything to do with any part of the cause of action? The Post Office is only the agent of the sender of the letter and the parcel and not the agent of the addressee. The offer thus, takes place where it is communicated to the other party.

(6) Thirdly, even if, it be assumed that the watch was received by the defendant at Bombay and repairs were carried out the cause of action will arise in Bombay. Where an order for work is sent by post and without formal acceptance the work is carried out in the district where the order is received the whole cause of action arises in the latter district, (Halsbury, Second Edition, Vol. 8, page 191).

(7) Fourthly, the wrist watch was entrusted to the care of the defendant at Bombay and could have been obtained from the defendant there. There is no allegation in the plaint that either expressly, or by implication the defendants had agreed either to repair the watch, or to send it to Ujjain.

(8) Fifthly, if a person wrongfully converts goods and receives the amount, the owner of the goods may either sue in tort or may waive the tort, and recover the proceeds in an action for money had and received, — 'Thorappa Devanappa v. Ummedmalji', 25 Bom. L.R. 604; 87 Ind. Cas. 226; AIR 1924 Bom. 205. This latter action is based on an implied contract of agency, the defendant being fictitiously assumed to have rightfully received the money as the plaintiff's agent, and to have failed to pay it over to his principal, — 'Brockle Bank Ltd. v. R.', (1925) 1 K.B. 52. But, where the plaintiff does not so elect, his suit will be taken to be in tort and the jurisdiction will be determined by Section 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure, — 'Mulsing Dawlatram Firm v. Fatechand Anrai', AIR 1933 Sind 229.

(9) In fact, the allegations in the plaint in this case do not state a cause of action in contract but the gravamen of the complaint is definitely a tort. Where there is no contractual relation, either express or implied, alleged in the plaint, an action of tort has to be assumed. In this connection I may usefully refer to Corpus Juris, Vol. I page 1020 where illustration 2 (under foot note 18) runs as follows.

"Where property has been converted, but the pleadings do not show that it has been converted into money, a suit to recover the value of property is an action ex delicto and not ex contractu."

(10) On page 1019, it is mentioned:

"Actions in tort include an action to recover damages for a conversion ..... and generally, wherever it appears that the object of the action is to recover damages for a tortious act on the part of the defendant, or that, although either form of action might be maintained, the gist of the action is a wrong or breach of duty imposed by law, as distinguished from a mere breach of contract."

(11) Now, so far as the suit is one in tort and the provisions of Section 19 C.P. Code apply, in my opinion, the conclusion arrived at by the learned Small Causes Court is right. Section 20 C.P. Code is subject to the limitation of Section 19. The opening words of Section 20 are: "Subject to the limitation aforesaid", and, section 19 reads as follows:

"Where a suit is for compensation for wrong done to the person or to moveable property, if the wrong was done within the local limits of the jurisdiction of one Court and the defendant resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of another Court, the suit may be instituted at the option of the plaintiff in either of the said courts."

(12) The allegations in the plaint are that the wrong to the wrist watch was done at Bombay and the defendant also carries on business there and in the circumstances of this case, I am clear in my mind that the Ujjain Court had no jurisdiction.

(13) I, therefore, dismiss the revision with costs.

ORDER: A suit was instituted by the plaintiffs, on behalf of Sakal Alya Panch Khargone, against the defendant applicants, for the possession of a temple. The allegation is that the temple of Ramjee belongs to the Panchas, and after the death of Mahant Shri Kuberdas, the Panchas appointed defendant No. 1 as the Pujari. Defendant No. 2 is the brother of defendant No. 1. The plaintiff stated that the duty of defendant No. 1 was to arrange the Puja, to manage the temple and to take the offerings. Due to mismanagement of the temple, the Panchas desired to appoint a new Pujari; but defendants No. 1 and 2 did not leave the temple and hence the suit is instituted. The plaintiffs valued the relief of possession at Rs. 100/- and 5 rupees was the valuation put for purposes of injunction and they paid Court fee of Rs. 8/14/0. The trial Court held that the subject matter of the suit is not capable of money valuation and, therefore, the Court fee ought to be levied under Schedule II Art. 17 (VI) of the Court fees Act and the plaintiffs were ordered to pay Rs. 15/-.

(2) Against this order the defendant has come up to this Court and wants me to revise it. The first question that arises is: Whether such a revision is entertainable?

(3) Their Lordships of the Privy Council in — Rachappa Subrao v. Shidappa Venkat Rao, 43 Bom. 507: 46 Ind App 24: AIR 1918 P.C. 188 had observed:

"The Court-fees Act was passed not to arm a litigant with a weapon of technicality against his opponent, but to secure revenue for the benefit of the State. This is evident from the character of the Act, and is brought out by Section 12, which makes the decision of the first Court as to value final as between the parties, and enables a Court of appeal to correct any error as to this, only where the first Court decided to the detriment of the revenue."

(4) Their Lordships refused to allow a defendant to utilise the provisions of the Act to obstruct his opponent, and refused to entertain his objection raised for the first time in appeal, that the Court had no jurisdiction to proceed upon an insufficiently stamped plaint. An inference was rightly drawn from this by the Full Bench of the Nagpur High Court in — Balaji Dhumnaji v. Mukta Bai, ILR (1938) Nag. 106: AIR 1938 Nag. 122 (FB) that a question about the sufficiency or otherwise of Court-fee is only a side-issue. It is not inter parties and does not invalidate a decision simply because the plaint or the Memorandum of appeal was under-stamped.

(5) After discussing the case-law on the point the Full Bench of the Nagpur High Court came to the conclusion that if the effect of the order of the Court demanding additional Court fee is a refusal to proceed to trial at all, it must be regarded as an irregularity which affects either jurisdiction or procedure within the meaning of clause (c) of Section 115 C.P. Code; and inasmuch as it is only merely incidental and interlocutory but finally and effectively shuts the plaintiff out from all hope of redress in the suit itself, the error must be regarded as material.

The Full Bench, therefore, held that an order demanding additional court-fees is always revisable, but at the same time this opinion was also expressed that an order accepting the Court-fees paid is not revisable because, then there is no refusal to proceed with the trial (or the appeal) and because their Lordships of the Judicial Committee had observed in — Rachappa Subrao v. Shidappa Venkat Rao, 43 Bom. 507 (PC) at p. 518 "Jurisdiction is not then affected nor is the other side damnified."

A different view was taken in — 'Hiralalsa v. Rambhau', AIR 1946 Nag 160 by a Judge sitting on a Single Bench but this was not followed in later decisions vide — 'Manoharsingh v. Parmeshari', AIR 1949 Nag. 211 which adhered to the Full Bench ruling.

(6) A similar view was taken by a Full Bench of the Patna High Court in — 'Ramkhelavan Sahu v. Surendra Sahi', 16 Pat. 766: AIR 1938 Pat. 22: 172 Ind. Cas. 840 (FB), where it was held that in deciding the question of Court-fees, the Court decides an issue between the plaintiff and the Crown and the defendant is not a party to the dispute; that the defendant has a remedy should the decision on merits be against him, in bringing the matter of the Court-fee to the notice of the appellate Court under section 12 Court-fees Act; and lastly that as between the plaintiff and the defendant the trial Court has not refused to exercise its jurisdiction to decide the case on the merits.

(7) The Calcutta High Court in — 'Rabindra Nath v. Girendra Mohan', AIR 1941 Cal. 518: 73 Cal. LJ 240: 196 Ind. Cas. 762, expressed dissent from the above view and observed that the question, whether the suit falls within a particular category under S. 7 or whether it comes under one or the other schedule of the Court-fees Act cannot be regarded as merely one between the plaintiff and the Crown, for it may affect the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit and that is a matter in which the defendant is certainly interested. It was therefore held that the decision on a question as to proper classification of a suit, that is, whether an ad valorem fee or fixed fee is payable on the plaint, is open to revision under Section 115 C. P. Code.

With due respect to the learned Judges who decided this case as well as — 'Kanaklata Dasi v. Ramgopal', AIR 1941 Cal. 509, I have not been able to understand the basis which led them to differentiate between a question of valuation and a question relating to classification. In my opinion, the reasoning in the two rulings is obscure as a question of valuation involves generally, though not necessarily, a question relating to classification. In — 'S. Mazahir Hussein v. Anjuman Islamia', AIR 1947 All. 404 a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court came to the conclusion that a defendant has no locus standi under Section 6A (U.P. Court-fees Act) to challenge the order, calling upon the plaintiff to make good the deficiency in Court fee by objecting that the amount of Court-fee ordered to be paid is not sufficient.

Though I agree with the conclusion, I respectfully disagree with the reasoning that an order demanding additional Court-fee does not amount to a "case decided" within the meaning of Section 115 C.P. Code. This decision is based upon two old Full Bench rulings reported in — 'Gupta & Co. v. Kriparam Bros.' 57 All. 17: AIR 1934 All 620 (FB) and in — 'Mt. Surajpali v. Arya Pritinidhi Sabha', ILR (1937) All. 17: AIR 1936 All. 686 (FB). The changes in the Court-fees Act subsequent to these Full Bench rulings, have entirely been overlooked. In my decision, in a case at Gwalior — 'Chinkubai v. Jaisingh', Civil Revn. No. 75 of 1951, I have dissented from the observations of this Division Bench, and I have agreed to the modern view and to the view taken by Waliullah J. in — 'Hafiz Mahomed v. Chief Inspector of Stamps, U.P.', AIR 1947 All. 340.

(8) So far as the defendant's application in revision is concerned, in my opinion, the position has very succinctly been summed up by Panchapakesa Aiyer J. in — 'Subrahmanyam v. Lakshmi Narayanamma', AIR 1949 Mad. 415 where it has been held that if a matter affects Court-fee alone, which is one purely between the Government and the plaintiff, no revision petition might lie at the instance of the defendant, but when it involves a question of jurisdiction of the lower Court also, the defendant is clearly interested in the matter, as his right of appeal would be affected; and only in that case a revision would lie. With respect I concur in this view.

(9) In the present case, as no question of jurisdiction of the Court below is involved, the revision petition cannot be held to be competent and it must fail. I might however add that even if the revision was competent, I do not think, I would have differed from the view taken by the lower Court, as the property of a temple belongs primarily to the deity and falls within the category of res extra commercium. Even as a house, it has no market value within the terms of S. 7 Clause (V) (e) and a suit for recovery of possession of it for the purpose of managing it and conducting its worship falls under Article 17(6) of Schedule 2. It makes no difference as to the marketability of the temple whether it is public or private. The principles enunciated in — 'Rajagopala Naidu v. Rama Subramania Aiyar', 46 Mad. 782: AIR 1924 Mad. 19 (FB) and in — 'Motilal Shioji Ram v. Shambhoolal Ganpatlal', AIR 1938 Nag. 481: 178 Ind. Cas. 97 fully apply to the facts of the case.

(10) For reasons stated above, I dismiss the revision with costs.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 438 and 497 (5) — Anticipatory bail — Grant of — Power of Sessions Judge to cancel — Reference to High Court — Competency — Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act (1946).

Where the Sessions Judge thinks that the order of bail passed by the Sub Divisional Magistrate in anticipation of arrest for an offence under the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act is illegal or improper, the Sessions Judge himself has the power under Section 497 (5), Criminal P. C. to cancel the bail and it is wholly unnecessary for him to make a reference to High Court for cancellation of the bail. The provisions in the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act with regard to bail do not in any way affect the discretion vested in the Sessions Judge under S. 497 (5) in the matter of cancellation of bail. ORDER: This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Gwalior recommending that an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate Antari granting anticipatory bail to Kesarimal who apprehends arrest for an offence under the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, be set aside.

(2) This reference must be rejected on the ground that, if the learned Sessions Judge thinks that the order of bail passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was illegal or improper, the Sessions Judge himself has the power under S. 497 (5) of the Criminal P. C. to cancel the bail. The provisions in the Essential Supplies Temporary Powers Act with regard to bail do not in any way affect the discretion vested in the Sessions Judge under S. 497 (5) in the matter of cancellation of bail. That being so, it seems to me that it was wholly unnecessary for the Sessions Judge to make this reference to this court for passing an order with regard to the cancellation of bail. The Sessions Judge is at liberty to cancel the bail, if he is so inclined.

(3) The reference is accordingly rejected.

ORDER: This is a revision filed by the defendant in a suit instituted in the Court of Civil Judge, First Class, Morena, against him by the plaintiff Mills. It appears that the plaintiff's firm was not registered when the suit was instituted but was registered after the presentation of the plaint in Morena Court. The defendant applicant resisted the suit on the ground that the suit was not maintainable; but the plea of the plaintiff was that this subsequent registration of the partnership was enough to enable the plaintiff to maintain the suit, notwithstanding the provisions of S. 69(2), Partnership Act. The Court upheld the plaintiff's plea observing that S. 69(2) had no application in this case and relying on — 'Nazir Ahmed v. People's Bank of North India Ltd.', AIR 1942 Lah 289 (FB) held that subsequent registration validated proceedings. The defendant has come to this court and desires me to revise this order.

(2) There is no doubt that in Full Bench case of — 'Nazir Ahmed v. People's Bank of North India Ltd.', ILR (1942) Lah 517: AIR 1942 Lah 289 (FB) and also in three other cases viz.; — 'Jakiuddin v. Vithoba', AIR 1939 Nag 301: 186 Ind. Cas. 670; — 'Radha Charan v. Matilal', 41 Cal W N 534 and — 'Varadarajulu Naidu v. Rajamanika Mudaliar', AIR 1937 Mad 767: 1937-2 Mad L J 273 the view that prevailed was in favour of the plaintiff non-applicant. It was held that subsequent registration cured the defect and the suit was maintainable. On the other hand, in — 'Subramania Mudaliar v. East Asiatic Co. Ltd.', AIR 1936 Mad 991, in — 'Ibrahim Saheb and Brother v. Gurulinga Aiyer', AIR 1938 Mad 185; in — 'Girdharilal Son & Co. v. Kappini Gowder', AIR 1938 Mad 688 it was held that subsequent registration did not remedy the defect. The views of the Patna High Court — 'Laluram Sagarmal Firm v. Jamuna Prasad', 18 Pat 114, the Allahabad High Court — 'Danmal Parshotam Das v. Babu Ram Chhote Lal', 58 All 495 and the Lahore High Court — 'Krishen Lal Ram Lal v. Abdul Ghafur Khan', 17 Lah 275 were also to this effect.

(3) The terms of S. 69 (2), Partnership Act may be reproduced here for reference and they are:

"No suit to enforce the right arising from a contract shall be instituted in any court by or on behalf of a firm against any third party unless the firm is registered and the persons suing are or have been shown in the Register of Firms as partners of the firm."

(4) A plain reading of the terms above, without anything more, shows clearly that unless the firm is registered, the institution of the suit on its behalf to enforce a right arising from a contract will be barred.

(5) The entire case law was reviewed in — 'Ponnuchami Goundar v. Muthusami Goundar', ILR (1942) Mad 355; AIR 1942 Mad 252 and the learned Judges of the Madras High Court came to the conclusion that the registration of a firm is a condition precedent to its right to institute a suit and a Court cannot proceed with a trial of a suit when the condition precedent has not been fulfilled. They further added that the great weight of authority was also in favour of the opinion that subsequent registration would not put the suit on a proper basis and that the Court's duty was to dismiss it. The learned Judges also relied on — 'Bhag Chand Dagadusa v. Secy. of State', 54 Ind. App. 338; AIR 1927 P. C. 176, where S. 80, Civil Procedure Code has been considered by the Judicial Committee and the provisions thereof had been held to be explicit and mandatory.

The learned Judges observed that S. 69, Partnership Act had very much in common with S. 80, Civil Procedure Code and on the basis of the Privy Council decision came to the conclusion that subsequent registration could not cure the initial defect and validate the institution of a suit. This view has since then been followed by various High Courts. The Bombay High Court in — 'Prithvi Singh v. Hasan Alli', ILR (1951) Bom 101; AIR 1951 Bom 6: 52 Bom L R 862 and the Nagpur High Court in — 'Abdul Karim v. Ram Das Narayan Das', ILR (1951) Nag 81; AIR 1951 Nag 159; 1950 Nag L J 554 have adopted this view. In my opinion these latter cases have laid down the correct position in law and I respectfully concur with them.

(6) It is then contended that even if S. 69 (2), Partnership Act applies the right of the plaintiff to sue in the present case is saved by S. 73 of the Madhya Bharat Partnership Act 'Samvat' 2006 (Act No. 67 of 'Samvat' 2006) which in terms is identically the same as S. 74 of the Indian Partnership Act and the portion material to this case runs as follows:

"Nothing in this Act shall affect or be deemed to affect

(a) any right, title, interest, obligation, or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred before the commencement of this Act, or

(b) any legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, title, interest, obligation or liability, or

(c) anything done or suffered before the commencement of this Act; or

(e) any rule of law not inconsistent with this Act."

(7) In this connection, it will be useful to refer to the following facts:

(3) The Madhya Bharat Partnership Act came into force on 7-11-49, and according to clause (3) of S. 1 of the Act, S. 69 came into force on 17-12-49 (vide Madhya Bharat Government Gazette dated 17-12-1949 Part 2, page 189). According to the plaint, the defendant purchased goods from the plaintiffs on 26-11-1949 and asked the plaintiffs to send goods to Surendra Nagar within two days. The plaintiffs despatched the goods on 28-11-49 according to the advice and informed the defendant accordingly. There are certain other things alleged in the plaint e.g., that the defendant subsequently desired that the goods should be sent to Ahmedabad and not to Surendra Nagar, that the goods reached Surendra Nagar and could not be detained at Ahmedabad.

The defendant then did not take delivery and on 16-12-49 informed the plaintiffs, who sold the goods at a loss on 18-12-1949. The plaint mentions that the goods which were sold to the defendant were worth Rs. 16,771-2-0 that the plaintiffs spent Rs. 243-6-9 in sending people to Ujjain and Ahmedabad and that the goods sold by them at Surendra Nagar fetched only Rs. 10,569-9-9 and they had to suffer a loss of Rs. 6,444-12-3. Adding interest and notice charges the plaintiff instituted a suit for Rs. 6500/- against the defendant on 28-1-1950. According to the plaint, therefore, the contract was concluded on 28-11-49, when according to the order of the defendant, goods were despatched to Surendra Nagar and the invoice and the Hundi about the value of goods were also sent to the United Commercial Bank Ltd, at Ahmedabad.

The defendant asked the said Bank to present the Hundi after four or five days and then after that period refused to accept it. The plaintiff also received a wire from the defendant on 11-12-49 informing the plaintiff that the defendant would not take delivery of the goods. It will be apparent that the plaintiff's right to recover the value of goods from the defendant had accrued on 28-11-49 when the contract had concluded or on 11-12-49 when the defendant had refused to take delivery of goods. In my opinion 'Right' in S. 74 of the Indian Partnership Act means 'substantive rights' and not merely 'right to sue'. It should not be confined to 'cause of action'. In any case, the rights of the plaintiff had accrued after the enactment of the Madhya Bharat Partnership Act, but before S. 69 could come into force.

(9) The questions that arise for determination are: Can S. 69 (2) take away those rights of the plaintiff which had accrued to him before the said section came into force? Does not S. 73 of the Madhya Bharat Partnership Act (S. 74 of the Indian Partnership Act) save those rights?

(10) It may be noted here that the Indian Partnership Act, except S. 69, had come into force in India on 1st October 1932 and S. 69 came into force a year later i.e., on 1st October 1933. The main question that was canvassed in — Girdhari Lal Son and Co. v. K. Gowder, AIR 1933 Mad 688: 119 Ind Cas. 16: 1938-2 Mad L.J. 11 was, whether S. 69 (2) relates to mere matter of procedure and can be given retrospective effect? Venkataramana Rao, J. was of opinion that S. 69 (2) belongs to the law of procedure and an enactment altering the procedure is always held to be retrospective even where the alteration tends to the disadvantage of one of the parties. It was further observed by the learned Judge that the language of S. 69 (2) is very general and will apply to all suits arising from contracts whether entered into before the passing of the Act or not. His Lordship also added that the postponement of the operation of the section may fairly be taken as an indication of the intention of the Legislature to give retrospective action to the section and that S. 74 (b) does not go to save this retrospective operation.

Pandurang Rao J. differed from this view and held that S. 69 (2) cannot be said to relate to mere matter of procedure, for, it requires something to be done, viz., registration 'de hors' the court. Section 69 (2) cannot be given retrospective effect particularly in view of S. 74 (b). His Lordship further observed: (and I respectfully agree with it), that the real test when deciding whether a particular provision of law is to be given retrospective effect or not, is not whether the law is a law of procedure or substantive law, but whether the law in question affects or impairs existing rights including rights of action which are substantive rights. Where existing rights would be adversely affected, Courts decline to give retrospective effect unless compelled thereto by the words of the Statute.

(11) The matter was then referred to Varadachariar J. who agreed with Justice Pandurang Rao and held that S. 74 (b) saves the 'remedy' in respect of any right acquired or accrued prior to 1st October 1932 from the bar of S. 69 (2). On the question whether S. 69 (2) relates to law of procedure, his Lordship on pages 704-5 observed as follows:

"In this connection it is necessary to consider the purpose and effect of the provision in S. 69. If it had such unintegral connexion with the subject-matter of the proposed suit as in some way to make the step required by it a step in the litigation, I should have been inclined to accept the argument that it related to a matter of procedure. But it is obvious that that was not its purpose. In a case for instance of a 'Patta' being delivered or a notice being given or a bill being tendered by a solicitor, it is clear that the condition intimately bears upon the subject-matter of the suit to follow. The object however of S. 69 was to make sure that the general policy of the Legislature that all partnerships should be registered will be carried out.

It is true that occasionally questions may arise in a suit as to who are the partners of a particular firm; but that cannot justify my ignoring the real purpose of the provision in S. 69. As pointed out by Sir Dinshaw Mulla, the object of this provision was to bring pressure to bear on partners to have the firm and themselves registered. This policy has been attempted to be enforced in various ways in different systems. In the English Legislation, S. 7 of Registration of Business Names

Act of 1916 imposes a penalty upon partners making default in the matter of registration. Such a provision certainly cannot be described as a processual provision."

(12) I may pause here to mention that other High Courts did not share this view on the other grounds and there has been a conflict of opinion on this point.

(13) A contrary view was held by the Calcutta High Court in — Surendra Nath v. Monohar, 62 Cal 213: AIR 1934 Cal 754: 39 Cal W N 67, wherein it was observed that S. 74 would go to indicate that the intention of the Legislature was to bring S. 69 into operation against the firms, if they do not register themselves, or if they do not take proceedings respecting antecedent matters within a year from the date of the commencement of the Act. Section 74 (b), therefore, said the learned Judges, did not save litigation started after 1st October 1933. This ruling was followed by the Patna High Court in — Shazad Khan v. Darbar Babu Kuchhi, 15 Pat 310: AIR 1937 Pat 16, wherein it was held that S. 74 (b) of the Act saves only pending suits. Mr. Motilal Gupta places reliance on these rulings.

(14) In — Dhanmal Parshotam Das v. Babu Ram Chhote Lal, 58 All 495: AIR 1936 All 3, Justice Bennet followed — Surendra Nath v. Monohar, 62 Cal 213 but Sulaiman C. J. differed from him. The Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court in — Soonoiram Ramniranjan Das v. Junjilal, AIR 1932 Rang 273 (FB) supported the views of Sulaiman C. J. In — Revappa Nandappa v. Babu Siddappa, AIR 1939 Bom 61, Beaumont C. J. delivering the judgment of the Division Bench, and, commenting on the Calcutta case, observed as follows:

"In '62 Cal 213', which the learned Judge in lower Court followed, a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that S. 74 did not take out of the operation of S. 69, a suit to enforce a right accrued before S. 69 came into operation. The Court took the view that inasmuch as the Legislature had postponed the operation of S. 69 for a year they must have intended the section to have retrospective effect when it came into operation. I agree that one may feel a doubt as to whether the Legislature really intended S. 74 to operate to save a suit which was barred by S. 69. It certainly looks as if the Legislature had intended to give unregistered firm one year in which to effect registration and one would have expected that if they did not avail themselves of the opportunity given to them they would have to suffer the consequences.

But, in my opinion, where the words of a section in a Statute are plain the court must give effect to them, and is not justified in depriving the words of their only proper meaning in order to give effect to some intention which the court imputes to the Legislature from other provisions of the Act. Such a course can only be justified where a literal construction of the section is inconsistent with the meaning of the Statute as a whole, and in my opinion no such case exists here."

(15) In — Ram Gopal Srinivas v. Net Ram, AIR 1941 All 178: ILR (1941) All 311: 1941 All L.J. 107 a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court followed Sulaiman's views and disapproved those of Bennet J. expressed in — Danmal Parshotam Das v. Babu Ram Chhote

Lal', 58 All 495: AIR 1936 All 3. The Division Bench held that S. 74 (b) relates to those legal proceedings or remedies which were open to a party in respect of any right, title, interest, obligation or liability which had already been acquired, accrued or incurred before the commencement of the Act and that section does not limit the exemption from the operation of S. 69 only to pending proceedings. I may say that I am in respectful concurrence with these views.

(16) If, then, S. 69 (2) cannot be held to have retrospective operation, it ought to be held that S. 73 saves not only the rights but also the suits to enforce those rights. It not only saves the rights which accrued before the commencement of the Partnership Act but also those rights which accrued before the date when S. 69 came into force. In — 'Lokram Das Chatomal Firm v. Tharumal', ILR (1939) Kar 765: AIR 1939 Sind 206 a suit by an unregistered firm for rent due upto October 1933 was held to have been saved by section 74. A similar view was adopted by the Nagpur High Court in — 'Hiralal Gulab Chand Shop v. Amar chand Kisanlal Shop', ILR (1940) Nag 170: AIR 1940 Nag 137 wherein it was held that where part of the suit related to a cause of action which arose after the Partnership Act came into force but before S. 69 came into operation the whole suit is taken out of operation of S. 69 by S. 74 of the Partnership Act. In — 'Gurdinomal Chandumal v. Usto Muhammad Hayat', AIR 1943 Sind 26: ILR (1942) Kar 442 also it was laid down that S. 74 of the Indian Partnership Act saves those rights which accrued before 1st October 1933 i.e., before the date when S. 69 came into force.

(17) Keeping in mind the great weight of authority and agreeing with the principle enunciated in these rulings, I hold that S. 73 of the Madhya Bharat Partnership Act saves those rights which were acquired or had accrued prior to the coming into force of S. 69 and that S. 73 saves all legal proceedings or remedies in respect of such rights. In this view of the matter the suit in the Court below was maintainable and I dismiss the revision with costs. A/V.R.B. Revision dismissed.

Constitution of India, Art. 133 (1) — "Final order" and "decree" — Meaning of — (Civil P. C. (1908) Ss. 2 (2), 109).

After the sale of the mortgaged property, the decree-holder applied to the executing Court for the sale of a house and a shop situated in Sarafa Lashkar alleging that the decree in his favour contained a direction that if the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property were insufficient to satisfy the decree, the deficient amount shall be realisable from the house and shop in Sarafa Lashkar and that the decree had remained unsatisfied even after the sale of the mortgaged property. When a proclamation of the sale of the property situated in Sarafa Lashkar was issued, the applicant came forward and objected to the sale claiming that he was a bona fide purchaser of the property in Sarafa Lashkar from the judgment-debtor; that the decree did not create a charge on the property and consequently it was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree. The court executing the decree rejected the applicant's contention that no charge was created by the decree against the property situated in Sarafa Lashkar. The applicant then came up in appeal to the High Court. The appeal was rejected by the High Court. The High Court held that the decree created a charge on the property situated in Sarafa and directed the executing court to decide the other objections of the applicant, namely, that the charge was not enforceable against him as he was a bona fide transferee for value without notice of the charge and the objection that as the sale proceeds of the mortgaged property were sufficient to satisfy the decree, the contingency contemplated in the decree for enforcing the charge had not arisen.

Held that the order which was passed by the High Court was on the face of it, not a final order. The order did not put an end to all the points in dispute between the parties about the sale of the property. The order was not also a decree and consequently the leave to appeal could not be given. DIXIT J.: This is an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from an order of a Division Bench of this Court dated 9-7-51, passed in an appeal arising out of execution proceedings of a mortgage-decree. After the sale of the mortgaged property, the decree-holder applied to the executing Court for the sale of a house and a shop situated in Sarafa Lashkar alleging that the decree in his favour contained a direction that if the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property were insufficient to satisfy the decree, the deficient amount shall be realisable from the house and shop in Sarafa Lashkar and that the decree has remained unsatisfied even after the sale of the mortgaged property. When a proclamation of the sale of the property situated in Sarafa Lashkar was issued, the applicant came forward and objected to the sale claiming that he was a bona fide purchaser of the property in Sarafa Lashkar from the judgment-debtor; that the decree did not create a charge on the property and consequently it was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree.

The Court executing the decree rejected the applicant's contention that no charge was created by the decree against the property situated in Sarafa Lashkar. The applicant then came up in appeal to this Court. The appeal was rejected by this Court. We held that the decree created a charge on the property situated in Sarafa and directed the executing court to decide the other objections of the applicant, namely, that the charge was not enforceable against him as he was a bona fide transferee for value without notice of the charge and the objection that as the sale proceeds of the mortgaged property were sufficient to satisfy the decree, the contingency contemplated in the decree for enforcing the charge had not arisen.

(2) We have heard Mr. Shiv Dayal in support of this application and in our opinion, it must be rejected. The applicant seeks leave to appeal under Article 133 of the Constitution of India. Sub-clause 1 of this Article states that an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court from any judgment, decree or final order in a civil proceeding of a High Court in the territory of India, if the High Court gives the certificate of the nature indicated in that sub-clause. The order which was passed by this Court on 9-7-51 is on the face of it, not a final order. While holding that the decree created a charge, this Court directed the executing Court to determine the other objections of the applicant as regards the enforceability of the charge and thus decide the question whether the property situated in Sarafa Lashkar could or could not be sold in execution of the decree. Our order did not put an end to all the points in dispute between the parties about the sale of the property. It was, therefore, not a final order. The question as to what is a "final order" for the purposes of section 109 C. P. C. and section 205 of the Government of India Act, 1935, has been considered in a number of cases. In — 'Mohammad Amin Brothers Ltd. v. Dominion of India', AIR 1950 F C 77, the Federal Court observed:

"The expression 'final order' in section 205, Government of India Act, has been used in contradistinction to what is known as 'interlocutory order' and the essential test to distinguish the one from the other has been discussed and formulated in several cases decided by the Judicial Committee. All the relevant authorities bearing on the question have been reviewed by this Court in their recent pronouncement in — 'S. Kuppuswami Rao v. The King', 1947 F.C.R. 180; A I R 1949 FC 1: 49 Cri L J 625 and the law on the point, so far as the Court is concerned, seems to be well settled. In full agreement with the decision of the Judicial Committee in — 'Firm Ram Chandra Manjimal v. Firm Govardhan Das Vishidas', 47 Ind App 124: AIR 1920 PC 86 and — 'Abdul Rahman v. D. K. Cassim and Sons', 60 Ind App 76: AIR 1933 PC 58, & the authorities of the English Courts upon which the pronouncements were based, it has been held by this court that the test for determining the finality of an order is whether the judgment or order finally disposed of the rights of the parties. To quote the language of Sir George Lownes in — 'Abdul Rahman v. D. K. Cassim and Sons', 60 Ind App 76: AIR 1933 PC 58 the finality must be a finality in relation to the suit. If after the order, the suit is still a live suit in which the rights of the parties have still to be determined, no appeal lies against it. The fact that the order decides an important and even a vital issue is, by itself, not material. If the decision on an issue puts an end to the suit, the order will undoubtedly be a final one, but if the suit is still left alive and has got to be tried in the ordinary way, no finality could attach to the order."

These observations apply with equal force in the construction of the expression 'final order' as used in Article 133. Very recently, the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Assam considered the meaning of the words 'final order' for the purposes of Article 133 and following the Federal Court decision reported in — 'AIR 1950 FC 77' held that the finality of the order under Article 133 must be in relation to the suit, that is, it must put an end to the suit altogether. An order of remand cannot be described as a final order and, therefore no appeal lies from it to the Supreme Court under Article 133. The Calcutta case — 'Chandra Singh v. Midnapore Zamindari Co. Ltd.', AIR 1951 Cal 300, related to an order of remand in suit; but in — 'Sindhuram v. Krishna', A I R 1951 Assam 73, the Court held that an order deciding that an application for delivery of possession in execution of a decree for possession was not time-barred and remanding the case to the Court below for disposal of the application according to law was not a 'final order' within the meaning of Article 133. The decision reported in — 'Ramaswami Chettiar v. Official Receiver Ramanathapuram at Madurai', AIR 1951 Mad 1051 also lays down that if the High Court finds that the petition for execution of the decree was in time and remands the case to the subordinate Judge to take steps in furtherance of execution, then such an order is not a 'final order' from which leave to appeal can be granted under Article 133. It is unnecessary to dwell further on the question as the learned counsel for the applicant conceded before us that the order dated 9-7-51 of this Court was not a final order.

(3) The principal ground on which he sought leave to appeal was that the order passed by the Division Bench must be regarded as a "decree". In our opinion, there is no force in this contention. The expression "decree" as defined in section 2 (2) C. P. C. means the formal expression of an adjudication which so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit. It is clear from this definition that an order can be a 'decree' only if it conclusively determines the rights of the parties and not when it merely determines an incidental question. An interlocutory order in the course of execution proceedings which decides, for instance a point of law arising incidentally is not a decree within the meaning of section 2 (2) C. P. Code. The dispute between the parties in the present case was whether the property situated in Sarafa Lashkar could be sold in execution of the decree. The lower Court held that the decree created a charge. All that this Court held was that the executing Court was right in holding that the decree created a charge. But after the order dated 9-7-51 the questions whether the charge is enforceable and the property situated in Sarafa Lashkar can be sold are still to be determined. We, no doubt, decided an important and vital issue. But the question which was determined did not conclusively decide the rights of the parties with regard to the matter in controversy between them, namely, whether the property could be sold to realise the balance of the amount due on the decree. These rights can be said to be conclusively determined only when after hearing all the objections of the applicant the lower Court decides one way or the other about the decree-holder's petition to realise the balance of the amount due on the decree by the sale of the property situated in Sarafa Lashkar. The rights have not been conclusively determined so far. For these reasons, we have no hesitation in holding that the order dated 9-7-51 of this court is not a decree and consequently the leave to appeal cannot be given.

(4) The application is, therefore, rejected.

(5) CHATURVEDI J.: I agree.

Where a Court has drawn up a partition decree without the proper stamp, it should be deemed that there is definitely a decree but not a decree that can be acted upon until proper stamp is supplied, but the decree can be validated by the addition of the proper stamp and therefore it cannot be said that there is no decree at all in the sense that that decree is merely a piece of waste paper which cannot be validated by the addition of the stamp unless the presiding officer re-signs the decree after it is stamped. Therefore in a partition suit once a compromise decree is passed though it may be drawn up on plain paper, the litigation terminates and the case cannot be reopened. ORDER: This revision arises out of a partition suit which was filed by Madhava opponent No. 1 against his brother Parasram and his sons. Parasram is dead and his four sons are opponents Nos. 2 to 5. His fifth son Rajaram is the petitioner. Rajaram was a minor at the time of institution of the suit. A preliminary decree was passed by the Civil Judge 2nd Class Kasrawad. A Commissioner was appointed for the actual division of the property, but subsequently a compromise was arrived at between the parties and on the basis of this compromise a final decree was drawn up by the Court on plain papers and signed on 31-1-1952. In the executing Court certain objections were taken to this decree as it was not on stamp and the decree-holder took the decree back and made an application to the trial Court for drawing up of the decree on the stamp papers which were furnished.

The petitioner made an application to the Court that this procedure was wrong, that he had attained majority on the date of compromise but his consent was not taken in the matter; and he also alleged that his elder brother Jagannath had at that date no right to represent him before the Court and to seek leave for compromise which had been granted by the Court on the understanding that the petitioner was a minor. The petitioner maintained that the final decree in a partition suit comes within the definition of an "instrument of partition" in Section 2(15) of the Stamp Act and unless a properly stamped decree was drawn up, the suit for partition must still be considered pending. The Court below overruled the objections and ordered that the decree be drawn on stamp papers. Against this order the petitioner has come to this Court in revision.

(2) Learned counsel for the petitioner places reliance on — 'Jotindra Mohan v. Bejoy Chand', 32 Cal 483, where the Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court at page 491 observed:

"A decree to be operative must, under the Indian Stamp Act, be engrossed on paper as required by that Act, and, until the Judge signs the decree so engrossed it cannot be said that the suit had terminated."

(3) Their Lordships then added:

"Ordinarily the judgment contains the decision as to the rights of the parties and directs what the relief granted is. The decree, which follows, is merely the formal expression of an adjudication arrived at in the judgment. After the judgment is pronounced the parties are not required to do any act to enable the Court to frame and sign the decree and as provided in Section 205, C. P. Code, the decree has retrospective effect and bears the same date as the judgment. But where, as in a suit for partition, the parties are required by law to do a certain act, and the Court cannot frame its decree until such act is performed, the adjudication contained in the judgment does not decide the suit."

(4) In — 'Satyanandam v. Paramkusum Nammayya', AIR 1938 Mad 307, the principle was further elaborated by laying down that a final decree for partition has no existence as a decree until it is engrossed on proper non-judicial stamp paper. It was added that the decree and the proceedings taken thereunder cannot become validated with retrospective effect on the production of the proper non-judicial stamp. In — 'Muzaffar Husain v. Sharafat Husain', AIR 1933 Oudh 562 (S.B.), a Special Bench of the Oudh Chief Court following — 'Thiruvengadathan Aiyar v. Mangayya', 35 Mad 26 held that a decree passed on the basis of the compromise filed by the parties in a partition suit which has the effect of allotting specific portions of property to the parties is an "instrument of partition" within the meaning of Section 2(15) and must be stamped as required under Schedule 1, Article 45 of the Indian Stamp Act.

(5) On the basis of these rulings Mr. Joshi strenuously argues that the omission to write the decree on the stamped paper could not be condoned, and accordingly the final decree ought to have been taken to be non-existing on the date the application was made by the petitioner, and, that, under these circumstances, it was incumbent on the trial Court to have instituted an inquiry into the allegations of the petitioners and to have determined the question whether the petitioner was minor or major on the date when a compromise was arrived at by the parties in the case.

(6) The principle laid down in — Jotindra Mohan v. Bejoy Chand, 32 Cal 483, in my opinion, should be confined to the facts of that case. In that case a preliminary decree was drawn up and the order was passed confirming the report made by the Commissioner but a final decree was not drawn up. On the other hand, the Court had refused to draw up a final decree and all that their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court decided was that until a properly stamped decree was drawn up, the suit for partition must still be considered pending; and if a suit remains pending an order directing a party to be added can be made in such a case before it has actually terminated.

It will be seen that on facts that case can be distinguished from the present case where a final decree had been drawn up though on plain papers. Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court had not expressed any opinion on the point: where in a case a final decree is already drawn up on plain paper can it still be considered to be a pending litigation? This question had been raised in — Gopi Mal v. Vidya Wanti, ILR (1942) Lah 307; AIR 1942 Lahore 260 (FB) and the Full Bench of the Punjab High Court after discussing the case-law on the point and on the basis of the principle enunciated by the Privy Council in — Ma Pwa May v. Chettiar Firm, 56 Ind. App. 379; 7 Rang 624; AIR 1929 P. C. 279 came to the conclusion that where a Court has drawn up a partition decree without the proper stamp there is no lack of inherent jurisdiction, though there might be an irregularity or illegality in the exercise of jurisdiction and therefore it cannot be said that there is no decree in existence at all.

The Full Bench therefore held that in such case it should be deemed that there is definitely a decree but not a decree that can be acted upon until proper stamp is supplied, but the decree can be validated by the addition of the proper stamp and therefore it cannot be said that there is no decree at all in the sense that that decree is merely a piece of waste paper which cannot be validated by the addition of the stamp unless the presiding officer re-signs the decree after it is stamped. With the greatest respect I concur in this view; as after all drawing up of a final decree on plain papers is only an error of procedure which can afterwards be rectified.

(7) The attention of their Lordships of the Madras High Court in — Satyanandam v. Paramkusum Nammayya, AIR 1938 Mad 307 does not seem to have been directed to this aspect of the question or to the three rulings of the Calcutta High Court. In — Rafiuddin v. Latif Ahmed, 14 Cal W N 1101; 7 Ind. Cas. 94 a final decree for partition had been drawn up on a Court-fee stamp instead of a non-judicial stamp and it was not until the decree had been appealed from and was sought to be executed that the mistake was discovered. The Division Bench held that on the plaintiff's depositing a non-judicial stamp paper in the appellate Court and on the proper entries being made thereupon, the decree would be validated with retrospective effect from the date when it was drawn up. In giving their direction as to how the defect should be remedied the learned Judges said:

"We therefore direct the plaintiff petitioner to file a non-judicial stamp of the value of Rs. 100/- this will be defaced, and the cause title and names of the parties in the Court below will be written on it; it will then be attached to the decree as already drawn up. This, in our opinion, will be sufficient to validate the decree with retrospective effect from the date when it was drawn up on the principle explained by this Court in — Chhayunnessa Bibi v. Basirar Rahman, 37 Cal 399."

(8) The same principle was relied upon in — Jogesh Chandra v. Mohini Mohan, 38 Cal W N 1118; AIR 1935 Cal 125. Either on principle or on the weight of authority I cannot see my way to follow — Satyanandam v. Paramkusum Nammayya, AIR 1938 Mad 307 and with the greatest respect I dissent from the proposition enunciated in it. In my opinion once a compromise decree is passed though it may be drawn up on plain paper, the litigation terminates and the case cannot be re-opened. In this view of the matter the decision of the Court below does not warrant any interference. The petitioner can resort to remedies provided by law for assailing the decree in case he is disposed to do so. The revision fails and is dismissed with costs.

ORDER: This is a revision petition from an order of the Civil Judge Second Class, Ambah abating the applicant's right to the issue of summonses to his witnesses on the ground that the applicant had failed to accompany the process-server for the service of the summonses on the witnesses and directing the applicant to produce his witnesses in the Court on the next day of hearing and to pay Rs 4/- as adjournment costs to the non-applicant.

(2) The order of the trial Court is clearly illegal and in utter disregard of Order 16, Rule 1. I have had occasion to point out in — 'Panalwan Singh v. Mahadevi', Civil Revn. No. 148 of 1951, that there is no provision in the C. P. Code casting an obligation on the parties to accompany the process-server for having the summonses served on their witnesses. It is the duty of the process-server to serve the summonses and if he fails to do so, parties cannot be punished for his negligence. In the present case the summonses had been issued to the applicant's witnesses and the process-server returned them unserved with the remark that the applicant did not accompany him for effecting the service. In these circumstances, the trial Court was not justified in giving any adjournment costs to the non-applicant and directing the applicant to bring his witnesses with him on the next date of hearing.

(3) For the above reasons I accept this revision petition and set aside the order of the lower Court with the direction that the applicant's witnesses be summoned and the case be disposed of in accordance with law.

(4) I must observe that the revision petition No. 148 of 1951 was also from an order of the Civil Judge Second Class, Ambah and it appears to me that the learned Civil Judge has disregarded altogether the decision of this Court in that revision petition and passed the illegal order which is now under revision. The learned Civil Judge is warned that in future such flagrant disregard of the decision of this Court will not be lightly overlooked by this Court.

(5) In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs of this petition.

Criminal P.C. (1898) Ss. 342 and 439 — Nature of examination contemplated by section — Non-compliance of — Effect.

Under S. 342 Criminal P.C., a Magistrate is not competent to question the accused regarding any fact which does not appear in the prosecution evidence against him, and if he does, both the question and the answer to it must be disregarded.

(Para 3)

The accused were prosecuted for abducting one J on the night of 2-1-1951 with intent that she may be compelled to marry one G. The charge framed against them also mentioned 2-1-1951 as the date of the occurrence. The Magistrate while examining the accused under S. 342, Criminal P.C. put to each of the accused the following question: 'Whether he along with his companions forcibly removed J on 6-1-1951 from the house of K with intent to take her to L for compelling her to marry G.'

Each of the accused gave very general answers denying any knowledge and also denying that they removed J or were taking her to L. There was nothing in these answers to suggest that they were well aware of the fact that the Magistrate was really questioning them as regards the circumstances of the incident of 2nd

1953 M. B./7 & 8

January 1951 appearing in evidence against them and that their denial was about these circumstances:

Held that the question put to each of the accused did not relate to the alleged offence of 2-1-1951 and therefore it must be presumed that the accused were not examined at all as regards the circumstances connected with the offence of 2-1-1951. The accused were, therefore, prejudiced in their defence by the failure of the Magistrate to give them an opportunity to explain the circumstances appearing against them in the evidence with the result that the trial was vitiated: AIR 1951 SC 441 Applied.

Held further that as the investigation of the case was perfunctory and as the prosecution evidence was lacking in details no useful purpose would be served by ordering a retrial.

ORDER: The five applicants before me Nathudas, Harisingh Nirbhayasing, Nathudas s/o Tuisidas and Gopaldas have been convicted by the Additional District Magistrate of Mand-saur for an offence under Section 366, I. P. C. and sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment each. Their appeal against their convictions and sentences was dismissed by the Sessions Judge, Mand-saur. The accused persons have now preferred the petition to revise the decisions of the Courts below.

(2) Before me the conviction of the applicants is challenged on the ground that the examination of the accused persons under Section 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was contrary to law. It was said that the applicants were prosecuted for having abducted one Musamat Janibai aged 30 years on the night intervening between the 2nd of January and 3rd of January 1951 with intent that she may be compelled to marry one Gopaldas, and that the charge framed against the applicants also mentioned that the alleged incident took place on the night of 2nd January 1951; but that the Magistrate put to each of the accused the question viz., whether he along with his companions forcibly removed Janibai on 6th January 1951 from the house of Jagannath. It was argued that as the accused persons were never asked to explain the circumstances appearing in the prosecution evidence relating to the alleged incident on 2nd January 1951, they could not be convicted under S. 366, I. P. C. in respect of the incident of 2nd January 1951. The learned Government Advocate concedes, and it is also clear from the record that in the questions put by the Magistrate to the accused persons, the date of the occurrence has been mentioned as 6th January 1951. But it is contended by the learned Government Advocate that this is an error which has not caused any failure of justice and that in view of the provisions of Sections 225 and 547, Criminal Procedure Code, the convictions of the applicant cannot be set aside solely on the ground of this error.

(3) In my opinion, there is considerable justification in the criticism made by the learned counsel for the applicants that the accused persons had no opportunity of explaining the circumstances relating to the alleged offence of 2nd January 1951 with which they were charged.

The provisions of Section 342, Criminal P. C. are mandatory and under these provisions the Court must question the accused after the examination-in-chief, cross examination and re-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution, with a view to enable him to explain the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. Under sub-section (3) of Section 342 the answers given by the accused may be taken into consideration by the Court. The nature and importance of the examination of the accused under Section 342 of the Criminal P. C. has very recently been stressed by the Supreme Court in — 'Tarasingh v. State', AIR 1951 S. C. 441. It has been observed in that case that Section 342, Cr. P. Code requires that the accused should be examined for the purpose of enabling him "to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him" and that if the accused is not questioned at all and is not given an opportunity of explaining the circumstances which are intended to be used against him, then the judgment convicting him is defective. It has also been pointed out in that decision that every error or omission in the examination of the accused under section 342 would not necessarily vitiate the trial, unless by that error prejudice has been occasioned or is likely to have been occasioned to the accused.

It is thus clear that the Magistrate is not competent to question the accused regarding any fact which does not appear in the prosecution evidence against him, and if he does, both the question & the answer to it must be disregarded. In the present case the question that was put to each of the accused applicant was whether on 6th of January 1951, he along with other accused persons forcibly removed Janibai from the house of Jagannath with the intention of taking her to Lasudiya and compelling her to marry Gopaldas. This question on the face of it does not relate to the alleged offence of 2nd January 1951 about which the prosecution tendered evidence. The main question for determination in this case is whether if the reference to the date in the questions put by the Magistrate was an error, the applicants understood it to be so, and gave in fact explanations relating to the circumstances about the offence on 2nd January 1951 with which they were charged. This must be determined by the replies which the accused persons gave to the questions put to them in the examination under Section 342, Criminal Procedure Code. Each of the accused-applicants gave very general answers denying any knowledge and also denying that they removed Janibai or were taking her to Lasudiya. There is nothing in these answers to suggest that they were well aware of the fact that the Magistrate was really questioning them as regards the circumstances of the incident of 2nd January 1951 appearing in evidence against them and that their denial was about these circumstances. That being so, I think it must be presumed that the applicants were not examined at all as regards the circumstances connected with the alleged offence on 2nd January 1951, and that they have been prejudiced by failure of the Magistrate to give them an opportunity to explain the circumstances appearing in the prosecution evidence against them. The learned Sessions Judge has observed that by this error no prejudice has been caused to the applicants in their defence. In making this observation, I think the learned Judge has failed to conceive the possibility that the accused might have set up a plea of alibi in regard to the alleged occurrence on 2nd January 1951.

(4) The next question for consideration is whether a retrial of the accused persons should be directed. Counsel for the applicant maintains that in view of the fact that the applicants have already served 9 months' rigorous imprisonment and also of the fact that there are many serious defects in the prosecution case, it would not be in the interests of justice to direct a retrial of the applicants. I am inclined to agree with this submission. It appears to me on a careful consideration of the material on the record that the investigation in this case, has been so perfunctory and the evidence of Janibai and other prosecution witnesses is so lacking in details as to the specific acts of each of the accused persons and the intention with which she was alleged to have been abducted by them, that I do not think any useful purpose will be served by ordering a retrial.

(5) For the above reasons I accept the revision-petition and quash the convictions and sentences imposed upon the applicants. They shall be set at liberty forthwith.

A revision can be entertained touching the question relating to the onus of proof when it depends upon the correct framing of an issue. Case law discussed. (Para 6)

Per Dixit J.: As to the question in what cases the High Court should interfere in revision with an order of the trial court wrongly placing the onus of proof, it is clearly difficult to formulate any rigid rule. The order of the subordinate Court placing the onus of proof can be interfered in revision if the court in placing the burden of proof has acted illegally, or with material irregularity. SHINDE J.: This is a reference under section 29 of the High Court of Judicature Act. The learned Judge who made this reference has not specifically mentioned the points in his order of reference. But a perusal of the order shows that the following points have been referred to us: (1) Whether this court has jurisdiction to entertain revisions against interlocutory orders? (2) If the High Court has jurisdiction can a revision be entertained touching the question of onus of proof? Although until recently there had been a sharp difference of opinion with regard to the interpretation of the words 'case decided', the preponderance of opinion is now in favour of the liberal interpretation of the words 'case decided' used in section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. One group of High Courts like Allahabad, Lucknow, Sind and until recently Lahore favoured a more restricted interpretation of the word 'case'. While the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras, Nagpur, Orissa and Patna have all along favoured a more liberal interpretation of the word 'Case' used in section 115, C. P. C.

Allahabad High Court has, except in very few cases, held the view that the word 'Case' used in section 115 is identical with the word 'suit'. This view is based on the group (sic) that although the word 'case' is more comprehensive than the word 'suit' no instance can be quoted of its use in the Code where it would not at least include a suit and that where the case in which the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court is invoked happens to be also a suit then the suit which requires to be decided before the record is called for. The same view has been taken by Oudh High Court and in some of the earlier cases of Bombay High Court. Lahore High Court also took the same view until the decision of the Full Bench case of — 'Bibi Gurudevi v. Mohammad Bakhsh', reported in AIR 1943 Lah. 65 (FB). The Full Bench dissented from the view taken by an earlier

Full Bench in — 'Lal Chand Mangal Sain v. Beharilal Mehar Chand', 5 Lah 288. Bhide J. who wrote the principal judgment observed as follows:

"If, however, the contention of the learned counsel for the respondents is correct, the High Court cannot interfere during the pendency of a suit even if the errors are gross or palpable, and it is perfectly clear that the final decision will have to be set aside eventually in the interests of justice owing to those errors. It will obviously mean enormous waste of time and money, if errors of this type could not be rectified by the High Court at once and thus the wide powers conferred upon the High Courts by S. 115 will be rendered nugatory to a large extent." Expounding the meaning of the word 'Case' Bhide J. stated as follows:

"The crucial question, therefore, is whether the word 'case' when used with reference to a suit must be taken to mean the 'whole suit' and nothing else as held in — '5 Lah. 288'. The question is primarily that of the meaning to be assigned to the word 'case'. The word is of a very wide import. Its general meaning in legal phraseology according to the Oxford Dictionary is any 'state of facts juridically considered', as already pointed out. This meaning is wide enough to cover decisions on any set of facts which are the subject of controversy between the parties and would thus include 'interlocutory orders'. The learned counsel for the respondents referred to section 33, Civil P. C., in support of his contention that the word 'case' when used with reference to a suit must be taken to mean the 'whole suit' and nothing else. But a reference to other sections of the Code will show that this contention is not sound. For instance, 'judgment' is defined in the Code as a statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order. 'Order' is defined as the formal expression of any decision of a civil court other than a 'decree'. According to Order 20, rule 4 a judgment of any court other than a court of small causes shall contain a 'concise statement of the case, the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for decision'. When the judgment related to an 'order' (e.g. one of the orders which are appealable under Order 43 and which do not come within the definition of a 'decree'), this will presumably mean the statement of 'case' so far as it relates to the 'order' in question. In other words, in this context, the word 'case' must be taken to mean the particular branch of the case to which the order relates."

This exposition of the word 'case' clearly indicates that the word 'case' used in section 115 is not identical with the word 'suit' but is used in a wider sense so as to cover even interlocutory orders. In — 'Narayan Sonaji v. Sheshrao Vithoba', AIR 1948 Nag 258 the Full Bench of the High Court assigned the same wide meaning to the word 'case decided'. Pandhye J. in the course of his judgment in that case made the following observations:

"The divergence of view can now be said to have been resolved in favour of the liberal interpretation of the word according to which the word 'case' includes interlocutory orders."

In — 'Jagdish Saran v. Bhagwat Saran', ILR (1940) All. 564, their Lordships of the Allaha-

bad High Court held that an order refusing an amendment of plaint in the matter of correct description and array of addition of parties amounts to a case decided within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and revision lies therefrom. In — 'Atmaram v. Beni Prasad', 57 All. 678 (PC), Allahabad High Court held that where an application to join party to a suit was disposed of without proper consideration and on a misapprehension of its nature, a revision lies against that order under section 115, C. P. C. These two decisions of the Allahabad High Court show that there is a distinct tendency to depart from the old view. However, in — 'Prakash Chand v. Mahendra Kumar', AIR 1948 All. 288, Malik C. J. observed:

"The order passed by the court below is an interlocutory order and in our view no revision lies against that order."

Oudh High Court has also been following the old view taken by the Allahabad High Court. In — 'Ramchandra v. Birendra Bikram Singh', AIR 1942 Oudh 431, Thomas C. J. and Gulam Hassan J. held that where the trial court has framed an issue casting burden of proof upon the plaintiff and refused to accept the plaintiff's application to recast the issue so as to remove burden of proof imposed upon him, no revision against the order of the trial court is entertainable at the instance of the plaintiff on the ground that no case can be said to have been decided by the trial court.

(2) The High Court of Bombay also accepted the narrow interpretation of the word 'case' in some of its earlier cases on the ground that 'case' does not include a branch of a case. Vide — 'Senaji Kapurchand v. Pannaji Devichand', AIR 1932 Bom 81 & — 'Isa Adam v. Bai Mariam', AIR 1927 Bom. 664. But in a recent case it has favoured liberal interpretation of the word 'case' Vide — 'Municipal Borough of Ahmedabad v. Aryodaya Ginning and Manufacturing Co. Ltd.', AIR 1941 Bom. 361 and — 'Jamnadas Vrijlal v. Chandulal Jamnadas', AIR 1937 Bom. 167. As already stated the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras, Orissa and Patna have all along held the view that the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain revisions against interlocutory orders. Vide — 'Surpat Singh v. Ratan Chand', AIR 1940 Cal 92; — 'Lakshmiddevamma v. Nagayya', AIR 1949 Mad 369; — 'Chandra Kishore v. Babulal Agarwala', AIR 1949 Orissa 77 and — 'Shiba Prasad v. Nilabji Bali', AIR 1947 Pat 45.

(3) From the discussion of the case law above I am clearly of the opinion that the word 'case' used in section 115, C. P. C. is wide enough to include even interlocutory orders. The expression 'judgment' is defined in section 2(9) of the C. P. C. It states that judgment means the statement given by Judge of the grounds of the decree or order. Order 20, rule 4, sub-rule (2) lays down that judgments of courts other than Small Causes shall contain a concise statement of the case, the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for such decisions. It follows, therefore, that even a judgment of an order must contain a concise statement of the case. In this view of the matter it is clear that the word 'case' is not necessarily identical with the word 'suit'. There is nothing in the language of section 115 itself to suggest that the word 'case' is used in a narrow sense. Besides except Allahabad High Court, all the High Courts in India favour liberal interpretation of the word 'case'. In these circumstances I see no reason to take a different view from that taken by the majority of the High Courts in India. I, therefore, hold that this court has jurisdiction to entertain revisions against interlocutory orders.

(4) Turning now to the question as to whether revision, touching the question of the onus of proof, can be entertained or not, we have to examine whether the language of section 115 allows scope for such interference or not. In this case there is not so much a question of exercising jurisdiction not vested or failure to exercise jurisdiction vested. The question mainly is whether the lower court has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. It has been held that where the law has prescribed the manner in which a court shall exercise its jurisdiction and the court acts in disregard of those provisions, it acts illegally or irregularly in the exercise of jurisdiction. But where the court exercises its jurisdiction in the manner prescribed but arrives at a conclusion or decision which is erroneous in law or fact it does not act illegally or with material irregularity. Vide — 'Lakshmi Shanker v. Rama Kant', AIR 1950 All 144; — 'Abdul Majid v. Dalip Singh', AIR 1949 All 744; — 'Dominion of India v. Hazari Lal', AIR 1949 Pat 410 (FB). In — 'Venkata-giri Ayyangar v. Hindu Religious Endowments Board, Madras', AIR 1949 P. C. 156, their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:

"Section 115 applies only to cases in which no appeal lies, and where the legislature has provided no right of appeal, the manifest intention is that the order of the trial court, right or wrong shall be final. The section empowers the High Court to satisfy itself upon three matters, (a) that the order of the subordinate court is within its jurisdiction, (b) that the case is one in which the court ought to exercise jurisdiction; and (c) that in exercising jurisdiction the court has not acted illegally, that is, in breach of some provision of law, or with material irregularity that is, by committing some error of procedure in the course of the trial which is material in that it may have affected the ultimate decision. If the High Court is satisfied upon those matters, it has no powers to interfere because it differs, however, profoundly, from the conclusions of the subordinate courts upon questions of fact or law."

It is clear from this authority that under clause (c) of section 115 the High Court can interfere only when it is satisfied that the lower court in exercising the jurisdiction has acted illegally that is, in breach of some provision of law or with material irregularity, that is, by committing some error of procedure. Unless these conditions are satisfied the High Court cannot interfere in revision under clause (c) of section 115. Although there is a question of burden of proof involved in this case, in fact it is a question relating to the framing of an issue. Plaintiff's grievance is that issue No. 2 should be so framed as to place the burden of proof on the defendant. Hence the real grievance of the plaintiff is that issue No. 2 be reframed. Order 14, rule 1 (1) lays down that issues arise when a material proposition of fact or law is affirmed by one party and denied by the other. Order 14, rule 1(3) states that each material proposition affirmed by one party and denied by the other shall form the subject of a distinct issue. If, therefore, the procedure laid down in Order 14 is not followed by the lower court, it may be said that the court acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

In the Full Bench case the Nagpur High Court expressed its opinion on this question as follows:

"The subject of settlement of issues is dealt with in Order 14, C. P. C. and rule 1 (3) of the Order provided that each material proposition affirmed by one party and denied by the other shall form the subject of a distinct issue. The material propositions as defined by rule 1 (2) of Order 14 are those propositions of law or fact which a plaintiff must allege in order to show a right to sue or a defendant must allege in order to constitute his defence. If a court refused to frame an issue on a material proposition affirmed by one party and denied by the other, it would be guilty of not exercising jurisdiction vested in it by law requiring it at the first hearing of the suit to record issues on which the right decision of the case depends. If on the other hand it framed issues which do not arise out of the material propositions of law or fact affirmed by one party and denied by the other, it would be acting either in excess of its jurisdiction or with material irregularity, and in either case the order of the subordinate court may be open to revision. In fact, by refusing to frame an issue which actually does arise in the case, the court shuts out a trial of a part of his case. In such a case it would be necessary for the High Court to interfere in revision and to set the matter right so as to avoid waste of time and costs." Vide — 'Narayan Sonaji v. Sheshrao Vithoba', AIR 1948 Nag. 258 Para 93.

In — 'Bir Babu v. Raghubar Babu', AIR 1947 Pat. 469 their Lordships of the Patna High Court held that the correct placing of the onus of proof is the vital point of procedure and incorrect placing of onus may, therefore, amount to material irregularity. In — 'Shiba Prasad v. Nilabji Bali', AIR 1947 Pat. 45, Ray, J. held that the provisions of Order 14, rule 5 make it obligatory upon the Judge to frame such issues as are necessary for the purpose of determining the controversy between the parties and if he refuses to frame such issues as are really necessary for determining the controversy he fails to exercise jurisdiction which is vested in him and hence in such a case revision lies against the order refusing to frame issues. Vide 'AIR 1947 Pat. 45'.

(5) For these reasons I am also of the opinion that revision can be entertained touching the question relating to the onus of proof.

(6) My answer to the questions referred, therefore, is (1) that the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain revisions against interlocutory orders and that (2) In this case a revision can be entertained touching the question relating to the onus of proof as it depends upon the correct framing of an issue.

(7) DIXIT J.: This is a reference under section 29 (b) of the Madhya Bharat High Court Act. It arises out of a petition to revise an order of the trial court placing the onus of proof of one of the issues framed in the suit on the plaintiff-applicant. When the petition came up for hearing before a single Judge of this Court, a preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the defendant non-applicant that the revision petition was incompetent as the order of the trial court regarding the burden of proof was not a 'case decided' within the meaning of section 115 of the C. P. Code and was not, therefore, revisable by this Court. In the order of reference, the learned Single Judge, after referring to the decision of various High Courts regarding the meaning of the expression 'Case decided' and also to the decisions in which the question whether the High Court can revise an order of the trial court framing an issue or refusing to frame an issue has been considered, has expressed the view:

"That a revision petition is competent if a proper case is made out under section 115, C. P. C., as by refusing to frame an issue which does arise in the case, the court shuts out a trial of a part of the case."

(8) The precise question on which this Bench is required to express its opinion has not been formulated in the order of reference, and I must confess that I am unable to gather it from the order of reference. I, however, take it that in the context of the facts of the revision petition, the question which we have to answer is whether an order of the trial court wrongly placing the burden of proof is subject to revision by this Court under section 115, C. P. Code. It is clear from the wording of section 115, C. P. C. that if the order of the trial court regarding the burden of proof of an issue is a case decided within the meaning of that section, then the High Court can clearly interfere in revision, if the trial court has in placing the burden of proof acted illegally, that is, in breach of some provisions of law, or with material irregularity. On the question whether an interlocutory order is covered by the expression 'case decided' there is no doubt a conflict of opinion in the various High Courts. But the majority view, which appears to me, to be the correct view, is that the word "case" as used in section 115 of the Code is wide enough to include an interlocutory order, and the words 'record of any case' include so much of the proceedings as relate to an interlocutory order.

This is the view taken by the Calcutta, Patna, Madras and the former Lahore High Court. In — 'Bibi Gurudevi v. Mohammad Bakhsh', AIR 1943 Lah. 65 (FB), the entire case law on the meaning and scope of the expression "case decided" has been reviewed and it has been held that the word 'case' is wide enough to include an interlocutory order passed in a suit. I do not think I can usefully add anything to the view expressed in — 'AIR 1943 Lah 65 (FB)', with which I am in respectful agreement. As to the question in what cases the High Court should interfere in revision with an order of the trial court wrongly placing the onus of proof, it is clearly difficult to formulate any rigid rule. An order of the trial court regarding the burden of proof is an order of the subordinate court in the exercise of its jurisdiction and as pointed out very recently by the Privy Council in — 'Venkatagiri Ayyangar v. Hindu Religious Endowments Board, Madras', AIR 1949 P. C. 156 an order of the subordinate court made within its jurisdiction can be interfered in revision only if the Court has acted illegally, that is, in breach of some provisions of law, or with material irregularity, that is, by committing some error of procedure in the course of the trial which is material in that that it affects the ultimate decision. The question, therefore, whether in placing the burden of proof about an issue, the court has acted illegally, or with material irregularity, obviously depends on the facts and circumstances of the case.

If, for example, when a statute specifically puts the burden of proof upon a certain party and the Court puts the burden of proof the other way, the court clearly acts illegally. So also if on the facts and circumstances of the case, the correct placing of the onus of proof is a vital point of procedure, then, incorrect placing of onus may amount to material irregularity. The view that the High Court can, in such circumstances, interfere in revision with an order of the subordinate Court regarding the placing of the onus of proof, is supported by the decisions in — 'Varisai Muhammad Rowther v. Marungapuri Estate', AIR 1939 Mad 644 and — 'Bir Babu v. Raghubar Babu', AIR 1947 Pat. 469. In my opinion, decisions bearing on the question whether the High Court can interfere with an order of the subordinate Court framing an issue or refusing to frame an issue are not relevant to the question before us.

(9) I would, therefore, answer the reference by saying that the order of the subordinate Court placing the onus of proof can be interfered in revision if the court in placing the burden of proof has acted illegally, or with material irregularity.

Order accordingly.

Civil Misc. Case No. 26 of 1952, D/- 3-10-1952.

(a) Constitution of India (1950), Art. 226 — Mandamus — Contractual rights — Enforcement of.

Mandamus or an order in the nature of mandamus will not be issued for the enforcement of a private right. Therefore it cannot be issued for enforcing a right arising out of a contract: AIR 1947 Cal 307 and AIR 1952 Cal 315 Rel. on. (Para 3)

Anno: Civ. P. C., App. III, Art. 226 N. 11.

(b) Constitution of India (1950), Art. 226 — Mandamus — Writ against executive orders — Injury not shown — Writ will not be issued.

No doubt, under Article 226 of the Constitution of India, the High Court has jurisdiction to issue an order against even an executive officer who has issued an administrative order in order to safeguard the fundamental rights of a citizen and to prevent injuries being caused to the rights of a citizen by the order. (Para 4)

An order passed by the Jagir Commissioner in exercise of his powers of supervision and control over Jagirdars, and confirmed by the Government in appeal, directing a jagirdar to collect rent from his tenants at the rate fixed when the lands were originally leased out and not according to the enhanced rate agreed by them under renewed leases is an executive order and not a juridical order which determines the question of rent payable by the tenants to the jagirdars. The order has not effect of ousting the jurisdiction of court in the suits filed by the jagirdar against the tenants for enhanced rent under the renewed leases and it is open to the jagirdar to contend in those suits that the order is not valid and binding on the court if the tenants plead it in defence. If the Government assumes superintendence of the jagir on the ground of the jagirdar's disobedience to its order the latter can always approach the Court and challenge the validity of that order. But a mere apprehension that the Government may assume superintendence is not a ground for issuing the writ of mandamus. Thus against the order which neither infringes nor is likely to infringe any right of the jagirdar, the jagirdar will not be entitled to any relief by way of mandamus or an order in the nature of it either against the Commissioner or the Government. (Para 4)

The words "purporting to be done" in Article 361 are of very wide scope and even though an act done by the Raj Pramukh is outside or in contravention of the Constitution, if it is one professed to be done under the Constitution, then it would come within the protection of Article 361. AIR 1952 Cal 799 Foll.

No relief by way of a writ under Art. 226 will be available against the Raj Pramukh in respect of these rights. (Para 5)

DIXIT J.: This is an application under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India for the issue of writ in the nature of mandamus or any other direction or an order or a writ against the non-applicants declaring an order passed by the Jagir Commissioner on 12-9-50 and affirmed by the Madhya Bharat Government on 14-5-52 as illegal and ultra vires and for an order restraining the non-applicants No. 1 to 3 from taking any action against the applicant in the event of his failure, to comply with those orders.

(2) The petitioner states that he is a Jagirdar of Harsi Jagir; that he was not required under any law to introduce within his jagir either Zamindari or Raiyatwari system of land administration and that, therefore, he had leased out in 1909 lands to the non-applicant-tenants No. 4 to 31 under separate contracts. The petitioner further states that in 1938 these leases were revised and the rents enhanced, and that since the revision of the leases the tenants paid enhanced rents until 1949. In this year on complaint by the tenants to the Madhya Bharat Government the Jagir Commissioner passed an order directing the applicant to realise the rents according to the pattas issued in 1908 and to refund the tenants the excess amount realised from them since the revision of the rent in 1938. The petitioner then appealed to the Madhya Bharat Government against the said order of the Jagir Commissioner and the order was upheld in appeal.

(3) After hearing Mr. Anand Bihari Misra learned counsel for the applicant, I think this application must be dismissed. In so far as the non-applicant-tenants are concerned, it is clear that the petitioner's right to realise from them rent at a certain rate is based on a contract. If any of the tenants refuses to pay rent according to the contract of tenancy entered by him, the petitioner's obvious remedy is to file a suit for the recovery of rent on the basis of the contract. A writ of mandamus or an order in the nature of mandamus cannot be issued for enforcing a right arising out of a contract. It is well-settled that mandamus or an order in the nature of mandamus will not be issued for the enforcement of a private right. I need only refer to the cases reported in — 'B. K. Banerjee v. Simonds', AIR 1947 Cal 307; — 'Carlsbad Mineral Water Manufacturing Co. Ltd. v. Jagtiani', 87 Cal L J 149. As a matter of fact as the petitioner himself has stated, suits have already been filed by the applicant against the non-applicant-tenants for the recovery of rents at the stipulated rates.

(4) A writ or an order prayed for cannot also be issued against the Raj Pramukh or the Madhya Bharat Government or the Jagir Commissioner. It is not the case of the applicant that the Madhya Bharat Government is empowered under any law to make an order under certain circumstances directing a Jagirdar to realise rents from his tenants at a particular rate and that such an order when passed is a quasi-judicial order. The petitioner also does not allege that the Madhya Bharat Government is bound under some law to see that the tenants of a Jagirdar pay rent to him at the rate agreed to by them, that is, by the tenants. In fact the petitioner says that the non-applicants No. 1 to 3 cannot under any law intervene in any dispute between a Jagirdar and his tenants as regards the rent. The orders complained of are in my opinion, purely executive orders. In the order dated 14-5-52 of the Government by which the Jagir Commissioner's order was maintained it has been distinctly stated that the order passed by the Jagir Commissioner was an administrative order passed by him in exercise of his powers of supervision and control over the Jagirdars. No doubt, under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India this Court has jurisdiction to issue an order against even an executive officer who has issued an administrative order in order to safeguard the fundamental rights of a citizen and to prevent injuries being caused to the rights of a citizen by the order. But then the petitioner has not been able to show that any real injury has already been caused to him or about to be caused by the order of the Government. The orders of the Government and the Jagir Commissioner challenged by the petitioner do not oust the jurisdiction of the subordinate Courts to determine the rent cases already instituted by the applicant against his tenants. Again, the orders have not the effect of a juridical determination of the question of the rent payable by the tenants to the petitioner. If in the rent-suits filed by the applicant, the tenants plead in defence, the orders of the Jagir Commissioner and the Madhya Bharat Government, it is open to the applicant to say in those suits that the said orders are of no validity and are not binding on the Court. Learned Counsel for the applicant urged that if he does not comply with the orders of the Government his Jagir might be placed under a Court of Wards by the Government. The apprehension that Government might assume the superintendence of the Jagir of the applicant in the event of his failure to obey the orders of the Government, cannot in my opinion, be a good ground for the issue of a writ in favour of the applicant. If and when the Government passes an order placing the management of the Jagir of the applicant under Court of Wards, the petitioner can come up to this Court challenging the validity of that order. At present, no right of the petitioner has been infringed or about to be infringed by the orders of the Government.

(5) The application in so far as it seeks relief against the Raj Pramukh is wholly incompetent. Under Article 361 the Raj Pramukh is not "answerable to any Court for the exercise and performance of the powers and duties of his office or for any act done or purporting to be done by him in the exercise and performance of those powers and duties." It is clear from this Article that it affords complete immunity to the Raj Pramukh not only in respect of the exercise and performance of the powers and duties of the office but also in respect of "any act done or purporting to be done by him" in the exercise or performance of those powers and duties. Learned Counsel for the petitioner sought to argue that as the order dated 14-5-52 passed by the Raj Pramukh as the Head of the Madhya Bharat Government was altogether unauthorised and outside the Constitution, it did not fall within the protection of Article 361. I am unable to accede to this argument. The words "purporting to be done" are of very wide scope and even though the act done is outside or in contravention of the Constitution, but if it is one professed to be done under the Constitution, then it would come within the protection of Article 361. As observed by the Calcutta High Court in a recent case — 'Biman Chandra v. Dr. H. C. Mukerjee', 56 Cal W N 651 dealing with Art. 361 that "if the act is ostensibly done in exercise of the power given under the Constitution and it is not established that the act is done dishonestly or in bad faith or in other words, out of any improper motive, the immunity attaches to the exercise of the power. The protection is intended to be real and not merely illusory." I am in respectful agreement with these observations of the Calcutta High Court with regard to the extent and scope of Art. 361 of the Constitution of India.

(6) Before I conclude I must observe that Counsel making applications under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India would do well to study the nature of the various writs before making the prayer in their applications for the issue of a writ in the nature of mandamus or certiorari or prohibition or a suitable writ. I fully endorse the observations of Banerjee J. in — 'Union of India v. Elbridge Watson', AIR 1952 Cal 601 by which he protested against prayers being couched in applications under Art. 226 in such general words as the Court may be pleased to grant such writs as it may think fit and said that the prayer must be specific and precise.

(7) For the above reasons, I would dismiss this petition.

(8) CHATURVEDI J.: I agree that the petition be dismissed.

The State v. Kanhiyalal and others, Non-Applicants.

Criminal Ref. No. 35 of 1951, D/- 13-8-1952.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 30 — Magistrate invested with S. 30 powers during pendency of committal proceeding — Notification is not retrospective.

The difference between the procedure of the trial of a case by a S. 30 Magistrate and the procedure in a case triable by a Sessions Court is not merely procedural but it is one of substance and of such a character that a change from one procedure to the other affects any vested or statutory right. Among other things the difference lies also in the substantive rights of appeal and of being tried by a jury or with the aid of assessors. Such substantive rights vest in an accused person at the date when the criminal proceedings are instituted against him. (Para 3)

Consequently the notification dated 17th May 1950, which did not contain any provision making it retrospective conferring S. 30 powers on certain Magistrates, held was not retrospective in operation. The Magistrate thus invested with S. 30 powers and before whom the committal proceedings in a case were pending must therefore, continue the committal proceedings against the accused and either discharge them or commit them to the Court of Sessions for trial. He himself could not try them exercising S. 30 powers. (Para 5)

Anno: Criminal P. C., S. 30 N. 2.

(b) Interpretation of Statutes — Retrospective operation — Rule of.

Every statute which takes away or impairs a vested right acquired under the existing law or creates a new obligation or imposes a new duty or attaches a new disability in respect of transactions or considerations already passed must be presumed to be intended not to have retrospective operation. If there are words in the enactment which either expressly state or necessarily imply that the statute is to be given retrospective operation, then the Act should have retrospective operation even though the consequences may appear unjust and hard. A statute is not to be considered to have greater retrospective operation than its language renders necessary. As no person has a vested right in any course of procedure, alterations in procedure are to be retrospective, unless there is some good reason against it. And the right of appeal is not a mere matter of procedure but is a vested right which inheres in a party from the commencement of the action in the Court of first instance. (Para 2)

DIXIT J.: This case has been referred to this Bench for decision under section 29 (a) of the Madhya Bharat High Court Act of Samvat 2005. The facts are that a challan in respect of an offence under sec. 388, I. P. C., was presented against the non-applicants before the Additional District Magistrate of Gwalior. During the pendency of the committal proceedings the Magistrate was invested with Sec. 30 powers by a notification dated 17th May 1950 which did not contain any provision to make it retrospective and which on the other hand expressly made it effective from 1st June 1950. Thereupon the learned Magistrate instead of continuing the committal proceedings, proceeded to try the accused persons in exercise of his powers under Sec. 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code. An objection was then taken by the prosecution that as the notification investing the Magistrate with Sec. 30 powers was not retrospective the Magistrate had jurisdiction either to commit the accused to the Court of sessions or to discharge them and that he had no authority to try the case as Sec. 30 Magistrate. The objection was overruled by the Magistrate. A revision petition was then filed by the State before the Sessions Judge of Gwalior. The learned Sessions Judge now relying on a decision of Shinde J., (as he then was) in — 'Cri. Reference No. 27 of 1950 (Madh. B.) made a reference to this court recommending that the decision of the Magistrate to try the accused persons in the exercise of Sec. 30 powers is illegal and that he be directed to continue with the committal proceedings. When this case first came up for hearing before my learned brother Chaturvedi, J., he felt some doubt as to the correctness of the view taken by Shinde J., in — 'Cri. Reference No. 27 of 1950', that the notification dated 17th May 1950 investing certain Magistrates with Sec. 30 powers was not retrospective. He, therefore, directed that the case be placed before the Chief Justice for the constitution of a Division Bench for the hearing of the reference made by the Sessions Judge. Accordingly this Bench has been constituted for the disposal of the reference made by the learned Sessions Judge of Gwalior.

(2) The sole point for determination in this case is whether if during the pendency of committal proceedings, the Magistrate holding the proceedings is invested with Sec. 30 powers by a notification, which does not contain any provision to make it retrospective, can the Magistrate instead of continuing with the committal proceedings try the accused in the exercise of sec. 30 powers? The question is fairly simple. The answer to it depends on the interpretation of the notification in question by an application of the well-established principles as regards the retrospective operation of statutes. These principles have been indicated in two Full Bench decisions of this Court, namely, — 'Daulat Singh v. The State', AIR 1950 Madh. B. 112 (FB) and — 'Gulabchand v. Kudilal', ILR (1952) Madh. B. 15 (FB). In these two cases it has been laid down after a review of all the well-known authorities that (1) every statute which takes away or impairs a vested right acquired under the existing law or creates a new obligation or imposes a new duty or attaches a new disability in respect of transactions or considerations already passed must be presumed to be intended not to have retrospective operation; (2) if there are words in the enactment which either expressly state or necessarily imply that the statute is to be given retrospective operation, then the Act should have retrospective operation even though the consequences may appear unjust and hard; (3) a statute is not to be considered to have greater retrospective operation than its language renders necessary; (4) as no person has a vested right in any course of procedure, alterations in procedure are to be retrospective, unless there is some good reason against it; (5) and the right of appeal is not a mere matter of procedure but is a vested right which inheres in a party from the commencement of the action in the Court of first instance.

(3) The principal question which we have to decide is whether the difference between the procedure of the trial of a case by a sec. 30 Magistrate and the procedure in a case triable by a Sessions Court is merely procedural or whether it is one of substance and of such a character that a change from one procedure to the other affects any vested or statutory right. For this purpose it is pertinent to note the difference in the two procedures. A Magistrate exercising sec. 30 powers has to follow the procedure laid down in Chapter XXI of the Code for the trial of warrant cases. An appeal from conviction and sentence by a Sec. 30 Magistrate lies to the Sessions Judge; if the Magistrate passes any sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding four years, or any sentence of transportation then the appeal of all or any of the accused persons convicted at the trial lies to the High Court. The provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code with regard to cases exclusively triable by a Court of Session are that during the pendency of the magisterial enquiry the accused may be discharged under Sec. 209 and even if a charge is framed against him under Sec. 210, the Magistrate may, under sec. 212 examine the defence witnesses whose names might have been given by the accused in the list under S. 211, and after such examination the Magistrate may under S. 213 (2) cancel the charge and discharge the accused if he is satisfied that there are not sufficient grounds for committing him. If the accused is not discharged either under S. 209 or under S. 213 (2) an order of commitment to the Sessions Court is made, and thereafter the trial takes place either by a jury or with the aid of assessors. An appeal of a person convicted on a trial held by a Sessions Judge lies to the High Court.

It would be seen from these provisions that the difference in the two procedures is not merely in the mode of conducting proceedings in Court. It lies also in the substantive rights of appeal and of being tried by a jury or with the aid of assessors. That a right of appeal is a substantive right is well settled. That the accused person's right of trial by a jury is a substantive right, is also well established. See. — 'Dalsingh v. King Emperor', AIR 1917 P. C. 25; — 'Emperor v. Fitzmaurice', 6 Lah 262).

It is true that in this State there is no trial by jury and all trials before a Court of Sessions are with the aid of assessors. But it is clear to me that the right of a trial with the aid of assessors is as much a substantive right of an accused person as his right of trial by a jury. In principle there is no difference between a trial by a jury and one with the aid of assessors. A trial without the aid of assessors is altogether void in this State, where no notification under S. 269 has been issued by the Government. There is also no distinction in the procedure at the trial by a jury & one with the aid of assessors except as to the summing up in the case of the former, and the manner in which the verdict of the jury and the opinion of the assessors are taken. In a trial with the aid of assessors the Judge is no doubt the sole Judge of law and fact and the responsibility of the decision rests solely with him. But in reaching the decision the Judge is expected to take into consideration the opinion of each assessor. It is true that in actual experience, as observed by this Court in — 'Manjur v. State', AIR 1950 Madh B 37 (F.B.).

"it is usual to find the assessors no wiser at the end of the trial than at the commencement and they rarely serve any useful purpose save the satisfaction of the judicial conscience in following the provisions of law".

But nonetheless the right of a trial with the aid of assessors is a substantive and statutory right of an accused person, whatever may be its practical utility.

It must be further remembered that in a case triable by a Court of Sessions the accused is entitled to substantive rights such as the right of appeal and the right of trial with the aid of assessors or by a jury, as existed at the time when the criminal proceedings are instituted against him before the committing Magistrate. He cannot be deprived of these rights by giving retrospective effect to the notification under consideration. The view that such substantive rights vest in an accused person at the date when the criminal proceedings are instituted against him is supported by the observations of Fazl Ali J., in — 'Banwari Gope v. Emperor', AIR 1943 Pat 18 (F.B.).

In that case the learned Judge while considering the question whether the Special Criminal Courts Ordinance (2 of 1952) was applicable to those cases in which the criminal proceedings had started before the Ordinance came into force, said

"Now, there can be no doubt that if a party to a civil action is deemed to have a right of appeal vested in him at the date of the institution of the suit, a similar right must be conceded to an accused person at the date when the criminal proceedings are instituted against him. There was some discussion before us as to what was, for the purpose of a criminal prosecution the stage corresponding to the institution of a civil suit, but in my opinion upon the authorities as well as upon general principles there can be no doubt that so far as criminal prosecutions are concerned, the corresponding date must be the date when a Magistrate takes cognizance of the offence alleged to have been committed by an accused person, signifying thereby that the accused must be proceeded against for the offence in question ..... It seems to me however to be academic to discuss here what properly speaking is "inquiry" and what is "trial" because all that we have to find in view of the authorities on the subject is when the criminal case was registered or started against the accused person. In my opinion, as soon as the Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence there is a criminal case against the accused person and at that point of time he acquires such right of appeal or revision, as the case may be, as the law confers upon him."

In — 'Emperor v. Fitzmaurice', 6 Lah 262 also it was held that the right of being tried by a jury vested in the accused person at the time of the opening of the proceedings before the Committing Magistrate.

(4) The position then in this case is, that the notification of 17th May 1950 conferring S. 30 powers on certain Magistrates does not contain any words to show that it has been made retrospective, either expressly or by necessary intendment so as to take away such rights as the non-applicants had acquired in the matter of a trial by a Sessions Court before the S. 30 powers conferred on the Magistrates became effective. As the criminal proceedings against the non-applicants had been initiated before the Committing Magistrate long before he was invested with S. 30 powers, it follows he had no authority to drop the committal proceedings and to begin to try the accused persons in the exercise of S. 30 powers because the substituted procedure involved an inroad on the rights of the non-applicants of an unqualified appeal to the High Court from the conviction and sentence by a Court of Session and of a trial with the aid of assessors, which accrued to them at the time of the institution of criminal proceedings against them before the committing Magistrate. On the rules of interpretation to which I have already referred the notification dated 17th May 1950 must be held not to apply to the case of the present non-applicants. In saying that the notification in question does not contain any words to make it retrospective, I should not be taken as saying that if the wording of the notification had been such as to invest the Magistrate with S. 30 powers retrospectively, the notification would be valid. The question whether a notification purporting to invest such powers retrospectively is valid, does not arise in the present case, and I express no opinion on the question.

(5) For the above reasons I find myself in agreement with the view taken by Shinde J., in — 'Crl. Reference No. 27 of 1950' that the notification dated 17th May 1950 conferring S. 30 powers on certain Magistrates, including the one in the instant case, is not retrospective in operation. The Additional Magistrate must therefore, continue the committal proceedings against the non-applicants and either discharge them or commit them to the Court of Sessions for trial. He himself cannot try them exercising S. 30 powers.

(6) B. K. CHATURVEDI J.: Though the selection of forum relates to the law of procedure, there is some doubt on the point whether the trial by a Court of Sessions, with the aid of assessors, can be claimed to be a substantive right. So far as the right of appeal is concerned I do not find any substantial difference between a trial by S. 30 Magistrate and by court of Sessions if the accused are sentenced to a term of imprisonment exceeding 4 years. In both cases appeals would lie to this court. So the right of appeal cannot be made a criterion in this case. My attention however has been drawn to one of my decisions — 'Brindaban v. State', reported in AIR 1951 Madhya B. 29 wherein I have held that though the assessors are not members of the court of session still it is mandatory that the court would be aided till the conclusion of the trial by at least one assessor attending the trial throughout and giving his opinion. As it is incumbent on the court of sessions to consider the opinion of the assessors, I should be disposed to think that, only on this basis, a trial by a court of Sessions in Madhya Bharat can be held to be a substantive right which the notification dated 17th May 1950 could not have impaired or taken away. In this view of the matter, I agree with the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother.

SHINDE C. J.: This is a petition for the issue of a writ in the nature of Mandamus or some appropriate order or direction against the State. The petition alleges that the applicant was a tenant of a portion of land known as the Sewage farm Gwalior from 1935 to 1942; that in 1942 the then Gwalior Government ordered acquisition of the land and property situated upon it for the purpose of handing it over to the Gwalior Dairy Company Ltd. and accordingly on 1-7-1942 the applicant was forcibly ejected from the land contrary to the terms of the agreement; that after the above event the applicant applied to the Government to compensate him for the loss and to give him fresh land for cultivation; that the matter regarding giving of the land remained pending before the then Gwalior Government: that after the formation of Madhya Bharat Mr. Syad Hamid Ali the then Minister appointed Mr. Ramkrishna Dixit as an arbitrator for deciding the dispute; that after perusing the record and hearing the parties Mr. Ramkrishna Dixit gave his award in which he recommended the Government to hand over 60 acres of land of the Sewage Farm after the termination of the lease of the Gwalior Dairy Ltd.; that Shree Syad Hamidali confirmed the said award and passed orders accordingly; that after the said order of the Minister the Government published a notice inviting tenders for the same land in the Government Gazette dated 15th April, 1950; that the applicant, after the said Notification protested against it but to no effect; that the applicant has been deprived of the valuable right by not receiving the possession of the land to which he is entitled. On these allegations the petitioner prays that a writ of Mandamus or some other appropriate order or direction be issued directing the non-applicant to execute the order passed by Shree Syad Hamidali.

(2) In the return filed against the petition the Secretary Local Self Government states that it is emphatically denied that the former Gwalior Government ejected him in breach of any agreement; that the petitioner had been given a lease for seven years in 1935 which lease expired on 30-6-1942; that after due notice on 14-5-42 possession was taken from him and the petitioner took back the deposit he had made in connection with the lease; that it is untrue that Shree Ramkrishna Dixit recommended to the Government to hand over 60 acres of the land to the petitioner after the termination of the lease of The Gwalior Dairy Ltd.; that there was no lease or an agreement of lease made between the petitioner and the opposite party; that it is emphatically denied that any Government orders were passed; that the Gwalior Dairy Ltd. claims a right to continue in possession firstly on the strength of the revenue law then in force in Madhya Bharat and secondly on the basis of an order passed by the ruler of the former Gwalior State in 1942; that the land is held by and is in the actual possession of the Gwalior Dairy Ltd.;

(3) A copy of the lease given by the Gwalior Government has been produced by the Secretary Local Self Government. A perusal of this lease shows that the land in dispute was given on lease of seven years commencing from 1st July, 1935. There is also a copy of the notice given to the petitioner by the Sanitary Engineer Gwalior Government on record. That notice clearly states that as the lease expires on the 1st Day of July 1942 the petitioner is to hand over the possession of the plots to the Sanitary Engineer. From these two documents it is evident that the allegation of the petitioner that he was forcibly ejected from the land by the Gwalior Government is false. A copy of the award given by Shree Ramkrishna Dixit has also been filed by the non-petitioner. All that the award states is as follows:—

“इसके संबंध में महकमे की ओर से यह बताया गया है कि भूतपूर्व मिनिस्टर साहब की कोई भी आज्ञा इस संबंध में नहीं हुई है. मेरे सामने ठेकेदार ने एक प्रत की नकल प्रस्तुत की है. जिसका नम्बर ४१८६ दिनांक ९-३-४५ है. संबंधित

प्रकरण यदि कोई हो तो उसे बरामद किया जाकर यदि माननीय मिनिस्टर साहब की कोई आज्ञा हो तो उसकी लाइट में ठेकेदार की उपरोक्त मांग का फैसला किया जा सकता है.”

This does not amount to any recommendation that 60 acres of land be given to the petitioner.

(4) In — ‘Mohammad Ibrahim v. High Commissioner for India in Pakistan’, Mis. Petn. No. 46 of 1950 (Nag) Mangalmurti and Mudholkar JJ. held as follows:—

“The power which the court exercises under Article 226 is discretionary and the court would certainly bear in mind the conduct of the applicant in exercising the discretion. The Court would refuse to exercise discretion in favour of an applicant where the application is wanting in bona fides.”

In — ‘Zikar Yusuf v. Government of Madhya Pradesh’, Petn. No. 16 of 1950 (Nag) their Lordships of the Nagpur High Court observed as follows:—

“Where an ex parte application has been made to a High Court under article 226 (1) if the court comes to the conclusion that the affidavit in support of the application was not candid and did not fairly state the facts but stated them in such a way as to mislead the court as to the true facts the court ought for its own protection and to prevent an abuse of its process, to refuse to proceed any further with the examination of the merits. This is a power inherent in the court but one which should only be used in cases which bring conviction to the mind of the court that it has been deceived. Before coming to this conclusion a careful examination will be made of the facts as they are and as they have been stated in the applicant's affidavit and everything will be heard that can be urged to influence the view of the court when it reads affidavit and knows true facts. But if the result of this examination and hearing is to leave no doubt that the court has been deceived, then it will refuse to hear anything further from the applicant in a proceeding which has only been set in motion by means of a misleading affidavit and reject the application.”

As the facts alleged in the affidavit by the petitioner are false beyond doubt, this petition deserves to be rejected summarily.

(5) Apart from this a writ or an order or direction can be issued under article 226 only for the enforcement of fundamental rights or any other legal right. There is no allegation in the affidavit that any fundamental right has been infringed. As far as any other legal right is concerned it does not appear from the facts that any legal right has been violated. The non-petitioner has emphatically denied that any Government orders have been passed in favour of the petitioner. It appears from the reply of the non-petitioner that Shree Hamidali had proposed to give to the petitioner benefit of a fresh lease at a time when he was not aware of the plea of the Gwalior Dairy Ltd. Even conceding that Shree Hamidali did pass an order that a fresh lease be given to the petitioner, no right has accrued to the petitioner. It is at best a unilateral decision to enter into legal relationship. It is neither an agreement nor a lease. According to the allegation of the petitioner Shree Hamidali confirmed the recommendation of Shree Ramkrishna Dixit that land be given to the petitioner after the termination of the lease of the Gwalior Dairy Ltd. It is clear from the return filed by the non-petitioner that the land is still in possession of the Gwalior Dairy Ltd. Consequently the petitioner has no present right, if he has any, to the lease of the land concerned. In these circumstances as no legal right has been violated, this petition must be dismissed.

(6) In the result we think that this petition has been misconceived and consequently it is dismissed. The petitioner should pay the costs to the non-petitioner which we fix at Rs. 100/-

(7) DIXIT J.: I have also come to the conclusion that this petition must be dismissed with the direction that the applicant should pay to the opponent Rs. 100/- as costs of the petition. The applicant invokes the power of this Court under Article 226 to enforce an alleged order of the Government allotting certain lands on lease to the applicant. Learned Counsel for the petitioner failed to satisfy us that there was in existence any such order of the Government, or that if there was one, the Government was under a statutory duty or obligation to give the lands to the applicant and to give effect to its order. From the facts as revealed at the hearing of the petition, it appears that at one time, a Minister of the Madhya-Bharat Government considered the question of giving some lands to the petitioner on lease. If the petitioner thinks that this consideration by the Minister concerned ultimately ended in a contract with him on the one part and the Government on the other for the grant of the lands, his remedy is obviously to resort to Civil Courts for the enforcement of the contract. An order in the nature of mandamus cannot be issued under Article 226 for the enforcement of an obligation arising under a contract.

(8) In fact, I think the applicant has forfeited his right to invoke the power of the Court to issue the direction, he seeks, by failing to be candid in his statement of the facts. The applicant stated that in 1942, he was forcibly ejected from certain lands by the former Gwalior Government and that this action of the Government was contrary to the terms of the agreement. At the hearing, it was found that the applicant had not been forcibly ejected but that he was asked to hand over the possession of the land to the Gwalior Government on the expiry of the lease in 1942, and that accordingly after due notice, the applicant vacated the land and also took back the deposit he had made in connection with the lease of the land. The statement of the applicant that he was forcibly ejected, taken together with other inaccurate statements in his petition led this Court to issue a rule nisi thinking that the action of the Government appeared to be illegal. If the petitioner had correctly stated the material facts, he would have had considerable difficulty in the way of getting a rule nisi issued from this Court.

It has been authoritatively laid down in — 'Rex v. Kensington Income Tax Commissioners', (1917) 1 KB 486 that the rule of the Court requiring uberriema fides on the part of the applicant for an ex-parte injunction applies equally to the case of an application for a rule nisi for a writ of prohibition and that where there has been a suppression of material facts, the Court will refuse the writ without going into the merits of the case. This principle has been quoted with approval in — 'Zikar v. Govt. of Madhya-Pradesh', AIR 1951 Nag 16; — 'Asiatic Engineering Co. v. Achhru Ram', AIR 1951 All 746 (FB) and — 'Ratan Chandra v. Adhar Biswas', AIR 1952 Cal 72.

This petition must, therefore, fail on this ground also.

A decision of the High Court may not appear to the subordinate judicial officers and Magistrates as laying down the correct law. It may be subsequently overruled by the High Court or set aside by the Supreme Court. But so long as it has not been so overruled or set aside, it is binding on all. Judicial Officers and Magistrates have not the liberty of criticising the decisions of the High Court. Much less can they deliver to the High Court a homily on the matters it should take into consideration while examining the correctness of any decision. If they do so, their act is, no doubt, in common parlance an act of insubordination, but in law it amounts to a contempt of Court and they are liable to be dealt with as such for that act. The fact that the criticism or the suggestions have been made by a judicial officer or a Magistrate in the course of judicial proceedings cannot alter the nature of the act. (Para 3)

ORDER: This reference arises out of a criminal case pending in the Court of Additional District Magistrate, Bhind in which the accused persons are said to have been granted "anticipatory bail" by the Additional District Magistrate on the authority of the decision of Abdul Hakim J., in Criminal Miscellaneous Application No. 2 of 1951. By this reference purporting to be one under S. 438, Criminal P. C., Mr. L. C. Gupta the District Magistrate of Bhind desires that this Court should take into consideration the points mentioned in para. 4 of the reference while reconsidering the decision of this Court in Criminal Miscellaneous application No. 2 of 1951. The District Magistrate says in his reference:

"3. Since I understand that the said ruling is still under consideration of the High Court. I make this reference for consideration of the High Court mainly on the ground that the wordings of the section 497 as they stand today do not admit of grant of anticipatory bail as discussed in para. 2 above and therefore, the order of the A. D.M., Bhind is against law.

4. Grant of anticipatory bail besides being illegal creates following difficulties in properly completing the investigation by the police:

(i) Accused persons remain in hiding till bail is granted and thereby delay in investigation.

(ii) Chances of getting approver's testimony are made difficult.

(iii) Minimising the chances of getting evidence under Ss. 27, 29 and 30 of Evidence Act.

(iv) Minimising the chances of getting the circumstantial evidence at the time of arrest of the accused by his reaction and conduct at the time.

(v) Tampering with the evidence during investigation.

The case is, therefore, forwarded to the High Court of Judicature M. B. Indore for consideration under S. 439, Criminal P. C. File of lower Court is enclosed."

(2) From what has been stated above, it is clear that the reference made by Mr. L. C. Gupta the District Magistrate of Bhind is not for setting aside the order of the Additional District Magistrate granting bail to certain persons, on the ground that in the circumstances of the case bail should not have been granted to those persons. The primary purpose of the reference, seems to me, to suggest to this Court certain points, which according to the District Magistrate this Court ought to take into consideration while reconsidering the decision of Abdul Hakim J. It must be noted that when this reference was made, the decision of Abdul Hakim J., was actually being reconsidered by a Full Bench of this Court.

(3) When this reference first came up for hearing before me in the presence of the learned Deputy Government Advocate for the State, I observed that this was a very extra-ordinary and unwarranted reference. I also said that in making this reference the District Magistrate had transgressed all limits of balance and propriety expected from judicial officers and Magistrates subordinate to this Court. As I wanted to consider the matter carefully, I reserved orders in the reference. As a sequel to the observations made by me, Mr. L. C. Gupta, District Magistrate, Bhind has now tendered before me an apology expressing his regret for the unwarranted reference he has made and for the observations in para. 3 and 4 of the reference, which he now realises, were disrespectful to this Court. In view of this apology, I do not wish to pursue the matter further and dismiss it as a lapse on the part of an officer, whose zeal as an executive officer responsible for maintaining law and order has outweighed his duties as a Magistrate subordinate to this Court. But I must add for the benefit of the judicial Officers and Magistrates subordinate to this Court that a decision of this Court may not appear to them as laying down the correct law. It may be subsequently overruled by this Court or set aside by the Supreme Court. But so long as it has not been so overruled or set aside, it is binding on all. Judicial Officers and Magistrates have not the liberty of criticising the decisions of this Court. Much less can they deliver to this Court a homily on the matters it should take into consideration while examining the correctness of any decision. If they do so, their act is, no doubt, in common parlance an act of insubordination, but in law it amounts to a contempt of Court and they are liable to be dealt with as such for that act. The fact that the criticism or the suggestions have been made by a Judicial Officer or a Magistrate in the course of judicial proceedings cannot alter the nature of the act. There is ample authority for the proposition that Judges of inferior Courts and Magistrates can be punished for contempt of Court for acting unjustly, oppressively or 'irregularly in the execution of their duties' by colour of judicial proceedings wholly unwarranted by law, or for disobeying writs issued by the High Court requiring them to proceed or not to proceed in matters before them. See — 'Rex v. Davies', (1906) 1 KB 32; Hallsbury's Laws of England, Halisham edition, Volume 7 para. 35; — 'Satinath Sikdar v. Ratanmani Naskar', 14 Ind Cas 808 (Cal); — 'In re-Palani Kumara Chinnayya', AIR 1922 Mad 337.

(4) With these observations I reject the reference. It is needless to say that it is open to the state to move the Sessions Judge of Bhind for the cancellation of bail on the ground that in the facts and circumstances of the case, the Additional District Magistrate, Bhind should not have exercised his discretion in favour of the accused persons in granting them anticipatory bail.

Gyarsibai w/o Jagannath, Appellant v. The State.

Criminal Appeal No. 5 of 1952, D/- 23-10-52.
Penal Code (1860), S. 300 (4) — "Without any excuse aforesaid" — Woman jumping in well with her children — Death of children — Offence.

The words "without any excuse..... aforesaid" indicate that the imminently dangerous act is not murder if it is done to prevent a greater evil. If the evil can be avoided without doing the act, then there can be no valid justification for doing the act which is so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause death or such injury as is likely to cause death. (Para 5)

There used to be constant quarrels between the accused and her sister-in-law. At one of such quarrels the sister-in-law asked the accused to leave the house. Thereupon, the accused left the house, taking her three children with her and saying that on account of her sister-in-law she would jump into a well. Soon after, she went to a well and threw herself into the well along with the children who died. The accused was rescued.

Held that the act of the accused in jumping into the well with her children was clearly one done by her knowing that it must in all probability cause the death of her children. She had no excuse for incurring the risk of causing the death of her children. The fact that there were quarrels between her and sister-in-law and that her life had become unbearable on account of this family discord could not be regarded as a valid justification. The act of the accused was, therefore, clearly murder under S. 300 (4). AIR 1940 All 486 and AIR 1925 Bom 310, Disting.

L. XIT J.: The appellant has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Shajapur of an offence under S. 302, Penal Code, for the murder of her three children and also of an offence under S. 309, Penal Code, for an attempt to commit suicide. She has been sentenced to transportation for life under S. 302, Penal Code, and to six months simple imprisonment under S. 309, Penal Code. Both these sentences have been directed to run concurrently. She has now preferred this appeal from Jail against the convictions and sentences.

(2) The facts of this case are very simple. The prosecution alleged that the appellant, her children, her husband Jagannath and her sister-in-law Kaisar Bai used to reside together. There were constant quarrels between the appellant and her sister-in-law and very often Jagannath used to slap the appellant for picking up a quarrel with her sister-in-law Kaisar Bai. It is alleged that one such quarrel took place on the morning of 14-8-1951 when Jagannath was away from his home. In this quarrel Kaisar Bai asked the appellant to leave the house. Thereupon, the appellant left the house, taking her three children aged 7 years, 5 years and 1½ years and saying that on account of her sister-in-law she would jump into a well. Soon after, the appellant went to a well in the village and threw herself into the well along with her three children. A few hours after, some inhabitants of the village found Gyarasibai supporting herself on an edge of the well and the three children dead in the well. The appellant admitted before the Committing Magistrate as well as before the Sessions Judge that she jumped into the well together with her children on account of her sister-in-law Kaisar Bai's harassment.

(3) The facts have been amply established by the prosecution evidence. From the statement of Kaisar Bai and Narayan it is clear that on the morning of the day of occurrence, there was a quarrel between Kaisar Bai and Gyarasi Bai, and during this quarrel when Kaisar Bai asked the appellant to leave the house, she left the house with her three children saying that she would jump into a well. Kaisar Bai also admits that some times Jagannath used to give two or three slaps to the appellant for quarrelling with her. The other prosecution witnesses deposed to the recovery of the bodies of three children and to the rescue of the appellant. There is no eye-witness of the fact that the appellant jumped down the well herself together with her three children. But from the statements of Kaisar Bai, Narayan and the statement of the appellant herself before the Committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge, I am satisfied that the version given by the appellant in her own statement is correct and that she jumped into the well herself along with her three children in order to escape harassment at the hands of her sister-in-law Kaisar Bai.

(4) On these facts the only question that arises for consideration is whether the appellant is guilty of the offence of murder of the three children and of attempted suicide. The learned Sessions Judge has found her guilty under S. 302, Penal Code, but he has not stated under which clause of S. 300, Penal Code, the act of the appellant in jumping down into a well together with her three children is murder. I think this act of the appellant clearly falls under the 4th clause of S. 300, Penal Code, which defines murder. On the facts it is clear that the appellant Gyarasi Bai had no intention to cause the death of any of her children and she jumped into the well not with the intention of killing her children but with the intention of committing suicide. That being so, Cls. 1, 2 and 3 of S. 300, Penal Code, which apply to cases in which death is caused by an act done with the intention of causing death or causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause the death of person or sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death cannot be applied to the present case. The only clause of S. 300, Penal Code, which then remains for consideration is the 4th clause. This clause says:

"If the person committing the act knows that it is so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause death, or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death and commits such act without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death or such injury as aforesaid."

(5) It will be seen from this clause that if death is caused merely by doing an act with the knowledge that it is so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause death, then the act is not murder as is defined in clause 4, but is mere culpable homicide not amounting to murder. In order that an act done with such knowledge should constitute murder, it is essential that it should have been committed "without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death or such bodily injury". The question, therefore, is whether when the appellant jumped into the well together with her three children, she had the knowledge that her act was so imminently dangerous, as to cause in all probability the death of her children and further whether if she had such knowledge her act in jumping into a well with her children was "without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death or such bodily injury as is mentioned in cl. 4 of S. 300, Penal Code. Now I think it cannot be said in the present case, with any degree of force that when the appellant jumped into a well with her children she had not the knowledge that her act was so imminently dangerous as to cause the death of her children. Her life might have become unbearable owing to domestic troubles and perhaps on account of these troubles, she decided to take her own life. I am also prepared to hold that on account of the discord in the house, the appellant was subjected to severe exasperation and to a long course of conduct causing suffering and anxiety. But when on account of all these reasons, she left the house on the day of the occurrence saying that she would jump into a well with her children, it cannot be said that she was in such an abnormal state of mind that could not have any knowledge of the nature of her act.

Every sane person—and in this case we are bound to take it that the appellant was sane—is presumed to have some knowledge of the nature of his act. This knowledge is not negated by any mental condition short of insanity. In my opinion, the act of the appellant in jumping into a well with her children is clearly one done by the appellant knowing that it must in all probability cause the death of her children. I do not find any circumstances to come to the conclusion that the appellant had some excuse for incurring the risk of causing the death of her children. The fact that there were quarrels between the appellant and sister-in-law and that her life had become unbearable on account of this family discord, cannot be regarded as a valid justification for appellant's act of jumping into a well with her children.

The words used in cl. 4 of S. 300, Penal Code are "without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death or such injury as aforesaid". These words indicate that the imminently dangerous act is not murder if it is done to prevent a greater evil. If the evil can be avoided without doing the act, then there can be no valid justification for doing the act which is so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause death or such injury as is likely to cause death. Here there is no material, whatsoever, to come to the conclusion that the appellant could not have escaped the harassment at the hands of her sister-in-law except by jumping herself into a well with her three children. I am, therefore, inclined to think that the appellant's act is clearly murder under cl. 4 of S. 300, Penal Code.

(6) I must, however, notice two cases in which the question of the offence constituted by an act of a woman deliberately jumping into a well with a child in circumstances somewhat different to those present in this case has been considered. The first case is one reported in — 'Emperor v. Dhirajia', ILR (1940) All 647. In this case a village woman left her home with her six months old baby in her arms on account of her husband's illtreatment; after she had gone some distance from the home, she turned round and saw her husband pursuing her. She became panicky and jumped down into a well nearby with the baby in her arms. The baby died, but the woman survived. On these facts, the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court held that an intention to cause the death of the child could not be attributed to the woman, though she must be attributed with the knowledge that such an imminently dangerous act as jumping down the well was likely to cause the child's death.

But the learned Judges held that considering the state of panic she was in, the culpable homicide did not amount to murder as there was an excuse for incurring the risk of causing death. Mst. Dhirajia was thus found guilty under S. 304, Penal Code. It is not necessary to consider whether upon the facts of that case, the conclusion that the woman was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder was justified. But it must be observed that the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court thought that the fear of her husband and the panic into which she was thrown could be an excuse for incurring the risk of causing death. Here there is no question of any panic or fright of the appellant. It is, no doubt, true, as the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court say that in assessing what is excuse or is not excuse, we must consider the state of mind in which the accused person was.

But I think in considering the question we must take into account the state of mind of a reasonable and legally sane person and then determine whether the risk of causing death could have been avoided. On this test, there can be no room for thinking in the present case that the appellant was justified in jumping into a well with her three children merely on account of her sister-in-law's attitude towards her. The other decision is of the Bombay High Court in — 'Supadi Lukada v. Emperor', AIR 1925 Bom 310. In that case too, a girl of about 17 years of age who was carrying her baby on her back jumped into a well because her husband had ill-treated her and had prevented her from returning to her parents.

The learned Judges of the Bombay High Court held that when the girl attempted to commit suicide by jumping into a well she could not be said to have been in a normal condition and was not, therefore, even aware of the child's presence and that as she was not conscious of the child, there was not such knowledge as to make S. 300 (4) applicable. The learned Judges of the Bombay High Court found the girl guilty under S. 304-A. The Bombay case is clearly distinguishable on the facts. In the present case when the evidence shows that the appellant left her home saying that she would jump into a well with her three children, it cannot clearly be held that she was not aware that her children were with her. In my opinion, these two cases are not of much assistance to the appellant.

(7) As regards the conviction of the appellant for an attempt to commit suicide, I think she has been rightly convicted of that offence. When she jumped into the well, she did so in a conscious effort to take her own life.

(8) The appellant has been sentenced to transportation for life under S. 302, Penal Code. This is the only sentence which could legally be passed in this case. But having regard to the fact and circumstances of the case and also to the fact that the appellant though not legally insane was not and could not be in a normal state of mind when she jumped into a well with her three children, I think this is not a case deserving of a severe punishment. I would, therefore, recommend to the Government to commute the sentence of transportation for life to one of three years rigorous imprisonment. The sentence of six months' simple imprisonment awarded to the appellant for the offence under S. 309 is appropriate.

(9) In the result this appeal is dismissed.

Civ. Misc. Appeal No. 12 of 2004 (Madh B) 5

JUDGMENT: This is an appeal directed against the judgment and decree of the Additional District Judge, Ujjain, by which he held that the execution of a decree by the decree-holder is barred by the provisions of section 48 C. P. C. as the application for execution was made more than 12 years after the date of the original decree passed on 6-10-1928.

(2) If the decree-holder had sought for execution of the decree of 1928 there is no question that an application would have been barred by limitation. But it appears in this case that in the execution of the original decree, in which there were more than one execution proceedings, at one such proceeding, the parties came to terms and in execution case No. 468 of 1991 a compromise was entered into by the parties and certified by the Court on 16-2-1938 and the judgment-debtor promised to satisfy the remaining claim by instalments. It was agreed that in default of payment of instalments on specified date the decree-holder would be entitled to realise entire sum by execution. When the execution application No. 264 of 1998 was filed the judgment-debtor objected that the decree was incapable of execution by the 12 years rule. This objection was overruled and the appeal was also dismissed on 22nd Dec. 1943. Then another execution application was filed on 25-7-1946 and it was mentioned that it was for the revival of the execution case No. 264 of 1998 and the judgment-debtor again raised the same objection.

This objection was overruled by the executing Court but in appeal the learned Additional District Judge, Ujjain, placed reliance on — 'Zaheer-ud-Din v. Mt. Amtur Rasheed', A. I. R. 1944 Lah. 106 for the proposition that an order of the Court which does not direct the payment of money at a certain date or at recurring periods but merely takes notice of and refers to the compromise to pay the decretal amount by instalments does not come within section 48 sub-clause (1) (b) and cannot give rise to a fresh starting point of limitation. It had been held in this Lahore case that in the absence of any direction by the Court to the parties to receive and pay the money in accordance with the fresh contract arrived at between them, the order cannot be construed so as to contain a direction in regard to the payment of money at any date different from what was provided by the decree.

(3) The same view had been held in — 'Gobardhan Das v. Dau Dayal', AIR 1932 All. 273: 54 All. 573 (FB). But after the Privy Council ruling in — 'Oudh Commercial Bank Ltd. Faizabad v. Bindbasni Kuer', 66 Ind App 84: 14 Luck 192: AIR 1939 P. C. 80 it was held by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in — 'Chhatra Pati Pertab Bahadur v. Hari Ram', ILR (1940) All 536: AIR 1940

All 423 that a compromise between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor entered into in the course of the execution proceedings, which was duly recorded is enforceable in execution proceedings and that the period of twelve years would be computed from the date of the default of payment of the instalment.

(4) Subsequent to this ruling several Courts have held that once the Court accepts the compromise and passes an order striking off the execution proceedings the Court intends that the decretal amount should be payable by instalments and the order which it passes striking off the execution proceedings is in essence and substance an order made under section 48 of the C. P. C. which extends the period of limitation. So there is a conflict of opinion on the point.

(5) I remember of a case — 'Bal Kishan v. Laxman Rao', Civil Misc. Appeal No. 12 of 2004 (Madh. B.) in which I, as a Judge of the Gwalior State High Court, referred this point to a Division Bench for determination of this question. The Division Bench (Dixit C.J. & myself) dissented from the proposition enunciated in — 'Zheer-ud-Din v. Mt. Amtur Rasheed', AIR 1944 Lah 106 and relying on certain observations made by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in — 'Oudh Commercial Bank Ltd. Faizabad v. Bindbasni Kuer', AIR 1939 PC 80 concurred in the views propounded by the Allahabad High Court in three cases in 1940. These cases are reported at pages 107, 270 and 423 of 1940 Vol. of All India Reporter — 'Bhiki Mal Murari Lal v. Kundan Lal', A. I. R. 1940 All 107, — 'Mahendra Rao v. Bishambhar Nath', AIR 1940 All 270 (FB) and — 'Chhatra Pati Pertab Bahadur v. Hari Ram', AIR 1940 All 423. Subsequently it appears, the same view was taken by Justice Rege in — 'Punam Chand v. Jagannath', 1949 Madh. B. L. R. 95 in which it was held that if the compromise contained any operative words, those words become an order of the executing Court and that being so, they would come within the intention of the word 'any subsequent order' contained in section 48, sub clause (1)(b) C.P.C.

(6) On a review of these cases I come to the conclusion that where original decree has been converted by compromise into a decree for payment by instalments and the decree-holder cannot execute the decree until the judgment-debtor has defaulted, the decree-holder's application though after 12 years from the date of the original decree, but within three years of the last payment by the judgment-debtor under the compromise, should be held to be within time. The judgment-debtor, in my opinion, is also precluded from contending that the mode of payment of the decree by instalments agreed to by him is not binding on him.

(7) In this view of the matter in my judgment the learned Additional District Judge, Ujjain, was clearly in error and his order must be set aside. I therefore hold that the execution was within limitation.

(8) I would therefore allow this appeal with costs, set aside the judgment and the decree passed by the Additional District Judge Ujjain, and, restore the order of the City Sub Judge Ujjain so far as the point of limitation is concerned.

Sarup Chand and Hukumchand, a firm of Indore, Petitioners v. Union of India and another, Opponents.

Civil Misc. Case No. 6 of 1952, D/- 10-11-1952.

† * (a) Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 2 (14 A), Proviso (b), 3, 4, 4A, 4B, 64 — Assesseees in Madhya Bharat — Liability to assessment in respect of income accruing in year from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50.

The combined result of sub-cl. (i) and (ii) of cl. (b) of the proviso to S. 2 (14 A) is to give jurisdiction to the Income-tax Officer, Indore, to charge the assesseees to tax in respect of the income which accrued to them in the year ending on 31-3-50 in a taxable territory without Madhya Bharat, it being an income which accrued to the assesseees who are deemed to be 'resident' in the taxable territories of Madhya Bharat in that year under sub-cl. (i) of cl. (b) of the proviso. Under sub-cl. (iii) the income which accrued to the assesseees in Madhya Bharat during the period from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 is an income which accrued in a taxable territory for the purpose of making any assessment of the year ending on 31-3-51. It is clear from a careful reading of Ss. 3, 4, 4A, 4B and 2 (14A) of the Act that once it is held that under cl. (b), (iii) of the proviso to S. 2 (14A) a Part 'B' State is, during the period from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 which is a period included in the previous year for the purpose of making an assessment of the year ending on 31-3-1951 or for any subsequent year, a taxable territory, it follows as a necessary and logical conclusion that chargeability of the income accruing in that year to tax arises under Ss. 3 and 4 of the Act. When, the express words of the proviso to S. 2 (14A) make the income accruing in Madhya Bharat in the year from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 chargeable to tax under the Act, the effect of these words cannot be narrowed or whittled down by applying a rule of construction about statutes which are not by express words or necessary intendment retrospective. The income which accrued to the assesseees in the year from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 in Madhya Bharat is chargeable to tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, and that irrespective of whether this income is, or is not chargeable under the Act, sub-cl. (i) and (ii) of Cl. (b) of the proviso of S. 2 (14A) read with S. 64 give jurisdiction to the Income-tax Officer, Indore, to tax the assesseees in respect of the income which they derived in that year from without Madhya Bharat. restrictions on the powers of the Dominion Legislature. Nor does the Article preserve Ss. 6 and 101 of the repealed Government of India Act, 1935, which permitted restrictions being put on the power of the Dominion Legislature by Instruments of Accession. There is no justification for reading Art. 372 (1) as laying down any limitation upon the power of the Parliament to amend the Income-tax Act and make it applicable to Part 'B' States so as to tax income accruing in States prior to 26-1-50. (e) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 64 (3) — Objection as to place of assessment.

An objection as to the place of assessment must be specific and sub-s. (3) becomes operative only when a question as to the place of assessment arises. If, therefore, the statements made by an assessee in his return about the principal place of business or residence in any area are accepted by the Income-tax Officer, it cannot be said that there is for determination a question as to the place of assessment. The fact that the return filed by the assessee was marked as 'under protest', does not mean that the assessee raised an objection as to the place of assessment. The statement by the assessee to the effect that the income which accrued to him in Madhya Bharat in the year 1949-50 could not be taxed under the Income-tax Act and that, therefore, he was not liable to pay any tax, cannot be read as even suggesting remotely that the assessee objected to the place of assessment. The question as to the place of assessment is more one of administrative convenience than of jurisdiction. It cannot be said that the assessment is bad as the Income-tax Officer did not follow the procedure laid down in S. 64 (3). AIR 1945 FC 9, Foll. (Para 25)

Anno: Income-tax Act, S. 64 N. 3.

(f) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 64 — Jurisdiction of Income-tax Officer to assess.

Where the assessee's principal place of business is Indore and the family resides in Indore, the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, Indore, to assess the assessee is not excluded by the fact that the Income-tax Officer, Bombay, has commenced assessment proceedings in respect of the income accruing and received by the assessee within his area.

(g) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 30 — Provisional assessment — Denial of liability to be assessed — Appeal.

Under S. 23B there is no right of appeal against a provisional assessment. Under S. 30 (1), an appeal lies against any assessment made under any of the sub-sections of S. 23 and against certain orders of the Income-tax Officer which are expressly specified in S. 30 (1). No appeal lies before any assessment is made. An assessee who denies his liability to be assessed is entitled to appeal on that ground only after the assessment is made. (Para 27) Anno: Income-tax Act, S. 30 N. 1.

(h) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Order restraining Income-tax officer from enforcing assessment — Order by Income-tax Officer passed on same day subsequent to High Court's order — Validity.

The Income-tax Officer made a provisional assessment and assessed the assessee to a tax in respect of the income and gave a notice to the assessee on 19-2-52. Thereafter on 28-2-52 application under Art. 226 was presented and the assessee obtained from the High Court on 29-2-52 an order restraining the non-applicants from enforcing or taking any steps to enforce the provisional assessment order and the notice of the demand of the tax. This order was served on the Income-tax Officer on 3-3-52. But the order imposing penalty was passed by the Income-tax Officer at the close of the day after the High Court had issued earlier in the day the order of injunction.

Held that the order of the Income-tax Officer imposing penalty was clearly without jurisdiction and illegal.

Held further that the warmth and vehemence with which the counsel for the assessee urged that the Income-tax Officer desired to forestall the High Court was justified in the circumstances of the case.

DIXIT, J.: This is an application by the petitioners styling themselves as the firm Messrs Sarup Chand Hukumchand of Indore, under Art. 226, Constitution of India, for a writ of certiorari and a writ of prohibition or a writ of like nature or an order, for quashing a provisional assessment of the tax payable by the firm for the assessment year 1950-1951, made by the Income-tax Officer, Indore, under S. 23B, Income-tax Act, 1922, and for restraining the opponents from enforcing the assessment order and a notice of demand dated 19-2-52 by which the applicants were directed to pay the amount of the tax, namely Rs. 2,58,154-8-0 on or before 29-2-1952. The petitioners have also filed another application in these proceedings challenging the propriety and validity of an order said to have been made on 29-2-52 by the Income-tax Officer, ignoring an order of interim injunction issued by this Court on 29-2-52 prohibiting the Income-tax Officer from taking any action to enforce the provisional assessment and the notice of the demand dated 19-2-52, and imposing a penalty of Rs. 25,000/- for the failure of the petitioners to pay the amount of the tax before the time fixed for its payment.

(2) The case of the petitioners before us is that until 31-3-50, they carried on business as a firm of Shroffs and also dealt in gold, silver speculation business and that the firm had its offices at Bombay, Calcutta, Ujjain and Indore; that on or about 25-11-1950 the Income-tax Officer 'A' Ward Indore, issued a notice under S. 22, Income-tax Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act) to Sir Hukumchand, a member of the petitioner-firm requiring him to make a return of his income for the income-tax assessment year 1950-1951. In response to this notice, Sir Hukumchand while submitting a return under protest, addressed a letter dated 19-12-50 to the Income-tax Officer saying that as the Act was made applicable to Madhya Bharat only from 1-4-50, he could not be asked to furnish a return of his income prior to 1-4-50 or assessed any tax on that income. In the letter Sir Hukumchand also stated that he was a member of Hindu undivided family and as such had no separate source of income and further that he was submitting the return of the income "with a view to avoid penal action without admitting any liability to tax under the Indian Income-tax for 1950-51". On 6-1-51 the Income-tax Officer informed Sir Hukumchand that the return of the income required from him was of the Hindu undivided family and not in his capacity as an individual and that accordingly in the return the income accruing to the family be shown.

Nothing was done regarding the filing of a return of the income of the undivided family until 4-1-52. On this date, the Income-tax Officer sent a letter to Sir Hukumchand drawing his attention to the fact that although a notice under S. 22(2) of the Act had been duly served on him as far back as 25-11-50, he had not submitted a return of the total income and total world income for the assessment year 1950-1951. After referring to the provisions of the Act with regard to his power to make an assessment to the best of his judgment in default of a return, the Income-tax Officer advised Sir Hukumchand to furnish a return of the income without any further delay. The Income-tax Officer also mentioned in this letter "that as a special case it has been decided by the Government that tax-demand for the assessment year 1950-1951 will not be enforced till the decision of the Supreme Court in the appeal pending before them."

We are informed by the learned Counsel for the parties that the appeal referred to in this letter is an appeal from the decision of the Rajasthan High Court in — 'Madan Gopal v. Union of India', AIR 1951 Raj 94. As a sequel to this letter Sir Hukumchand filed on 18-2-52 a return of the total income and the total world income accruing to his Hindu undivided family during the previous year ending on 31-3-1950.

In the return which was marked as 'under protest' the principal place of business was shown as Indore; the income arising in Madhya Bharat was shown as Rs. 18,84,604/- while the income arising without Madhya Bharat was shown as Rs. 3,37,380. On receipt of the return, the Income-tax Officer made a provisional assessment of the tax on the income arising outside Madhya Bharat and assessed the petitioners to a tax of Rs. 2,58,154-8-0 in respect of the income and gave a notice to Sir Hukum Chand on 19-2-52 to pay the amount of the tax on or before 29-2-52. On this very date, the Income-tax Officer wrote a letter to Sir Hukumchand explaining the provisional assessment and pointing out to him the fact that the assurance given by him in his letter of 4-1-52 related to the postponement of the assessment of the income accruing in Madhya Bharat only and not to the postponement of the assessment of the income arising outside Madhya Bharat, about the assessment of which there was no dispute. Thereafter on 28-2-52 this application was presented and the petitioners obtained from this Court on 29-2-52 an order restraining the non-applicants from enforcing or taking any steps to enforce the provisional assessment order and the notice of the demand of the tax. This order was served on the Income-tax Officer on 3-3-52. But it appears that in the meantime the Income-tax Officer passed an order on 29-2-52 recording the fact that the amount of tax provisionally determined as payable by Sir Hukum Chand had not been paid till the close of the treasury on 29-2-52 and imposing upon him a penalty of Rs. 25,000/- under S. 46(1) of the Act.

(3) In this petition, the validity of the assessment is questioned on the grounds that (1) as Madhya Bharat became a taxable territory from 1-4-50, the income accruing or arising to the petitioners or received by them before this date was not liable in Madhya Bharat to any income-tax or super tax and that, therefore, the Income-tax Officer had no power or authority to assess the petitioners to any tax for the assessment year 1950-1951 on any income whether arising within or without Madhya Bharat; (2) that Parliament had no power to make any law imposing income-tax or super-tax on any income accruing or arising in Madhya Bharat prior to 26-1-50; (3) and that no proper or valid notice was issued or served on the petitioners under S. 22(2) of the Act. The petitioners also make a grievance that in making the provisional assessment of the tax on income arising outside Madhya Bharat the Income-tax Officer has gone behind the assurance given by him in his letter dated 4-1-52.

It is further said that for the last several years the petitioners had been assessed to tax by the Income-tax Officer Bombay in respect of their income arising outside Madhya Bharat and that the Income-tax Officer of Indore had no jurisdiction to change the place of assessment and assess the petitioners in Indore in respect of the said income. At the hearing of this petition the petitioners filed a further affidavit stating that they had already filed before the Income-tax Officer, Bombay, returns of the income of the firm of Messrs Sarup Chand Hukum Chand for the assessment years 1948-1949, 1949-50 and 50-51. It is, however, admitted in para 3 of this affidavit, that no return for the assessment years 1949-50 and 1950-51 of the income of the Hindu undivided family of Sir Hukum Chand has been filed before the Income-tax Officer, Bombay.

(4) The facts and circumstances narrated above, in which the provisional assessment was made and the notice of demand was issued to the petitioners, are not disputed by the non-applicants. It is, however, denied by them that during the material period the petitioners were a firm carrying on business in Bombay, Indore and other places. The non-applicants maintain that the status of the petitioners according to the return filed by them is that of a Hindu undivided family. As to the grounds on which the petitioners challenge the assessment, the rejoinder of the Income-tax Officer, Indore, is that S. 3 read with proviso (b) to S. 2(14A) of the Act authorises the levy of the tax on incomes which accrued, arose or were received in Madhya Bharat prior to 1-4-50; that Parliament has the power under Art. 246 of the Constitution read with the agreement entered into between the President of India and the Raj Pramukh of Madhya Bharat on 26-2-50 to impose tax on income which accrued, arose or was received in Madhya Bharat prior to 26-1-50 and that the provisions of Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and the Indian Finance Act, 1950, which authorise the levy of the tax for the year 1950-1951 are neither ultra vires nor illegal.

As regards the validity of the notice the non-applicants stated in para 11A of the return that "the validity or otherwise of the notice under S. 22(2) has no importance for the point to be decided by the Hon'ble High Court. A return can be filed either voluntarily under S. 22(1) or by an order of the Income-tax Officer under S. 22(2). The provisional assessment now in dispute was made after the receipt of such a return and hence the objection of the petitioners is uncalled for."

The opponent No. 2 also submits in his reply to the petition that as under the Act a person can be assessed only by one Income-tax Officer on all income arising at different places, he had jurisdiction to assess the petitioners to tax in respect of the income arising outside Madhya Bharat. According to non-applicant 2 the assurance contained in his letter dated 4-1-52 was only with regard to the postponement of the assessment of the tax on the petitioner's income in part B States. Lastly, it is submitted in the return that the petitioners have no case for the issue of any of the writs prayed for and that they have other specific and adequate legal remedy for challenging the provisional assessment.

(5) It will be seen from what has been stated above that the petitioners have been assessed to tax for the assessment year 1950-1951 not on the income which accrued to them in Madhya Bharat but on the income arising without Madhya Bharat, to wit in Part A States. The liability of the petitioners to pay tax on this income on an assessment in a Part A State is not disputed before us. The main complaint of the applicants is that the Income-tax Officer Indore has no jurisdiction to assess them to tax on the income which they derived from without Madhya Bharat during the year ending on 31-3-50; that it is the competent Income-tax Officer in Part A State who alone can make an assessment of tax on this income and that as a matter of fact assessment proceedings in respect of this income are pending before the Income-tax Officer, Bombay. The real question for decision, therefore, is as to the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, Indore to assess the petitioners to tax in respect of the income which accrued to them outside Madhya Bharat in the assessment year 1950-1951.

But Mr. Kolah the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioners has made the question of the assessability of the income which accrued to the applicants within Madhya Bharat in the year ending on 31-3-50 as the foundation of his attack on the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, Indore, to tax the income which the applicants derived from without Madhya Bharat. It, therefore, becomes necessary to consider the question whether the income which accrued to the petitioners in Madhya Bharat in the accounting year 1949-1950 is liable to tax.

(6) I do not propose to set out here the elaborate and helpful arguments of the learned Counsel for the petitioners and of Mr. Chitale the learned Advocate General of Madhya Bharat who appeared on behalf of the Union of India. A reference will be made to them, where necessary, while dealing with the questions raised by the submissions made by the learned Counsel. The questions are (1) whether under S. 3 read with S. 2(14A) of the Act, the income accruing to the petitioner in the accounting year 1949-1950 in Madhya Bharat is liable to tax; (2) whether if the said income is not liable to tax, the Income-tax Officer, Indore, can assess tax on the petitioners' income which accrued to them in Part A States during the year ending on 31-3-50; (3) whether the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, as amended by the Indian Finance Act, 1950, in so far as they authorise the levy of the tax on income accruing in Madhya Bharat in the period prior to 26-1-50 are ultra vires; (4) whether the notice issued to the petitioners under S. 22 of the Act requiring them to submit a return of their undivided family was a valid notice; (5) and whether the petitioners raised before the Income-tax Officer, Indore, an objection as to the place of assessment; and, if they did, whether the Income-tax Officer was right in making the assessment without following the procedure laid down in S. 64(3) for the determination of the question as to the place of assessment.

(7) The first two questions involve the true construction of S. 2(14A) of the Act and the proviso to it or really the construction of the proviso. Before considering the proviso, it is pertinent to observe that the Income-tax Act, 1922, was made applicable to Madhya Bharat from 1-4-50. Prior to this date, there was no law imposing tax on income in the territories comprising of the former Indore State or of any other covenanting State of Madhya Bharat. The Finance Act, 1950, amended the Income-tax Act and made it applicable to the whole of India except the State of Jammu and Kashmir and inter alia introduced in the Act a definition of the term "taxable territories". Now under S. 3 of the Act, income-tax is charged at the rate or rates fixed for the year by the Annual Finance Act. The charge is on every individual, Hindu undivided family, company, local authority, firm itself or partners of the firm individually, and other association of persons or the members of the association individually. The income taxed is that of the previous year and not of the year of assessment. The levy of the tax is on the total income of the assessee computed in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the Act. Section 2(15) defines "total income" as

"total amount of income, profits and gains referred to in sub-s. (1) of S. 4 computed in a manner laid down in this Act."

The material provision of S. 4(1) is as follows:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, the total income of any previous year of any person includes all income, profits and gains from whatever source derived which—

(a) are received or are deemed to be received in the taxable territories in such year by or on behalf of such person; or

(b) if such person is resident in the taxable territories during such year,—

(i) accrue or arise or are deemed to accrue or arise to him in the taxable territories during such year, or

(ii) accrue or arise to him without the taxable territories during such year, or

(iii) having accrued or arisen to him without the taxable territories before the beginning of such year and after the 1st day of April, 1933, are brought into or received in the taxable territories by him during such year, or

(c) if such person is not resident in the taxable territories during such year, accrue or arise or are deemed to accrue or arise to him in the taxable territories during such year."

(8) The effect of Ss. 3 and 4 is to tax the person resident in the taxable territories during the previous year, that is, the year previous to the year of assessment on all his income whencesoever derived and to tax the person not resident in the taxable territories upon all income which accrued or deemed to have accrued to the person in the taxable territories during the previous year.

(9) It is thus clear from Ss. 3 and 4 of the Act that if Madhya Bharat was a taxable territory in the year ending on 31-3-1950, the petitioners are assessable by reference to the income which they derived within or without Madhya Bharat in that year. Learned Counsel for the petitioners, however, contends that under S. 2(14A) Madhya Bharat became a taxable territory from 1-4-1950 and was not a taxable territory during the accounting year 1949-1950. In support of this contention he strongly relied on the decision of the Rajasthan High Court in — 'Madan Gopal v. Union of India', AIR 1951 Raj 94, which he read out to us in extenso. He supplemented the reading by addressing arguments to emphasise the conclusions arrived at by the learned Judges of the Rajasthan High Court and their reasons for the conclusions.

Mr. Chitale on the other hand urged that though under sub-cl. (d) and (e) of S. 2(14A) Madhya Bharat became a taxable territory from 1-4-1950, the proviso (b), (iii) to that section treats Madhya Bharat as if it were a taxable territory during the period from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 for the purpose of making any assessment and that on a plain and natural construction of the wording of cl. (b), (iii) of the proviso, the income which accrued to the petitioners in the year ending on 31-3-50 was chargeable to income-tax under S. 3 of the Act. The question raised must, therefore, be decided by an examination of the provisions of S. 2(14A). This section classifies "taxable territories" into five categories as respects different period of time. I do not propose to burden the judgment with the details of the now too well-known historical changes in the territory of India during the years 1947-50 which form the basis of the classification in S. 2(14A). They have been noted with clarity in para 16 of the decision of the Rajasthan High Court. For our purposes it is sufficient to refer to the material provisions of S. 2(14A).

"Taxable territories" means—

.....

(d) as respects any period after 31-3-1950 and before 13-4-1950, the territory of India excluding the State of Jammu and Kashmir and the Patiala and East Punjab States Union, and

(e) as respects any period after 12-4-1950, the territory of India excluding the State of Jammu and Kashmir:

Provided that the taxable territories shall be deemed to include—

.....

(b) The whole of the territory of India excluding the State of Jammu and Kashmir—

(i) as respects any period, for the purposes of Ss. 4A and 4B,

(ii) as respects any period after 31-3-1950, for any of the purposes of this Act, and

(iii) as respects any period included in the previous year for the purpose of making any assessment of the year ending on 31-3-1951, or for any subsequent year;"

(10) It will be noted from these provisions that if the matter stood alone on cls. (d) and (e) of S. 2(14A) without the proviso, then the territories of Madhya Bharat could not be regarded as taxable territories during the accounting year 1949-1950 and the Income-tax Officer, Indore, would have no jurisdiction to assess the petitioners on the income which accrued to them in Madhya Bharat during that year. But when the words of the proviso (b) are written in, as they must be written in, to S. 2(14A) then on a true construction of the proviso, a fiction is created and the whole of the territory of India including Madhya Bharat but excluding the State of Jammu and Kashmir is regarded as taxable territory as respects certain periods and certain purposes not otherwise covered by the cls. (d) and (e) of the substantive part of the definition of "taxable territory" given in S. 2(14A). Thus, so far as Madhya Bharat is concerned, whereas under cls. (d) and (e) of the substantive part of the definition "taxable territory", it is not a taxable territory as respects any period prior to 1-4-1950, it is deemed to be such under the proviso (b), (i) for the purposes of S. 4A and 4B. I do not think that the words "any period" in cl. (b), (i) of the proviso can be construed as meaning any period after 31-3-50. For to do so is to ignore the full effect of the words "shall be deemed to include" which occur in the proviso. Sub-cl. (ii) of cl. (b) of the proviso regards the whole of the territory of India excluding the State of Jammu and Kashmir as taxable territory as respects any period after 31-3-1950, for any of the purposes of the Act.

When it is remembered that under cls. (d) and (e) of the definition the Patiala and East Punjab States Union become taxable territory from 13-4-50, the effect of this sub-clause of the proviso is inter alia to artificially regard the Patiala and East Punjab State as a taxable territory from 1-4-50 for any of the purposes of the Act. But on a plain and natural meaning of the words of this clause, this does not appear to me the sole object of the clause. It is also to place beyond dispute the fact that it is not for any particular purpose or purposes that the whole of the territory of India is a taxable territory as respects any period after 31-3-1950, but that it is so, for any of the purpose of the Act. This clause, as the learned Advocate General suggested, enables the authorities appointed under the Act to set in motion the whole procedure laid down in the Act from 1-4-1950, in the territories which were before this date not taxable territories and where the machinery under the Act did not exist. To me, it seems that the combined result of sub-cl. (i) and (ii) of cl. (b) of the proviso, so far as the petitioners are concerned, is to give jurisdiction to the Income-tax Officer, Indore, to charge them to tax in respect of the income which accrued to them in the year ending on 31-3-50 in a taxable territory without Madhya Bharat, it being an income which accrued to the petitioners who are deemed to be 'resident' in the taxable territories of Madhya Bharat in that year under sub-cl. (i) of cl. (b) of the proviso. Coming now to sub-cl. (iii) of cl. (b) of the proviso, we find its language plain enough. It makes the whole of the territory of India including Madhya Bharat and excluding the State of Jammu and Kashmir a taxable territory during the period from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 for the purpose of making any assessment of the year ending on 31-3-1951. Under this clause the income which accrued to the petitioners in Madhya Bharat during the period 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 is an income which accrued in a taxable territory for the purpose of making any assessment of the year ending on 31-3-51.

(11) At this state it would be convenient to refer to the decision of the Rajasthan High Court on which the learned Counsel for the petitioners has founded his arguments, and the reasoning and the conclusions of which he commends us for acceptance. In that case the question arose whether under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, income accruing or arising in Rajasthan (which is also like Madhya Bharat a Part B State) before it became on 1-4-1950 a taxable territory under the Act, was liable to income-tax. One of the contentions that was put forward on behalf of the petitioner, one Madan Gopal Kabra, in that case was that as Rajasthan was not a taxable territory during the accounting year 1949-50, he was immune from liability to assessment on the income of that year. In answer to this contention, the Counsel appearing for the Union of India relied on cl. (b), (iii) of the proviso to S. 2(14A) of the Act to show that income arising or accruing in the year from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 in Rajasthan was liable to tax. The learned

Judges of Rajasthan High Court while accepting the contention of the petitioner before them observed that cls. (d) and (e) of S. 2(14A) made Rajasthan a taxable territory from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 and "the extended meaning given by the proviso was to be restricted so far as may be expressly stated therein."

"The proviso (b) can be divided into three portions and the whole of the territory of India (excluding Jammu and Kashmir) is declared to be the taxable territory of India, firstly as regards any period for the purpose of Ss. 4 A and 4 B. These sections relate to a definition of persons who may be classed as 'residents' or 'not ordinarily residents' in taxable territories in any year, and residence for certain periods prior to the year for which assessment has to be made, is directed to be taken into account. The first clause in proviso (b) means to say that the earlier residence in Part 'B' States will be taken to be residence in taxable territories while taking account of the residence for a certain prior period. The said proviso secondly declares the whole of the said territory to be taxable territory as respects the period after 31-3-50, for any of the purposes of Income-tax Act, 1922. So far as Rajasthan is concerned, the same matter is stated in cl. (d) of the definition, but it also makes Patiala and East Punjab States Union as taxable territories for the period from 1st April to 12th April, although according to cl. (e) in the definition, it was not declared to be taxable territory in that clause. Clause (ii) of the proviso was obviously enacted in order to get over the difficulty of separate assessment of tax for the period from 1st April to 12th April as regards individuals in Patiala and East Punjab States Union.

In this second clause the words "for any of the purposes of this Act" clearly signify that the aforesaid territory including Rajasthan is a taxable territory for the purposes of levy, assessment and collection of income-tax. In the third clause, the whole of the territory of India (excluding Jammu and Kashmir) is declared to be taxable territory as regards any period included in the previous year for the purposes of making any assessment of the year ending on 31-3-51 or for any subsequent year. Assuming for the moment that the words "assessment of the year" mean the same thing as "assessment for the year" and assuming that the previous year of the individuals affected, runs from 1st of April of any year to 31st day of March of the succeeding year, the previous year referred to in the clause for the purpose of making any assessment in the year beginning on 1-3-50 and ending on 31-3-51 would be the year from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50, but the proviso makes the whole of the territory of India taxable territory only for the purpose of making any assessment of the year 1950-1951, and for no other purpose. According to the scheme of the Income-tax Act, it is divided into seven chapters, and while charge of income-tax is dealt with in chapter I, the assessment is dealt with in chapter IV.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council have observed in the case of — 'Commissioner of Income-tax Bombay Presidency and Aden v. Khem Chand Ramdas', AIR 1938 P C 175: ILR (1938) Bom 487 that:

"One of the peculiarities of most Income-tax Acts is that the word 'assessment' is used as meaning sometimes the 'computation of income', sometimes 'the determination of the amount of tax payable', and sometimes 'the whole procedure laid down in the Act for imposing liability upon the tax payer'. The Indian Income-tax Act is no exception in this respect".

"Section 23 which occurs in Chapter IV refers to assessment, as the marginal note to the section indicates and the word 'assess' and its derivatives 'assessment' 'assessed' have been used in the sense of 'computation of income'. In our opinion, it is at best in the sense of the determination of the amount of tax payable that the word has been used in cl. (iii) and not in the sense of 'the whole procedure laid down in the Act for imposing liability upon the tax-payer'."

The learned Judges of the Rajasthan High Court further said in para 19 of the judgment that:

"In order that persons may not escape taxation during the intervening period from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 in areas where there existed law relating to income-tax, the provision appears to have been made in cl. (iii) of proviso (b) to S. 2(14A). This clause makes the territory in which tax was leviable by any other law as also taxable territory for the purpose of making assessment in the year 1950-51. The language used in cl. (iii) is 'for the purpose of making any assessment of the year ending on 31-3-1951'. As observed earlier, there are three stages in connection with the imposition of a tax. The first is the declaration of liability, the second is the assessment and the third is the collection. This clause makes the territory a taxable territory for the purpose of making any assessment, but not for the purpose of chargeability. The chargeability is left to arise by some other law, and the law is the previous State Law referred to in S. 13, Finance Act, 1950."

(12) As to S. 13 of the Finance Act, 1950, it was observed in the Rajasthan High Court decision that it kept alive the State Law not only for the purpose of levy, assessment and collection of income-tax on the income of the year 1948-1949, but also for the above purpose in the subsequent year and that, therefore, the income accruing or arising in Rajasthan for any period prior to 1-4-50 was chargeable to income-tax not under the Indian Income-tax Act but under the State Law, if any, in force prior to 1-4-50. It is important to note that the ratio decidendi of the decision in — 'Madan Gopal Kabra's case', (AIR 1951 Raj 94) that income accruing or arising in Rajasthan in the year from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 was not liable to tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, is not that Rajasthan was not a taxable territory under the Act during that year. But it is that it was a taxable territory for the purpose of making an assessment only and not for the purpose of chargeability under the Indian Income-tax Act.

(13) Learned Counsel for the Union of India has no quarrel with the meaning put by the Rajasthan High Court on the first sub-clause of Cl. (b) of the proviso. As to the other two sub-clauses, his criticism is that the learned Judges of the Rajasthan High Court have not construed the words of these sub-clauses according to their plain and natural meaning. It is said that the purpose of the second sub-clause is not only to make the Patiala and East Punjab State Union a taxable territory from 1-4-1950, but it is also to enable the assessment machinery being set up in the taxable territories where it did not exist before 1-4-1950, and further that the first two sub-clauses of the proviso (b) read with S. 64 of the Act give to the Income-tax Officer, Indore, jurisdiction to assess to tax the income which accrued to the petitioners in the accounting year 1949-50 outside Madhya Bharat in a taxable territory. It was further argued that if in enacting sub-cl. (ii) of cl. (b) of the proviso, the intention had been only to make the Patiala and East Punjab State Union a taxable territory from 1-4-50, the Legislature would have used in sub-cl. (ii) a specific language to that effect and not a general language such as is found in that sub-clause.

With regard to the sub-cl. (iii), the argument of Mr. Chitale is that chargeability under the Indian Income-tax Act is determined on the definition of the term "taxable territory" and if under the Act, a territory is a taxable territory during any particular year, then there can be no escape from the conclusion that the income for that year is chargeable under the Indian Income-tax Act. The learned Advocate General of Madhya Bharat proceeded to argue that as the intention to charge a tax in respect of the income accruing in the year from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 was apparent on the face of the Indian Income-tax Act, it was not open to the Court to cut down the general words imposing the tax by reference to extraneous considerations such as the report of the Indian States Finance Inquiry Committee, or possible intention of the legislature gathered from other Acts, and that S. 13 of the Finance Act, 1950, is perfectly intelligible if it is read as keeping alive the State law for the purposes of levy, assessment and collection of tax on the income of the period before 31-3-49.

(14) In my view, there is considerable force in the argument of the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the Union of India. I have already indicated above the construction that ought to be put on the first sub-clause of clause (b) of the proviso. It is in no way different from that put by the Rajasthan High Court. As to the second sub-clause, I have already said that its object is not merely to make Patiala and East Punjab States Union a taxable territory from 1st April to 12th April, 1950, the period not included in the definition under clause (e); it is also to exclude the risk of a territory declared to be a taxable territory from 1-4-50 not being so regarded for all purposes and to set in motion the whole machinery laid down in the Act for imposing liability on the tax payers where the machinery already did not exist. I, however, part company with the learned Judges of the Rajasthan High Court when they say that although cl. (b), (iii) of the proviso makes a part B State like Rajasthan or Madhya Bharat a taxable territory as respects the period from 1-4-49 to 31-3-1950, it is only for the purpose of making assessment of the year ending on 31-3-51 and not for the purpose of the chargeability which is left to arise not under the Indian Income-tax Act but under some other law. With the greatest respect for the opinion of the learned Judges of the Rajasthan High Court, I do not think that such a construction of clause (b), (iii) of the proviso is warranted either by the language of the sub-clause or by the scheme of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

The definitions of the term "taxable territory" and of other words and expressions in the Act are for the purpose of construing the provisions of the Act wherever the words and the expressions are used. It is with reference to the definition given in section 2(14A) of the term "taxable territories" that sections 3 and 4 of the Act which according to the decision of the Federal Court in — 'Chhattu Ram v. Commissioner of Income-tax Bihar', AIR 1947 F C 32 are charging sections, have to be read. The expression "taxable territory" is the pivot round which the question of assessability and chargeability under the Act turns. Under section 4 in many cases the question of assessability depends on the accrual or receipt of income in the taxable territories. Again, chargeability varies with the factor of residence, which has been defined in the Act with reference to the "taxable territories". It is clear from a careful reading of Ss. 3, 4, 4A, 4B and 2(14A) of the Act that once it is held that under cl. (b), (iii) of the proviso to S. 2(14A) a Part 'B' State is during the period from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 which is a period included in the previous year for the purpose of making an assessment of the year ending on 31st day of March 1951 or for any subsequent year, a taxable territory, it follows as a necessary and logical conclusion that chargeability of the income accruing in that year to tax arises under Ss. 3 and 4 of the Act. There can be no question of assessment under the Indian Income-tax Act, of tax on the income accruing in any particular year, if the liability of tax under the Act is not already in existence.

As observed by Lord Dunedin in — 'Whitney v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue', (1926) A. C. 37, there are three stages in the imposition of a tax. He said:

"There is the declaration of liability, that is, the part of the statute which determines what persons in respect of what property are liable. Next there is the assessment. Liability does not depend on assessment. That ex hypothesi has already been fixed. But assessment particularises the exact sum which a person liable has to pay. Lastly, come the methods of recovery if the person taxed does not voluntarily pay."

(15) This passage has been relied upon (in?) the Federal Court decision referred to above. The observation "Liability does not depend on assessment. That ex hypothesi has already been fixed" is important and deserves to be noted. It shows that assessment under any Act presupposes the existence of a liability to tax under that Act. That liability exists in the Indian Income-tax under Ss. 3 and 4. The deciding factor which seems to have weighed with the Rajasthan High Court in coming to the conclusion that chargeability does not arise under the Indian Income-tax Act is the use of the words "for the purpose of making any assessment" in sub-cl. (iii) of cl. (b) of the proviso. I can see no ground for treating these words as excluding the operation of the charging sections in respect of the income accruing in the previous year referred to in cl. (b), (iii) of the proviso. With all respects to the learned Judges of the Rajasthan High Court, the construction put by them on this sub-clause fails to take account of the fundamental act that assessment under the Indian Income-tax Act presupposes liability to tax under that Act, and altogether renders the sub-clause nugatory and purposeless. If the charge of tax on the income accruing in the year 1949-50 is to arise not under the Indian Income-tax Act but under some other law, it is difficult to see the object and the purpose with which this sub-clause was introduced in the Indian Income-tax Act.

(16) In 'Kabra's case', (AIR 1951 Raj 94) section 13 of the Finance Act 1950 has been referred to as supposing (supporting?) the view that the income accruing to a person in a Part B State in the accounting year 1949-50 is not chargeable under a State Law, if any. The relevant portion of S. 13, Finance Act is as follows:

"If immediately before the 1st day of April, 1950, there is in force in any part B State other than Jammu and Kashmir or in Manipur, Tripura or Vindhya Pradesh or in the merged territory of Cooch Bihar any law relating to income-tax or super-tax or tax on profits of business, that law shall cease to have effect except for the purposes of the levy, assessment and collection of income-tax and super-tax in respect of any period not included in the previous year for the purpose of assessment under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1951, or for any subsequent year, or as the case may be, the levy, assessment and collection of income-tax on profits of business for any chargeable accounting period ending on or before the 31st day of March, 1949."

(17) In regard to this section, it has been said by the learned Judges of the Rajasthan High Court that under this section the State Law is kept alive not only for the purpose of levy, assessment and collection on the income of the year 1948-49, but also for the above purposes in the subsequent year. So that if prior to 1-4-1950, there was a law imposing income-tax in any part of Part 'B' State, then the income accruing in that part in the year from 1-4-48 to 31-3-49, as also in the year 1-4-49 to 31-3-1950 would be chargeable under the State Law and not under the Indian Income-tax Act. I am unable to agree with this reading of S. 13, Finance Act, 1950. To my mind, S. 13, Finance Act, preserves the operation of the State Law imposing income-tax, super-tax or tax on profits of business for the purpose of levy, assessment and collection of the tax only in respect of the income accruing in the period before 31-3-1949. It does not permit of the income accruing in any part B State in the year 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 being charged to tax under the State Law. For the period from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 though not included in the previous year for the purposes of assessment for the year ending on 31-3-1952 is included in the previous year for the purpose of assessment for the year ending on 31-3-1951. Thus the period not included in the previous year for the purposes of assessment for any subsequent year would be included in the previous year for the purposes of assessment for the year before.

The words used in S. 13 are not "the subsequent year" but they are "any subsequent year"; & if the reasoning of the Rajasthan High Court is accepted, then one is led to the strange conclusion that the State Law is to continue in force under S. 13, Finance Act, for the levy, assessment and collection of the tax on income accruing not only in the year from 1-4-48 to 31-3-49 but also accruing in all the subsequent years. In other words, the provision in S. 13, Finance Act, 1950 repealing the State Law except for a very limited purpose and the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act in their applicability to Part B states become wholly ineffective. It is highly improbable that this was the intention of S. 13, Finance Act, or of the other provisions of that Act by which the Indian Income-tax Act was amended and made applicable to Part B States.

(18) Learned Counsel for the petitioners also urged that the Income-tax Act has no retrospective operation and that when the Act was made applicable to this State only from 1-4-1950, it cannot be construed so as to permit taxation under the Act of the income accruing in the State before 1-4-1950. In reply, the Counsel for the Union of India said that the Act, no doubt, came into force in Madhya Bharat on 1-4-50 but as under S. 3 of the Act it is the income accruing during the previous year which is taxed in the subsequent year, that is, the year of assessment and as the proviso to S. 2(14A) makes this State a taxable territory during the previous year 1949-50, the Act is operative to levy tax on the income accruing in Madhya Bharat in the year 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 and the Act to this extent is retrospective. The contention may be disposed of by saying that when, as I have already shown, the express words of the proviso to S. 2(14A) make the income accruing in Madhya Bharat in the year from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 chargeable to tax under the Act, the effect of these words cannot be narrowed or whittled down by applying a rule of construction about statutes which are not by express words or necessary intendment retrospective.

(19) For all these reasons, I am disposed to accept the argument of the learned Counsel for the Union of India and hold that the income which accrued to the petitioners in the year from 1-4-49 to 31-3-50 in Madhya Bharat is chargeable to tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, and that irrespective of whether this income is, or is not chargeable under the Act; sub-cl. (i) and (ii) of cl. (b) of the proviso of S. 2(14A) read with S. 64 give jurisdiction to the Income Tax Officer Indore to tax the petitioners in respect of the income which they derived in that year from without Madhya Bharat.

(20) As to the contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioners that Parliament has no power to make a law imposing income-tax in Madhya Bharat on income accruing before 26-1-50, the argument is that under the Government of India Act, 1935, the Indian Legislature had no power to make laws for Indian States with regard to any matter; that this limitation on the power of the Legislature was continued under S. 8(3) of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, and the Dominion Legislature also had no power to make any law for the Indian States; that the Dominion Legislature derived the power to make laws for Madhya Bharat with respect to certain matters by an Instrument of Accession executed by the Raj PramuKh under Article VIII of the Covenant of 1948 by which the United State of Gwalior, Indore and Malwa (Madhya Bharat) was brought into existence; that the Instrument of Accession excluded the authority of the Dominion Legislature to impose any tax in the territory of Madhya Bharat; that the Covenant under which the Instrument of Accession was executed was a law in force in Madhya Bharat immediately before the commencement of the Constitution; that this law has been continued under Article 372 of the Constitution and that, therefore, Parliament has no power to impose tax on income accruing in Madhya Bharat before 26-1-1950. This argument does not impress me. It is based on a misconception of the constitutional position of this State before and after 26-1-50.

The Covenant under which this State was constituted is, as pointed out, by a Full Bench of this Court in — 'Shri Ram Dube v. Govt. of the State of Madhya Bharat', ILR (1952) Madh B 178, not a statute. I said in that case that the Covenant was as its name implies a compact between the signatories to the Covenant, the object of which was to secure the welfare of the people of the region by the establishment of a new State comprising of the territories of the Covenantee States with a common Executive, Legislature and Judiciary. The Covenant did not, and indeed could not, put restrictions on the powers of the Dominion Legislature. The limitation on the powers of the Dominion Legislature to make laws for Indian States arose under the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935 itself. Section 6 of the Government of India Act permitted the Ruler of an Indian State to accede to the Dominion of India by executing an Instrument of Accession specifying inter alia the matters with respect to which the Dominion Legislature could make laws for the State. Section 101 of the Government of India Act, 1935 made it clear that the Dominion Legislature could make laws for an acceding State only in accordance with the Instrument of Accession of that State and subject to the limitations contained therein. With the repeal of the Government of India Act, 1935, by the new Constitution, which was accepted by the Rulers of Gwalior, Indore and the Covenantee States as the Constitution for the United State of Madhya Bharat by executing a supplementary Covenant in 1949, the constitutional position of the State has entirely changed.

The distinction which existed under the Government of India Act, 1935, between the Provinces & the Acceded States is gone. Under Article 1 of the Constitution, India is now a compact territory and a Union of States. Leaving aside the case of Kashmir, the States specified in Part B of the First Schedule of the Constitution are on a par with the States mentioned in Part A of the Schedule, with this difference that they are subject to the supervisory powers of the Centre for the transitional period of ten years under Article 371 and the provisions of Part VI of the Constitution apply to them with the modifications and omissions mentioned in Article 238. The Legislative competence of Parliament in relation to Part B States is as varied and wide as it is in the case of Part A States. The extent of the power of Parliament to legislate is defined in Chapter I of Part XI of the Constitution. I had occasion to consider in the case of — 'Shanta Devi v. Custodian of Evacuee Property, M. B. Govt.', Civil Misc. Petn. No. 237 of 1951 (Madh-B) the question whether the Parliament had power to legislate retrospectively for Part B States with respect to a matter excluded from the legislative competence of the Dominion Legislature by virtue of an Instrument of Accession executed under S. 6, Government of India Act, 1935. I also considered the question whether Parliament could under the Constitution give to its laws retrospective operation.

I then observed that Parliament had the power to make laws for the whole or any part of the territory of India with respect to any of the matters enumerated in the Union List and the Concurrent List and that this power to legislate within the appointed limits was absolute and supreme, and further that the Constitution did not restrict or limit the legislative competence of Parliament so as to make it exercisable only with regard to that part of territory of India or with regard to those subjects in respect of which the Dominion Legislature had before 26-1-50 the power to legislate and that it was to the provisions of the present Constitution that we must look for determining the power of Parliament.

I also made the observations:

"Now the principle that the Parliament and the State Legislatures are within the statutory limits assigned to them bodies possessing plenary powers is so well settled as to be free from doubt. From this principle of the supremacy of the Parliament and the State Legislatures within their allotted spheres, it follows, that in the absence of express provision to the contrary, the Parliament and any State Legislature can give to their laws otherwise valid, retrospective or prospective operation. There is in our Constitution a limitation on the power of the Legislatures to make retroactive criminal legislation. These limitations are stated in Article 20. But except for this Article, there is no other provision in the Constitution which points to any limitation on the plenary powers of the Parliament and the State Legislatures so long as they keep within the ambit of the subjects of the legislation specifically assigned to them.

There is nothing in Arts. 245, 246 and 248 to indicate an intention to withhold from the Parliament the same absolute discretion as the British Parliament has with regard to past events as well as present and future, provided of course Parliament confines itself to the specified subjects and legislates within the limitations prescribed by Article 20. It would indeed be a violent straining of the wide words of the power to make laws conferred by Articles 245, 246 and 248 if we were to read into them a prohibition of retrospective laws. To do so would be to add to the Constitution, without express words, the prohibition of retrospective laws over and above the limits set out in Article 20."

(21) In that case I expressed my dissent from the view taken by the Rajasthan High Court in — 'Kabra's case', AIR 1951 Raj 94 that as the authority of the Dominion Legislature under the Government of India Act, 1935 in the matter of Legislation for the purpose of imposition of income-tax was excluded in Rajasthan before 26-1-50 and as the Government of India Act, 1935 had been repealed by Art. 395 of the Constitution, therefore, by virtue of Article 367 and S. 6, General Clauses Act, the previous operation of S. 101 of the Government of India Act, 1935 could not be affected by subsequent legislation. While expressing my dissent from this view, I said:

"I find it difficult to see how section 6 of the General Clauses Act could be invoked in such cases for holding that the effect of the repeal of the Government of India Act, 1935 is to confirm for ever the rights vested in the citizens just before the commencement of the Constitution and deny to the Parliament and the State Legislatures the power of interfering with those rights by enacting retrospective Legislation under the powers conferred on them by Articles 245 and 246 of the Constitution. It appears to me that S. 6, General Clauses Act, which merely lays down one of the general rules of construction of statutes, can have no applicability where the Government of India Act, 1935 is not merely repealed but is substituted by a new Constitution under which the Parliament and the State Legislatures are not prohibited from legislating for the past and of interfering with vested rights. Section 6, General Clauses Act, would have again no applicability where the Parliament and the State Legislatures with the legislative competence of retrospective legislation pass an enactment giving it in express terms retrospective effect."

(22) It is true that I made these observations in a case in which the question was of validity of the Administration of the Evacuee Property Act, 1950 in its applicability to this State and I took care to mention that in making those observations I should not be taken as deciding in any way the point as to the validity of the imposition of income-tax in circumstances such as those present in the Rajasthan case. But nothing which the learned Counsel for the petitioners said before us persuades me to revise the opinion I expressed in — 'Shanta Devi's case', Civil Misc. Petn. No. 237 of 1951 (MB). It must be said that the learned Counsel for the applicants did not go to the length of saying that Parliament had no power under the Constitution to legislate retrospectively. He, however, strongly relied on Article 372 of the Constitution to show that the limitations imposed on the powers of the Dominion Legislature under the Government of India Act, 1935 to legislate for the Indian States, are also operative in relation to the Parliament under the new Constitution. This contention seems to me untenable.

Article 372 does not save the Covenant which, as I have said before, is not a statute and which did not itself impose any restrictions on the powers of the Dominion Legislature. Nor does the Article preserve Ss. 6 and 101, of the repealed Government of India Act, 1935, which permitted restrictions being put on the power of the Dominion Legislature by Instruments of Accession. This article is analogous to S. 292, Government of India Act, 1935 and as observed by the Federal Court in — 'United Provinces v. Mt. Atiqua Begum', AIR 1941 F C 16 and that the provision did not mean that no later Act of the Legislature can by words of retrospective operation antedate its effect so as to affect rights acquired under a previous law down to the date of the new legislation. There is, therefore, no justification for reading Article 372 (1) as laying down any limitation upon the power of the Parliament to amend the Indian Income-tax Act and make it applicable to Part 'B' States so as to tax income accruing in States prior to 26-1-50, and the petitioners' contention to that effect must be rejected.

"a provision like section 292 is usually inserted in similar Acts to indicate that the repeal of the parent Act shall not be deemed to have repealed all the laws passed under that Act,"

(23) It was next urged that the notice served on the petnrs. under S. 22(2) of the Act was not valid. The objection is that the notice which was issued on 22-11-1950 was addressed to Sir Hukum Chand as an individual and not as a member of a Hindu Undivided Family and that, therefore, the assessment made on the income of the Hindu Undivided Family is not valid. There is no substance in this objection. In the notice issued to Sir Hukum Chand (Ex. 22) by which he was required to submit a return, the various capacities in which a return has to be filed were indicated one above the other but the notice went to the assessee without any one of these capacities having been scored out. The contention of the assessee seems to be that he did not know exactly as to in which capacity of his, he was required to submit a return & therefore, the notice was illegal. I do not think that the assessee was left in doubt as to what he had to do in the matter of submitting a return. After the receipt of the notice, Sir Hukum Chand addressed a letter to the Income-tax Officer Indore saying that he was a member of Hindu Undivided family and that as he had no separate source of income of his own, he could not be taxed. In reply to that letter the Income-tax Officer informed Sir Hukum Chand on 6-1-51 that the return of income which was required from him was of his Hindu Undivided family and not in his capacity as an individual. It is thus clear that Sir Hukum Chand knew that he had to furnish a return of income of his Hindu Undivided family and as a matter of fact Sir Hukum Chand did submit a return on 18-2-52 making it clear in the return that it was of his Hindu Undivided family.

A notice issued to any adult member of a Hindu Undivided family for submitting a return of the income of the family is a valid notice. When such a notice was issued in the present case and on that notice a return of the undivided family was filed, the petitioners cannot legitimately be allowed to raise the question of the validity of the notice under S. 22(2). Again, as has been held by the Federal Court in — 'Chattu Ram v. Income-tax Commissioner Bihar', AIR 1947 F C 32 the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer to assess and the liability of the assessee to pay the tax are not conditional on the validity of the notice. Their Lordships observed in this case that "the Income-tax assessment proceedings commence with the issue of a notice. The issue or receipt of a notice, is not, however the foundation of jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer to make the assessment or of a liability of the assessee to pay the tax. It may be urged that the issue and service of a notice under S. 22(1) or (2) may affect the liability under the penal clauses which provide for failure to act as required by the notice. The jurisdiction to assess and the liability to pay the tax, however, are not conditional on the validity of the notice."

These observations fully apply to the present case and on their basis, the contention of the petitioner as to the assessment being without jurisdiction because of an invalid notice, cannot be accepted.

(24) The last contention of the petitioners is that they raised before the Income-tax Officer Indore an objection as to the place of assessment and that the Income-tax Officer was not justified in making the assessment without following the procedure laid down in S. 64 (3). On this point the submission of the learned Counsel for the petitioner was that when the petitioners filed the return marked as 'under protest' and that when in his letter dated 19-12-50 addressed to the Income-tax Officer Indore, Sir Hukum Chand distinctly stated that he was not liable to tax under the Income-tax Act in respect of the income which accrued to him in Madhya Bharat before 1-4-50, it meant that an objection as to the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer Indore to assess them was taken. According to the learned Counsel, in other words, it meant that the petitioners raised before the Income-tax Officer Indore an objection as to the place of assessment. Mr. Chitale's argument in answer to this was that inasmuch as the petitioners say that the notice given to them to furnish a return under S. 22 (2) was not a valid notice, it must be taken that the return submitted by them was in response to the notice under sub-sec. (1) of S. 22 and that as in this return the petitioners had stated Indore as the principal place of their business, they were precluded under the second proviso to sub-sec. (3) of S. 64 from raising an objection as to the place of assessment.

It was further said by the learned Counsel for the Union of India that the procedure laid down in S. 64 (3) applies only when an objection as to the place of assessment is specifically raised by the assessee; that the petitioners did not raise the objection before the Income-tax Officer Indore; and that the filing of a return "under protest" or making a statement denying the liability to tax is not tantamount to taking an objection as to the place of assessment. He also urged that the petitioners had themselves stated in the return of income filed by them that their principal place of business was Indore and that their Hindu Undivided family resided in Indore and that when these statements were accepted by the Income-tax Officer, it could not be said that there was any dispute between the petitioners and the Income-tax Officer Indore as to the place of assessment requiring the Income-tax Officer Indore to follow the procedure indicated in Section 64 (3). The learned Counsel for the Union of India also drew our attention to the case of — 'Wallace Brothers & Co. Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax Bombay, Sind and Baluchistan', AIR 1945 FC 9 in which it was observed that the question as to the place of assessment under S. 64 (3) was more one of administrative convenience than of jurisdiction and that in any event it was not one for adjudication by the Court.

(25) In my view, this contention urged on behalf of the petitioners is without any force. Section 64 of the Act provides that where an assessee carries on business at any place he shall be assessed by the Income-tax Officer of the area in which that place is situated, and where the business is carried on in more places than one, then by the Income-tax Officer of the area in which the principal place of business is situated. In all other cases, an assessee is assessed by the Income-tax Officer of the area in which he resides. Under sub-sec. 3 of S. 64 if any question arises to the place of assessment then the question is to be determined by the Commissioner or by the Central Board of Revenue. The Income-tax Officer is also required under this sub-section to refer the matter as to the place of assessment for determination if the place of assessment is called in question by the assessee. Section 64 (3) also says that the place of assessment shall not be called in question by an assessee who has made a return in response to the notice under sub-s. (1) of S. 22 and has stated therein the principal place of his business, or if he has not made such a return, it shall not be called in question after the expiry of time allowed by the notice under S. 22(2) or S. 34 for making a return.

It is clear from these provisions that an objection as to the place of assessment must be specific and that sub-section (3) becomes operative only when a question as to the place of assessment arises. If, therefore, the statements made by an assessee in his return about the principal place of business or residence in any area are accepted by the Income-tax Officer, it cannot be said that there is for determination a question as to the place of assessment. In the present case, it is obvious from the notice (Ex. 22) on record that the notice issued to the petitioners was under S. 22(2). The fact that the notice issued and served on the petitioners was under S. 22(2) was admitted by the Income-tax Officer in his letter dated 4-1-52 which he addressed to Sir Hukum Chand reminding him of the fact that he had failed to submit a return in response to the notice. In face of these facts, the opponents cannot now be permitted to say that the return filed by the petitioners was in response to the general notice issued under S. 22(1). The fact that the petitioners say here that the said notice was not valid, does not, in my opinion, alter the legal position that the return submitted by them under that notice, which I have held to be a valid notice, was a return in response to a notice under S. 22(2). The return was, no doubt, marked as 'under protest.' But this only means that the return was not a voluntary one. It does not mean that the petitioner raised an objection as to the place of assessment.

An assessee may be unwilling to furnish a return for a variety of reasons. He may deny liability to taxation on any income and may be thus unwilling to submit a return and yet at the same time may accept the position that a particular Income-tax Officer has jurisdiction to assess income-tax if the liability exists. The words 'under protest' by themselves do not give any indication as to the precise reason or reasons for the unwillingness of the assessee to furnish a return. Again, I fail to see how the statement in the letter addressed by Sir Hukum Chand on 19-12-50 to the effect that the income which accrued to him in Madhya Bharat in the year 1949-50 could not be taxed under the Indian Income-tax Act and that, therefore he was not liable to pay any tax can be read as even suggesting remotely that the petitioners objected to the place of assessment. It is one thing to deny liability and quite different to say that a particular Officer has no jurisdiction to assess. It is important to note that "the place of assessment" has no reference at all to the liability of an income accruing in any period or in any area to tax under the Act, or to the competency of the Income-tax Officer in the sense of his general authority to assess. The petitioners, no doubt, denied that they were assessable by reference to the income which accrued to them in Madhya Bharat in the year in question. But at no time did they call in question the place of assessment before the Income-tax Officer, Indore. The petitioners themselves stated in the return 'Indore' as the principal place of their business, and residence of the Hindu undivided family. This statement was accepted by the Income-tax Officer Indore. There was, therefore, no issue between the petitioners and the Income-tax Officer as to the place of assessment.

Learned Counsel for the applicants said that the petitioners were not bound by the statements in the return as it having been filed under protest, must be regarded as non-existent. I am unable to accept this effect of the expression "under protest". A return marked as "under protest" only safeguards the position of the assessee and ensures that it may not be said that the return made was a voluntary one. As the petitioners did not raise any objection as to the place of assessment before the Income-tax Officer Indore, they cannot now be allowed to say that the Income-tax Officer should have followed the procedure laid down in S. 64 (3). The matter seems to me to be concluded by the decision of the Federal Court in — 'Wallace Brothers and Co. Ltd. v. Income-tax Commissioner Bombay', AIR 1945 F C 9. In that case also, a return was filed by the assessee 'under protest' and without in any way admitting any liability to tax on the world-income and an objection was raised for the first time before the appellate tribunal as to the place of assessment. The Federal Court held that an objection as to the place of assessment must be taken and determined before the assessment is allowed to go on; it cannot be allowed to be raised on an appeal against the assessment after the assessment had been made. It was also observed in that case that the question as to the place of assessment was more one of administrative convenience than of jurisdiction. Following these observations, the contention of the petitioners that the assessment is bad as the Income-tax Officer did not follow the procedure laid down in S. 64 (3) must be repelled.

(26) During the course of his arguments on the objection as to the place of assessment, learned Counsel for the petitioners repeatedly stressed the fact that for several years the petitioners were being assessed by the Income-tax Officer Bombay, and that they had in fact filed returns in Bombay for the assessment years 1948-1949, 1949-50 and 1950-51. In my view, this fact has no bearing in the present case. In the affidavit filed by the petitioners during the hearing of this petition, it has been admitted by them that the returns of the Hindu Undivided family of Sir Hukum Chand for the assessment years 1949-50, 1950-51 have not been filed before the Income-tax Officer Bombay. Again, as the petitioner's principal place of business is Indore and the family resides in Indore, the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer Indore to assess the petitioners is not excluded by the fact that the Income-tax Officer Bombay has commenced assessment proceedings in respect of the income accruing and received by the petitioners within his area.

(27) Having regard to the view I have taken of the various contentions urged on behalf of the petitioners, it is unnecessary to deal with the point raised by Mr. Chitale that this Court should not interfere under Article 226 as the petitioners could have availed themselves of the adequate remedy provided by the Income-tax Act itself by way of an appeal under S. 30 or a revision under S. 33A of the Act. But I ought to notice the argument of the learned Counsel as regards the remedy of an appeal under S. 30. It is conceded that under S. 23B, there is no right of appeal against a provisional assessment. It is, however, said that sub-s. (1) of S. 30 gives the right of appeal inter alia to any assessee "denying his liability to assess under the Act". I do not accede to this contention. The short answer to this is that under S. 30 (1), an appeal lies against any assessment made under any of the sub-sections of S. 23 and against certain orders of the Income-tax Officer which are expressly specified in S. 30 (1). No appeal lies before any assessment is made. An assessee who denies his liability to be assessed is entitled to appeal on that ground only after the assessment is made.

(28) For all these reasons, I am inclined to think that the assessment order and the notice of demand dated 19-2-1952 are valid and the petition under Article 226 for the issue of a writ or an order for quashing the assessment and the notice of demand must be refused.

(29) There remains for consideration the application of the petitioners challenging the validity of the order dated 29-2-1950 of the Income-tax Officer, imposing the penalty of Rs. 25,000/- on the petitioners for their failure to pay the amount of tax within the fixed time, and questioning the bona fides of the Income-tax Officer in making that order. I have already mentioned in the beginning that the petition under Article 226 was filed on 28-2-52 and that on the next day this Court passed an order restraining the Income-tax Officer from taking any action to enforce the provisional assessment order and notice of demand of the tax. This order was served on the Income-tax Officer on 3-3-1952. But in the meantime on 29-2-1952 itself, the Income-tax Officer passed an order imposing the penalty of Rs. 25,000/-. The petitioners state that after the filing of the application in this Court, their Counsel Mr. Samvatsar addressed a letter on 28-2-1952 to the Income-tax Officer informing him of the presentation of the petition and of the fact that the petitioners had therein prayed to the Court for an interim order for restraining him from enforcing the assessment order, and that the petition was likely to be heard on 29-2-1952, and requesting the Income-tax Officer to stay further action in the matter till the hearing of the petition by this Court. The petitioners further allege that on 29-2-1952 when they obtained from this Court an interim order, their Secretary one Mr. Koria and their Income-tax Adviser one Mr. Shroff immediately went to the office of the Income-tax Officer to inform him of the order passed by this Court; but the Income-tax Officer did not grant them any interview.

It is further stated that on 1st March, 1942, the office of the opponent No. 2 refused to accept service of the order of injunction passed by this Court and also refused to accept a letter addressed by the petitioner's Secretary to the Income-tax Officer informing him of the fact of the issue of the prohibitory order by this Court. The explanation which the Income-tax Officer has offered is that he did not take any notice of the letter addressed by Mr. Samvatsar as he had not filed any letter of authority for his appearance before him on behalf of the petitioner: that he did not evade granting an interview to the petitioner's representatives Messrs. Koria and Shroff; that the 1st day of March 1952 being a Saturday, his office was closed to public business at 1-30 p.m. and it was not bound to accept any letter from the public after that time. While admitting that an order from this Court could be delivered to him "wherever he was found even after the close of the office," the Income-tax Officer denies that such an order was presented to him before 3-3-52. It is also admitted that the order imposing penalty was passed on 29-2-52. But it is said by the Income-tax Officer that he had no knowledge of any proceedings before this Court.

(30) On these facts, Mr. Kolah, the learned Counsel for the petitioners argued with warmth and vehemence that the order imposing penalty having been passed after the issue of the prohibitory order by this Court, was without jurisdiction and illegal, and that in making that order the Income-tax Officer intended to forestall this Court. Mr. Chitale rightly did not support the order imposing penalty. But he sought to assure us that at the time of making that order the Income-tax Officer had no knowledge of the order made by this Court, and he had no intention of defying any order of this Court.

(31) As is clear from the order imposing penalty, it was passed by the Income-tax Officer at the close of the day after this Court had issued earlier in the day the order of injunction. The order of the Income-tax Officer imposing penalty is thus clearly without jurisdiction and illegal. I must, however, say that the warmth and vehemence with which the learned Counsel for the petitioners urged that the Income-tax Officer desired to forestall this Court, is, perhaps, justified in the circumstances stated above. That an Income-tax Officer may exercise his powers under the Act and impose a penalty thereunder cannot be in doubt and this Court does not wish to prevent his doing so without anticipating any prohibitory order from this Court in any matter pending before him. But I feel nothing would have been lost in this case if the Income-tax Officer had shown the same care and vigilance in ascertaining the result of the hearing of the petition by this Court on 29-2-1952, as he exhibited in ascertaining at the close of the day on 29-2-1952 from the treasury that the petitioners had not paid the tax into the treasury till then and in imposing the penalty. It cannot be gainsaid that the Income-tax Officer was aware of the proceedings in this Court as he had been in fact so informed on 28-2-52 by the petitioner's Counsel Mr. Samvatsar.

I appreciate the statement of the Income-tax Officer that an order of this Court could be delivered to him at any hour and at any time. I would only point out that if the Income-tax Officer had made adequate arrangements for this being done, he would not have placed himself in a situation such as this. As it is, it appears from the report of the process-server that on 1-3-52 when he went to the Income-tax Officer to serve the order of injunction on the Income-tax Officer, a clerk in the office refused to accept service and informed him that the Income-tax Officer was not in the office; and that when thereupon, the process-server inquired about the residence of the Income-tax Officer, he was not given the necessary information to enable him to go to the residence of the Income-tax Officer for effecting service of the order. I hope that this state of things is remedied soon by the Income-tax Officer.

(32) In the result the order dated 29-2-52 of the Income-tax Officer imposing the penalty of Rs. 25000/- is declared illegal and without jurisdiction and is set aside. The petitioners' application under Article 226 of the Constitution to quash the provisional assessment and the notice of demand dated 19-2-52 is dismissed. In the circumstances of the case, I would leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Fool Chand, Appellant v. Pratap Singh, Respondent.

First Appeal No. 16 of 1951, D/- 17-10-1952.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 145 and 96 — Discharge of surety — Surety for production of judgment-debtor — Bond in general terms for production until disposal of objection to arrest and thereafter on notice — Arrest declared legal in appeal and execution ordered to be proceeded with — Surety not a party to appeal — Liability of surety.

The liability of a surety for production of the judgment-debtor before Court must be determined on the terms of the bond passed by him to the Court: AIR 1927 Bom 84 and AIR 1919 PC 55, Rel. on. (Para 4)

Where in the bond offered by the surety for the release of the judgment-debtor, arrested in execution of a decree, he gave an undertaking in general terms that on the rejection of the objections of the judgment-debtor and on the order being passed for his arrest, he would produce the judgment-debtor in the Court and in the event of his failing to produce the judgment-debtor, he would pay the decretal amount, and there is nothing to show in the bond, even though it was open to the surety to have so limited his liability by using proper language to the effect, that the surety would not be liable under it if the judgment-debtor's objections are rejected by the Court of appeal and an order is ultimately made by that Court for the arrest of the judgment-debtor, it is fair to hold that the surety was for the appearance of the judgment-debtor, whether the lower Court in requiring the surety to produce the judgment-debtor was acting on its own decision or was acting in pursuance of an order made by the appellate Court. On the terms of the bond, it makes no difference to the liability of the surety whether the objections of the judgment-debtor were dismissed and his arrest was ordered consequently by the lower Court or by the higher Court in appeal. (Para 4)

The liability of the surety in such a case arises quite independently of the decree which is sought to be executed. He being not a party to the execution proceedings of the decree and in view of the form in which he had executed the surety bond has no 'locus standi' to object to the execution of the decree or the validity of the arrest of the judgment-debtor for whom he stood surety and therefore his liability to produce the judgment-debtor is in no way affected by the fact that in the appeal in which it was held that the arrest of the judgment-debtor was proper, he was not made a party. (Para 2)

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 145 — Liability of surety — Surety for production of judgment-debtor on notice — Period of notice not fixed in bond — Sufficient notice.

The question of sufficiency of notice to surety for production of a person has to be determined according to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience and in all cases where the period of notice required to be given is not specified that notice must be a reasonable notice. In ascertaining what is a reasonable notice the question is not whether the surety could have voluntarily produced the judgment-debtor at any time he liked, but it is whether when under the bond the surety undertook to produce the judgment-debtor on a notice being given to him the notice which was actually given to him was a reasonable notice. JUDGMENT: The facts of this appeal are that in execution of a decree held by the respondent Pratap Singh against Bag Mal, Raj Mal and Phool Mal, the judgment-debtor Phool Mal was arrested on 13-5-46. He was released on 14-5-46 when the appellant Phool Mal executed a bond promising to produce the judgment-debtor on 30-5-46 or to pay the decretal amount in default. On 30-5-46, the judgment-debtor Phool Mal raised various objections to the execution petition and to his arrest. On this very date the appellant Phool Chand again executed a fresh bond promising to produce the judgment-debtor at any time till and also after his objections to the execution petition were disposed of. On the dismissal of the objections he further promised to produce the judgment-debtor at any time on a notice being given to him to that effect and failing he promised to pay the decretal amount. The judgment-debtor's objections were disposed of by the District Judge of Gwalior on 30-9-48. The learned District Judge holding that the arrest of the judgment-debtor was illegal, dismissed the execution petition and discharged the appellant who stood surety for the appearance of the judgment-debtor. The decree-holder then appealed to this Court from the said order of the District Judge. In the appeal (Civil Misc. Appeal No. 16 of 2005) a Division Bench of this Court held that the arrest of Phool Mal was proper and that he was "wrongly released from prison". In the appeal this Court directed the executing Court to proceed according to law in the light of the observations made in that appeal. When the matter went back to the lower Court, the appellant was served with a notice on 30-3-51 to produce the judgment-debtor on 2nd April 1951. The appellant failed to produce the judgment-debtor on this date, and contended that his liability ended with the dismissal of the execution petition by the lower Court on 30-9-48; that he was not bound by any proceedings taken thereafter in this Court by the decree-holder; and that it was not possible for him to produce the judgment-debtor in the Court on a short notice of two days. The lower Court rejecting these objections directed the appellant to deposit in the Court on or before 15-5-1951 the decretal amount. It is against this order that the present appeal has been filed.

(2) Mr. Bhagwandas Gupta learned counsel for the appellant firstly contends that as the appellant was not made a party in the appeal Civil Misc. No. 16 of 2005 preferred by the decree-holder, he is not bound by the decision in that appeal holding the arrest of the judgment-debtor proper and directing the execution proceedings to be continued. This objection is, in my opinion, without any substance. The liability of the appellant as a surety in this case arises quite independently of the decree which is sought to be executed. He is not a party to the execution proceedings of the decree. He has, therefore, no 'locus standi' to object to the execution of the decree or the validity of the arrest of the judgment-debtor for whom he stood surety. The bond that was required from the appellant for the appearance of the judgment-debtor was irrespective of the fact whether the arrest of the judgment-debtor was or was not proper. The appellant having executed the surety bond in the form he had done, could not raise the objection that the arrest of the judgment-debtor was not legal or that the execution of the decree by the arrest of the judgment-debtor was not legal. That being so, the liability of the appellant to produce the judgment-debtor is in no way affected by the fact that in the appeal in which this Court held that the arrest of the judgment-debtor was proper, the appellant was not made a party.

(3) It is next urged that the bond which the appellant gave for producing the judgment-debtor was only with respect to the proceedings then pending in the lower Court and that he was not liable to produce the judgment-debtor in execution proceedings taken in pursuance of the order made by this Court. To support this contention, learned Counsel for the appellant relies on a decision of the Madras High Court in — 'Balaraju Chettiar v. Masilamani Pillai', AIR 1930 Mad 514 (FB) in which it was held that upon the dismissal of a suit, the attachment before judgment ceases & if the dismissal is set aside and the suit is decreed in appeal, then the attachment is not revived. There are a number of cases in which various High Courts have taken a contrary view. There are also cases in which various High Courts have held that when execution proceedings are dismissed for default, any subsequent proceedings are entirely distinct from the proceedings in respect of the prior execution proceedings that were dismissed and the surety could only have contemplated becoming so for the appearance of the judgment-debtor during the proceedings that were then pending and not for proceedings that had not then even been contemplated. Again, there are also cases in which it has been held that if a suit previously dismissed for default is restored on an application by the plaintiff, then with the restoration of the suit all the ancillary proceedings must be deemed to be restored also and that a surety bond given in the suit is also deemed to have been restored. In my opinion, none of these cases are of any guide in the matter before us. There is no uniformity in these decisions.

It seems to me that the question whether the surety bond passed by the appellant was meant only for the proceedings in the lower Court which were then pending or whether it was passed also for any proceedings taken by the lower Court in pursuance of the order made by this Court, has to be decided solely with reference to the terms of the bond. It was by giving security that the judgment-debtor Phool Mal was set at liberty and the present appellant stood surety for the appearance of the judgment-debtor. The bond which was executed by the appellant in favour of the Court on 30-5-46 in these terms.

"In this case the judgment-debtor Phool Mal has been set free on my security. I continue the security until the disposal of his objections and promise to produce the judgment-debtor if his objections are dismissed and an order is passed for his arrest. If I fail in this, I promise to pay the decretal amount from my person and property. After the disposal of the objections, I shall be bound to produce the judgment-debtor on a notice being given to me to produce him on a date fixed."

(4) It is clear from these terms of the bond that they in no way limit the operation of the bond to the order which the lower Court would make on the objections of the judgment-debtor. By the bond, the appellant gave an undertaking in general terms that on the rejection of the objections of the judgment-debtor and on the order being passed for his arrest he would produce the judgment-debtor in the Court and in the event of his failing to produce the judgment-debtor, he would pay the decretal amount. There is nothing to show in the bond that the surety would not be liable under it if the judgment-debtor's objections are rejected by the Court of appeal and if an order is ultimately made by that Court for the arrest of the judgment-debtor. It was, no doubt, open to the surety to limit his liability by using proper language to that effect. But when he has not used such language, it is fair to hold that the appellant stood surety for the appearance of the judgment-debtor, whether the lower Court in requiring the appellant to produce the judgment-debtor was acting on its own decision or was acting in pursuance of an order made by this Court. On the terms of the bond, it makes no difference to the liability of the surety whether the objections of the judgment-debtor were dismissed and his arrest was ordered consequently by the lower Court or by this Court in appeal. That in a case such as this, the liability of the surety must be determined on the terms of the bond passed by him is supported by the decision of the Bombay High Court in — 'I. S. Patil v. Irbasappa', 51 Bom. 31 and of the Privy Council in — 'Raghubar Singh v. Jai Indra Bahadur Singh', 46 Ind App 223 (PC). On the reading of the bond in the present case it is clear to me that it has reference to the ultimate issue of the objections of the judgment-debtor. As the judgment-debtor's objections were ultimately rejected by this Court and his arrest was ordered, the appellant is liable under the bond to produce the judgment-debtor in the lower Court.

(5) The appellant further urges that he was not given a reasonable time to produce the judgment-debtor. It is said that he was served with a notice on 30-3-51 to produce the judgment-debtor on 2-4-51 and that in this short time, he could not produce the judgment-debtor who was a resident of Bara Kota. This complaint is well-founded. The question of sufficiency of notice in such cases has to be determined according to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience and in all cases where the period of notice required to be given is not specified, the Courts have always held that a notice to be given must be a reasonable notice. The learned District Judge has not seriously considered the question whether notice given to the appellant to produce the judgment-debtor was a reasonable one. He dismissed the contention of the surety as to the sufficiency of the notice by simply saying that there was no substance and that if the appellant had really intended to produce the judgment-debtor, he could have done so even at the time of the hearing of the arguments before him on the question of the default of the judgment-debtor. In adopting this reasoning, the learned District Judge has missed the real point which he should have considered. The question is not whether the surety could have voluntarily produced the judgment-debtor at any time he liked. But it is whether when under the bond the appellant undertook to produce the judgment-debtor on a notice being given to him and the notice which was actually given to him was a reasonable notice. I have no hesitation in holding that the time of two days given to the appellant to produce the judgment-debtor from Bara Kota was clearly not a reasonable notice. On this ground I would accept this appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Court directing the appellant to deposit the decretal amount, order that the lower Court should now give a reasonable notice to the appellant to produce the judgment-debtor and dispose of the execution proceedings in accordance with law.

(6) In the result, the appeal is allowed. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs of this appeal.

v. The State.

Criminal Revn. No. 122 of 1952, D/- 13-10-1952.

Penal Code (1860), S. 379 — Dishonest intention — Property removed in assertion of bona fide claim of right.

To constitute the offence of theft, the prosecution must establish that there was dishonest intention on the part of the accused in taking the property. The dishonest intention cannot be said to be present when the property is removed in assertion of a bona fide claim of right though unfounded in law and fact. Again, if the claim is asserted in the presence of the complainant and the property is removed in his presence, it cannot be said that the property is not removed in the assertion of a bona fide claim of a right. It is, no doubt, true that a mere colourable pretence to obtain and keep possession of the property does not negative the dishonest intention. But the question whether the removal of property was in assertion of a bona fide claim of right must be determined upon all the circumstances of the case, and a Court cannot convict unless it holds that the claim is a mere pretence. (Para 3)

Where, therefore, the accused at the time of taking the bullock had a bona fide belief that they had a right to demand and take away another bullock from the complainant in replacement of the one first sold by the complainant to them and the accused made this belief known to the complainant at that very time:

Held that the claim of the accused to the bullock could not be held to be a mere pretence and though it might have been unfounded in law or fact, that by itself was not sufficient to infer the conclusion that they had dishonest intention in taking the bullock. (Para 3)

ORDER: This is an application for a revision of an order of the Sessions Judge of Guna affirming the convictions of the applicants under S. 379, Penal Code and sentencing them to pay a fine of Rs. 50/- each.

(2) According to the prosecution on the afternoon of 12-10-50, the applicants went towards the field of the complainant Thakur Lal, unyoked a bullock belonging to the complainant and took it away against the wishes of the complainant and left in its place a bullock which the applicants had some months before purchased from the complainant. Sitaram pleaded alibi. The applicant Narayan said that the complainant voluntarily handed over the bullock to the applicant; while the remaining two applicants Jagdish and Ajju said that when Thakur Lal sold a bullock to the applicants, he had promised that in case the applicants were not satisfied with the bullock sold to them, he would give them another bullock and that accordingly they went to the field of the complainant to return to him the bullock first taken and to receive another bullock. The applicants Ajju and Jagdish also stated that while taking the bullock alleged to have been stolen, they informed the complainant that they were taking it according to the sale-agreement.

(3) The facts of the case are not in dispute. Learned Counsel for the applicants urged that the applicants cannot be held guilty of the offence of theft, for in taking the bullock from the field of the complainant, they only asserted their 'bona fide' right. This contention was raised by the accused in the Courts below also. It was rejected there on the ground that the applicants had failed to prove that it was a term of the purchase of a bullock from the complainant that he would replace it by another bullock in case the applicants did not find it serviceable. The plea was rejected also on the ground that even if the applicants thought that they had a right to take away the bullock, they could not take the law in their own hands and that when the bullock was forcibly taken away against the wishes of the complainant and in his presence, it could not be said that it was taken in assertion of any bona fide right.

In my opinion, the approach of all the Courts below to this question has been erroneous and the plea of the applicants that they took the bullock in assertion of a 'bona fide' right must be accepted. To constitute the offence of theft, the prosecution must establish that there was dishonest intention on the part of the accused in taking the property. The dishonest intention cannot be said to be present when the property is removed in assertion of a 'bona fide' claim of right though unfounded in law and fact. It is, no doubt, true that a mere colourable pretence to obtain and keep possession of the property does not negative the dishonest intention. But the question whether the removal of property was in assertion of a 'bona fide' claim of right must be determined upon all the circumstances of the case, and a Court cannot convict unless it holds that the claim is a mere pretence.

I need not refer to the large number of cases in which these principles have been laid down. But reference to the decision of the Calcutta High Court in — 'Suraj Ali v. Arphan Ali', AIR 1917 Cal 648, may be usefully made where the learned Judges have quoted with approval the following passage from "Pleas of the Crown" by Sir Mathew Hale:

"It is the mind that makes the taking of another's goods to be a felony or a mere trespass only, but because the intention and mind are secret, the intention must be judged by the circumstances of the fact, and though these circumstances are various and may sometimes decisive, yet regularly and ordinarily these circumstances following direct in this case. If A thinking he hath a title to the horse of B seizeth it as his own, or supposing that B holds, of him distrains the horse of B without cause, this regularly makes it no felony, but a trespass because there is a pretence of title; but yet this may be but a trick to colour a felony and the ordinary discovery of a felonious intent is, if the party doth it secretly, or being charged with the goods denies it."

It is thus clear that the 'bona fide' claim of a right cannot be rejected on the ground that the accused has not shown that the claim is founded in law and fact. Again, if the claim is asserted in the presence of the complainant and the property is removed in his presence, it cannot be said that the property is not removed in the assertion of a 'bona fide' claim of a right. Indeed as observed by Sir Mathew Hale, it is when the property is removed secretly that it could be said that it was removed with a felonious intention and under a pretence. The Courts below were, therefore, not justified in rejecting the plea of the accused that they took the property in assertion of a 'bona fide' claim of right on the ground that the term of the contract had not been proved or that the property was removed or the bullock was taken away in presence of the complainant against his wishes.

From the prosecution evidence, it is clear that at the time of the taking of the bullock, the applicants had a 'bona fide' belief that they had a right to demand and take away another bullock from the complainant in replacement of the one first sold by the complainant to them and that the applicants made this belief known to the complainant at that very time. In these circumstances, it cannot be held that the claim of the applicants to the bullock was a mere pretence. The claim of the applicants to the bullock may have been unfounded in law and fact, but that itself is not sufficient to infer the conclusion that they had a dishonest intention in taking the bullock.

(4) Learned counsel for the applicants also took the objection that the charge was not read out and explained to the accused and that, therefore, the trial was illegal. In the view I have taken of the contention as regards the removal of the bullock in assertion of a 'bona fide' claim of right, it is not necessary to deal with this contention. But it appears that the Court had dispensed with the personal attendance of the accused persons and had permitted them to appear by a pleader. In these circumstances, it would appear on the authority of — 'Darabshah Bomanji Dubash v. Emperor', 50 Bom 250 that the charge could have been read out and explained to the pleader of the accused. I, however, do not wish to express any concluded opinion on the question.

(5) The result is that this revision petition is allowed and the conviction and sentence imposed on the applicants are set aside. The amount of fine if already paid by the applicants be refunded to them.

ORDER: This is an application by the plaintiff to revise the order dated 16-2-52 passed by the Civil Judge, First Class Gwalior in Civil Suit No. 28 of 1951.

(2) The question involved in this petition is one of Court-fees. The plaintiff has filed a suit for a declaration that a certain receipt acknowledging the receipt of Rs. 6000/- and purported to have been signed by him and which is now in the possession of the defendant, is a forgery and that he never received from the defendants Rs. 6000/-. The plaintiff filed the suit on a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 15/-. One of the issues framed by the Court was whether the Court-fee paid by the plaintiff was proper. On this issue, the lower Court found that ad valorem Court-fee was payable on Rs. 6000/-. The applicant challenges the correctness of this finding.

(3) Mr. Gupta, learned counsel for the non-applicant took the preliminary objection that this revision petition was not competent under S. 115, C. P. C. He relied on — 'Hajrabi v. Md. Ibrahim', AIR 1948 Nag 219. I do not see how this decision helps the applicant. In that case it has been distinctly held that where the question of Court-fee is mixed up with that of jurisdiction, a revision petition lies against the decision of the lower Court on the question of Court-fees. I would only refer to two other decisions of the Nagpur High Court reported in — 'Pandurang Mangal v. Bhojalu Usanna', AIR 1949 Nag 37 and — 'Paikansing Sheoramsing v. Maniksing Mohtabsing', AIR 1949 Nag 97; where it has been held that an order requiring payment of additional Court-fees is revisable. The objection of the applicant must, therefore, be overruled.

(4) In support of this petition, Mr. Moti Lal Gupta relying on the decision of the Madras High Court in — 'Nagabhushanam v. Venkatappayya', AIR 1935 Mad 203, argued that inasmuch as the plaintiff was impeaching the receipt as having been forged, he could not be regarded as being a party to it and that, therefore, it was not incumbent on him to have it cancelled or set aside and that he could sue for a mere declaration that the document was a forged one and pay court-fees in the suit accordingly. The Madras decision is, no doubt, an authority for the proposition that when a person impeaches a deed as having been forged, to refer to him as being a party to it, is an obvious misuse of words and where a forged instrument has been brought into existence as if he were a party to it, it is not incumbent on him to have it cancelled or set aside by a suit and that he can file a suit for a mere declaration that a document is a forged one and such a suit is governed by Art. 17-A(1), Court-fees Act. Learned Counsel for the non-applicant does not question the correctness of this decision. But he argues that in the present case the plaintiff is seeking not merely the relief of a declaration that the receipt is a forged one, but also the relief that it is held to be a genuine one, the amount of Rs. 6000/- evidenced by the receipt was not in fact received by the plaintiff. This contention of the non-applicant must, in my opinion, be accepted.

In para 8 of the plaint, the plaintiff has stated that the receipt in question is a forgery and at no time did he receive from Shambhu Dayal Rs. 6000/- and further that at no time he gave any receipt to Shambhu Dayal. In the next para, the plaintiff says that it is possible that the receipt has been forged by using some paper on which the plaintiff's signature appeared. Again, in the last para the plaintiff claimed the relief of a declaration that the receipt was a forgery and that by that receipt he never received Rs. 6000/- from the defendant. It is clear from these allegations in the plaint that the plaintiff does not stop by asking merely the relief of the declaration that the receipt is a forgery. He goes further and prays that it be further declared that he never received Rs. 6000/- from the defendant. I do not think it requires discussion to show that if the receipt is held to be a genuine receipt, the plaintiff's claim that the receipt was not given for any consideration, would still remain for investigation. The relief that Rs. 6000/- were never paid by the defendant to the plaintiff, which the plaintiff is claiming is clearly an additional relief. If the plaintiff desires that his claim about the passing of the consideration of Rs. 6000/- should be considered by the lower Court, he must pay ad valorem fee on Rs. 6000/-. It is of course open to amend the plaint and say distinctly that in the event of the receipt being held to be a genuine one, he does not propose to contest the fact of the receipt by him of Rs. 6000/-. But he must make his election at an early date and within the time fixed by the lower Court. I need not add that if the plaintiff fails to pay ad valorem Court-fees on Rs. 6000/- no issue as regards the question whether if the receipt is genuine the plaintiff received Rs. 6000/- from the defendant shall be framed and investigated.

(5) With these observations, I reject this petition. Costs of this petition will follow the result of the suit in the lower Court.

DIXIT J.: This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge, Gwalior refusing to set aside an 'ex parte' decree passed against the appellant on 19-10-1950. The appellant sought to have the decree set aside on the ground that the summons of the suit had not been duly served on him and that the report of the process-server that the appellant refused to accept service on 27-9-50 and that he, therefore, affixed a copy of the summons on the outer-door of a house in a garden in Morar was not correct and further that as a matter of fact on the date on which the process-server is alleged to have gone to the garden for effecting service, the appellant was not residing in the garden and that he ordinarily resides and carries on business in a house in Lashkar.

(2) In support of the application for setting aside the 'ex parte' decree, the appellant filed two affidavits. The respondent also filed a counter-affidavit. The deponents were cross-examined by the opposite party on the affidavits made by them. The parties desired to produce certain witnesses also but the learned District Judge prohibited them from doing so. On the basis of the evidence of these affidavits, the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the defendant-appellant had failed to show that the summons had not been duly served on him. He, therefore, rejected the application for setting aside the 'ex parte' decree.

(3) In my opinion, the order of the lower Court cannot be sustained. In his affidavit, the appellant denied the fact that he was in the garden on the day on which the process-server came there for effecting service. He also denied the fact that he declined to accept service and that the process-server then affixed the summons on the outer-door of a house in the garden. In fact he denied the existence of any house in the garden. In his cross-examination he stated that he was ordinarily living in a house in Lashkar with his brother-in-law as his tenant and that at times he used to be away from Lashkar for several months and that some times he used to live in his own house in Sadar Bazar, Morar. On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent, his Mukhtyar Kanhiyalal filed an affidavit saying that he accompanied the process-server on 27-9-50 and that the appellant who was present in the garden refused to accept the service and that thereupon, the process-server affixed the summons to the outer-door of a house in the garden where the appellant resides. In his cross-examination Kanhaiya Lal said that the appellant's wife lives in Sadar Bazar, Morar and that when he had first accompanied the process-server for effecting service at this place, he was informed that the appellant did not reside there.

From these affidavits and the cross-examination of the appellant and Kanhaiya Lal, I do not find the essential material on the basis of which the learned District Judge preferred to accept the affidavit of Kanhaiya Lal. The District Judge has not, in fact, given in his order any indication of the criterion he has applied in preferring the affidavit of the respondent to the affidavit of the appellant. Again the learned District Judge overlooked the fact that the presumption under S. 114, illustration (e), Evidence Act, which arises in respect of the due service of the summons, could be satisfactorily strengthened or displaced by the evidence of the process-server and of the witnesses who attested the report made by the process-server. The process-server and the attesting witnesses Shankar Lal, Prabhu Dayal, and Madan Mohan were the material witnesses who could have deposed about the service of summons on the appellant. In the absence of their evidence, it is clearly not possible to determine whether the affidavit of the appellant or of the respondent is true. The learned District Judge was, therefore, not justified in refusing permission to the parties to supplement their affidavits by the evidence of these and other witnesses.

It appears to me that in following the procedure of disposing of the defendant's application for setting aside the ex parte decree on the affidavits filed in this case, the learned District Judge has not properly understood the circumstances in which affidavit-evidence is permitted and can be acted upon by the Court. Affidavit evidence is not permitted except where there is an agreement between the parties that evidence may be taken by affidavit or where under O. 19 R. 1, Civil P. C. there is an order of the Court that particular facts may be proved by affidavits or that an affidavit of any witness may be read at the hearing. See — 'Marneedi Satyam v. Venkata Swami', AIR 1949 Mad 689. Here, there was no agreement between parties that their evidence would be by affidavits only. Under O. 19 R. 1 the Court is authorised to order for sufficient reasons that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavits. I do not find in the record before me any such order of the Court. The learned District Judge while rejecting an application filed by the respondent for being allowed to tender the process-server, the attesting witnesses and other persons as witnesses on his behalf, no doubt, stated that the parties in the case had been ordered before that their evidence would be by affidavits. It is not clear from this whether the order directing the parties to tender evidence by affidavits was an oral order or one in writing. As it is, there is on the record, no order of the Court directing the parties to prove by affidavits any particular fact or facts and containing the reasons which in the opinion of the District Judge were sufficient to give such a direction to the parties. It must be noted that even when the parties agree to take evidence by affidavits, they are not precluded from giving oral evidence to supplement the affidavit unless the agreement specifies that their evidence would be by affidavits alone — 'Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth Local Board', (1878) 47 LJ Ch 536.

In the present case the affidavits filed were not even in accordance with the provisions of O. 19 R. 3. This rule says:

"Affidavits shall be confined to such facts as the deponent is able of his own knowledge to prove, except on interlocutory applications on which statements of his belief may be admitted provided that the grounds thereof are stated."

(4) But the affidavits filed by the parties in the present case bear only the verifications that they were sworn on oath and the contents of the affidavits were read out to the deponents and were admitted by them to be correct. These verifications make the affidavits meaningless and valueless, as they do not state how much of the affidavit is a statement of the deponent's knowledge and how much is a statement of his belief. It has been observed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins C. J., in — 'Padmabati v. Rasik', 37 Cal 259, that the provisions of O. 19 R. 3 must be strictly observed and every affidavit should clearly express how much is the statement of the deponent's knowledge and how much is a statement of his belief and the ground of belief must be stated with sufficient particularity to enable the Court to judge whether it would be safe to act on the deponent's belief. As the affidavits filed in present case are not in conformity with O. 19 R. 3, it must be held that the affidavits required by O. 19 R. 1 simply do not exist in the case. I am, therefore, of the view that the learned District Judge was not justified in holding on the basis of the affidavits without any more that the appellant had failed to show that the summons of the case was not duly served on him. This was not a case in which an affidavit filed by one party had been challenged by the opposite party merely by verbal denial without any attempt to contradict it by a counter affidavit or without asking about the attendance of the deponent for the purpose of cross-examination.

(5) I would, therefore, set aside the order of the lower Court refusing to set aside the ex parte decree and send back the case with the direction that the learned District Judge should dispose of the application for setting aside the ex parte decree after recording the evidence of such witnesses as the parties may desire to tender on their behalf. In the circumstances of the case, the parties should bear their own costs of this application.

Where a person is charged u/s. 7 of the Act for having contravened Cl. 15, Madhya Bharat Cotton Textile (Control) Order, 1948, for selling cloth in excess of the maximum price notified by the Textile Commissioner, one of the essential ingredients of the crime that has to be proved is the maximum price notified by the Textile Commissioner. This fact has to be proved in accordance with the provisions of the Evidence Act by actually producing and proving the notification issued by the Textile Commissioner. For judicial notice cannot be taken of such a notification under S. 57, Evidence Act. AIR 1949 Mad 459, Disting.; Cr. App. No. 37 of 1951 (Madh-B), Foll. (Paras 5, 6)

(b) General Clauses Act (1897), S. 3 (29) — Order does not include notification.

The word 'order' in S. 3 (29) has to be construed in the context in which it is used. The difference between law, ordinance, order, bye-law, rule or regulation is based on the difference between the authorities passing or making them. In the strict sense of the word a law is made by the legislature; an Ordinance is issued by the President, the Governor or the Raj Prammukh as the case may be; an order is made by a competent authority; a bye-law is passed by statutory authority competent in that behalf. Hence, a notification containing an executive order does not fall within this definition. AIR 1949 Mad 459, Expl.; AIR 1948 Bom 20, Rel. on. (Para 6)

ORDER: The applicants Panna Lal and Bishan Dayal have been convicted by the Additional District Magistrate of Guna for an offence under S. 7 (1), Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946 and sentenced to imprisonment till the rising of the Court and to pay a fine of Rs. 500 each. The learned Sessions Judge of Guna maintained the conviction and sentence in an appeal preferred by the accused persons against their convictions and sentences.

(2) The charge against the applicants was that on 30-1-51, they sold to one Ram Narayan a pair of dhoti for Rs. 16/- that is, in excess of the control price Rs. 13-2-9 and thus contravened the provisions of Cl. 15, Madhya Bharat Cotton Textile (Control) Order, 1948, issued under the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act of 1946.

(3) The main contention of Mr. Dey the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the applicants is that in this case the fact that the control price of the dhoti alleged to have been sold by the applicant was Rs. 13-2-9, has not at all been proved by the prosecution. It is said that the notification of the Textile Commissioner under Cl. 12, Cotton Textile Control Order by which the maximum price of Dhosis of the type alleged to have been sold by the applicant was fixed at Rs. 13-2-9 has not been proved. In my opinion, this contention is well-founded and must be accepted.

(4) The Madhya Bharat Cotton Textile Control Order 1946 is an order issued under S. 3 (1), Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946. Clause 15 of the Textile Control Order provides in sub-cl. (1) that no manufacturer shall sell or offer to sell any cloth or yarn at a price higher than the maximum price specified in this behalf under Cl. 13 which is as follows:

"The Textile Commissioner may by notification in the Madhya Bharat Government Gazette specify:

(a) The maximum price ex-factory, wholesale and retail at which any class or specification of cloth or yarn or cloth or yarn of any particular origin may be sold."

(5) Section 7 (1), Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act prescribes the penalty for contravention of orders made under S. 3 (1) of the Act. It is thus clear that when a person is charged under S. 7 of the Act for having contravened Cl. 15, Madhya Bharat Cotton Textile (Control) Order for selling cloth in excess of the maximum price notified by the Textile Commissioner, one of the essential ingredients of the crime that has to be proved is the maximum price notified by the Textile Commissioner. This fact has to be proved in accordance with the provisions of the Evidence Act. In the present case, the maximum price of the dhosis has not been admitted by the accused. Nor is it a fact in regard to the existence of which a presumption can be drawn under the Evidence Act. The notification issued by the Textile Commissioner specifying the maximum price was also not produced and proved. That being so, it cannot clearly be held that the maximum price of the dhoti said to have been sold by the applicant Ram Narayan was Rs. 13-2-9.

(6) The learned Government Advocate frankly admits that the notification of the Textile Commissioner was not produced and proved in this case. But he contends relying on — 'Public Prosecutor v. Illur Thippayya', AIR 1949 Mad 459, that the notification issued by the Textile Commissioner being an 'order' is within the definition of "Indian Law" given in Cl. 27 (a) of S. 3, General Clauses Act and that, therefore, under S. 57, Evidence Act the Court can take judicial notice of the notification. In my view this contention must be rejected. It has already been held by a Division Bench of this Court in — 'Criminal Appeal No. 37 of 1951, the State v. Bachu Lal', where the accused was charged with the same offence as here, that judicial notice cannot be taken of a notification issued by the Textile Commissioner under Cl. 13, Cotton Textile Order specifying the maximum price of the cloth. The decision in — 'AIR 1949 Mad 459' has no applicability to the present case. It appears from the report of the case that in the Madras case the question at issue was of the proof of certain orders made by the Government under S. 3 (1), Essential Supplies Act and not of the proof of any notification issued by the competent authority under any of those orders. It was held in the Madras case that an order issued by the Government under S. 3 (1), Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act 1946 was an "Indian Law" as defined by the General Clauses Act in S. 3, Cl. (27a)*. There can be no doubt that an order made under S. 3 (1), Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act 1946 falls within the definition of "Indian Law" given in S. 3 Cl. (27a), General Clauses Act. But here the question is not of the proof of the Madhya Bharat Textile Control Order but of the proof of a notification issued by the Textile Commissioner under Cl. 15 of that Order. Such a notification is clearly an executive order and cannot be said to be included in the definition given in the General Clauses Act of the words "Indian Law". The word 'order' which occurs in S. 3 Cl. (27a), General Clauses Act has to be construed in the context in which it is used. "Law, ordinance, order, bye-law, rule or regulation passed or made at any time by any competent legislature, authority, or person in India", mean legislative provisions. The difference between law, ordinance, order, bye-law, rule or regulation is based on the difference between the authorities passing or making them. In the strict sense of the word a law is made by the legislature; an Ordinance is issued by the President, the Governor or the Raj Pramukh as the case may be; an order is made by a competent authority; a bye-law is passed by a statutory authority competent in that behalf. Again, rules and regulations have been defined in Cls. (46) and (47) of S. 3, General Clauses Act. It is thus clear that the word "order" is used in S. 3 (27a), General Clauses Act in the sense of a Legislative Order and not an executive order. This view about the meaning of the word 'order' as used in S. 3 Cl. (27a) is in accord with the view taken by the Bombay High Court in — 'Shripad Amrit v. Harsiddhbhai Divatia', AIR 1948 Bom 20.

(7) It must also be noted that under the last paragraph of the explanation to S. 57 a Court may refuse to take judicial notice of any fact unless and until the person who desires that judicial notice of the fact may be taken, produces any such book or document as the Court may consider necessary to enable it to do so. In the present case the notification, a mere production of which would have been sufficient to prove it under S. 78, Evidence Act, was never produced before the trial Magistrate. In these circumstances I think the Courts below were not justified in taking it for granted that the maximum price of the dhotis alleged to have been sold by the applicants to Ram Narayan was Rs. 13-2-9.

*Now S. 3, Cl. (29) —Ed.

(8) For the above reasons I accept the revision petition and set aside the convictions and sentences imposed on each of the applicants. The amount of fine, if already paid by the applicant, shall be refunded to them.

Madhu Lal, Appellant v. Ramji Das Chironji Lal and others, Respondents.

Civil Misc. Appeal No. 6 of 2005, D/- 31-7-1952.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 40 R. 1 — Scope of — Just and convenient — Meaning — Suit for recovery of money by simple creditor — No special equity — Receiver cannot be appointed — (Gwalior Civil P. C. (Smt. 1966), S. 451) — (Words and Phrases — Just and convenient).

The terms of O. 40 R. 1 of the Code of 1908 are wider than S. 451, Gwalior Civil P. C. and do not limit the appointment of a receiver of the property only to those cases where the property is the subject-matter of the suit. The rule confers a discretion on the Court in the matter of appointment of a receiver and the only restriction on this discretionary power of the Court is that put by the words "just and convenient". These words have been construed as meaning that "it is practicable and the interests of justice require it", (1909) 2 KB 903, Rel. on. (Para 3)

The appointment of a receiver under O. 40 R. 1 is thus essentially on equitable grounds and if a simple contract creditor fails to establish a special equity in favour of the appointment of a receiver, there can be no justification for the Court to appoint a receiver. (1853) 20 LJ Ch 314 and AIR 1930 Cal 610, Rel. on. (Para 4)

Where therefore, a plaintiff in a simple money suit has acquired no lien upon any property of the defendant, a receiver cannot be appointed simply because the defendant is delaying the proceedings of the suit by raising all sorts of objections and in the meantime appropriating the rents and profits of the property. DIXIT J.: This is an appeal by the plaintiff from an order of the District Judge, Shivpuri refusing to appoint a receiver of the defendant-respondent's properties in the plaintiff's suit for the recovery of Rs. 13,527/11/6 on the basis of an account stated. The defendant is resisting the suit inter alia on the ground that it is incompetent for the reason that there was a composition between him and his creditors including the plaintiff-appellant about their debts; that the debt which the plaintiff seeks to recover was included in the composition under which the plaintiff and the other creditors of the defendant had the right to sell the defendant's properties and realise their debts and that therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to file this suit on the original cause of action. After the institution of the suit the plaintiff presented on 26-3-46 a consolidated application under Ss. 433, 447, 451, Gwalior Civil P. C. Samvat 1966 for an attachment before judgment of the defendant's properties and in the alternative for the appointment of a receiver for the collection of the rents and profits of the defendant's properties. Before the District Judge, the plaintiff did not press the application in so far as it related to an order of attachment before judgment. He however, pressed for the appointment of a receiver on the ground that the defendant-respondent had first agreed to hand over his properties to his creditors for the realisation of their debts but later on he resiled from the agreement; that the plaintiff had therefore an equitable interest in these properties, that the defendant was heavily indebted and was putting obstacles in the plaintiff's suit by raising all sorts of objections and thus delaying the proceedings; that in the meantime he was appropriating the rents and profits and paying nothing to the plaintiff and that if a receiver was appointed for the collection of the rents and profits, there would be some assets for the satisfaction of any decree that the plaintiff might obtain against the defendant. The learned District Judge rejected the application on the short ground that under S. 451, Gwalior Civil P. C., a receiver could be appointed of any property only if it was the subject-matter of the suit.

(2) In this appeal learned counsel for the appellant contended that if in the present case no receiver could be appointed under S. 451, Gwalior Civil P. C., the trial Judge should have considered the question of the appointment of a receiver in the exercise of its inherent powers and that in any case under O. 40 R. 1, Civil P. C., 1908, which is now in force in the State, the appointment of a receiver in the present case would be just and convenient in view of all the circumstances of the case. On behalf of the respondent Mr. Mungre does not dispute that the matter is now governed by O. 40 R. 1 of the Code. But he says that in this suit of the plaintiff which is a suit for money and in which the plaintiff does not claim any right to be paid out of any particular property of the defendant, there is no equity at all in favour of the plaintiff and no receiver can, therefore, be appointed.

(3) In my view, the contention of the learned counsel for the respondent is well-founded and must be accepted. The terms of O. 40 R. 1 of the Code of 1908 are wider than S. 451, Gwalior C.P. Code and do not limit the appointment of a receiver of the property only to those cases where the property is the subject-matter of the suit. Under this Rule, a Court has the power to appoint a receiver of any property "where it appears to the Court to be just and convenient." This rule confers a discretion on the Court in the matter of the appointment of a receiver and the only restriction on this discretionary power of the Court is that put by the words "just and convenient." In — Edwards and Co. v. Picard, (1909) 2 KB 903, the words "just and convenient" have been construed as meaning that "it is practicable and the interests of justice require it."

(4) The question, therefore, in the present case is whether the appointment of a receiver is necessary for the protection of some rights of the plaintiff-appellant. The plaintiff's suit is for the recovery of moneys on an account stated. Learned counsel for the appellant admits that in this suit, the plaintiff does not claim a specific charge on any property in respect of his debt. He does not claim any right to be paid out of any particular property. It is true that the respondent has pleaded that the plaintiff should have sued on the basis of a composition which gave to the plaintiff a right to realise his debt from certain properties of the defendant and that the plaintiff's suit on the original cause of action is not maintainable. But because of this pleading of the defendant, the plaintiff-appellant cannot be said to have a right in the present suit of realising his debt from any particular property. If the appellant had a right to be paid out of a particular fund or property, he could in equity obtain protection to prevent that property or fund from being dissipated so as to defeat his rights. But there can be no such equity in favour of the plaintiff-appellant, when in the present suit he does not rely on any agreement between him and the defendant that he should be paid out of a particular fund or property. The appointment of a receiver under O. 40 R. 1 is essentially on equitable grounds and if a simple contract creditor fails to establish a special equity in favour of the appointment of a receiver, there can be no justification for the Court to appoint a receiver.

(5) In — Owen v. Homan, (1853) 4 HLC 997 affirming 20 LJ Ch 314, the Lord Chancellor observed:

"The plaintiffs here do not claim as specific appointees of any part of the defendant's separate estate. They are merely in the nature of general creditor seeking to obtain payment by a sort of equitable action of assumpsit or debt. In such a case it is a strong exercise of authority to deprive the defendant, on motion, of property of which the plaintiffs have no specific claim in order that if they establish their claim as creditors there may be assets wherewith to satisfy them. I do not mean to say that such a course may not be taken, though I have not discovered any authority for it. Perhaps the anomalous nature of the right, where a plaintiff is claiming as a general creditor of a married woman and is seeking payment out of her separate estate, and the inability of the Court to govern the proceedings in equity in such a case by rules strictly conformable to those which regulate an action at law, may warrant the interim interference by a receiver. But a chance of doing a wrong to the defendant in such a case is certainly much greater and much more apparent, than were a right against some specific fund or estate. "It is the almost universal rule", says Pomeroy in his Equity Jurisprudence 4th Volume 1533, "that a creditor's bill whether to set aside a fraudulent transfer or to reach equitable assets will not lie on behalf of mere general creditors who have not prosecuted their claim to judgment nor, in any other manner, acquired a lien upon the debtor's property. The slowness and inadequacy of the legal remedies open to such creditors are not considerations that can move a Court of Equity in the absence of statutory authority, to intervene in their behalf with the instrumentality of a Receiver to preserve the debtor's property."

(6) The Calcutta High Court has also following the English case — Owen v. Ho- man', (1853-4 HLC 997 affirming 20 LJ Ch 314) held in — 'Dharendra Krishna v. Surendra Krishna', AIR 1930 Cal 610 that a simple contract creditor who has no specified charge or no right to be paid out of a specified fund cannot in general ask for the appointment of a receiver. Learned Counsel for the appellant was not able to refer us to any decision of any High Court in India in which a contrary view has been taken. On the other hand in the passages read out to us by the learned Counsel from Woodroffe's "Law of Receivers", it has been observed "the great weight of authority supports the rule that in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary a general contract creditor before judgment is not entitled to an injunction or a receiver against his debtor upon whose property he has acquired no lien."

(7) In the instant case, the appellant has clearly acquired no lien upon any property of the defendant. That being so, a receiver cannot be appointed simply because the defendant is delaying the proceedings of the suit by raising all sorts of objections and in the meantime appropriating the rents and profits of the property.

(8) For the above reasons, I am of the opinion that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

(2) The short facts of the case are that complainants Yusuf, P. W. 9, Babu Khan, P. W. 10, Ellahibux, P. W. 11, Kamruddin and Mohammad had gone in a marriage with their musical instruments. They are professional persons and had gone with their party to play music in a 'barat'. On 1-12-1949 they were returning from Sekra village towards Chhimak village via Dabra road, and near the brink of a river eight persons met them and they asked them where they were going. On replying that they were going towards Dabra these eight persons asked them to proceed via Anand Peth. The witnesses declined to go with them and therefore these persons left by a Kacha route. The witnesses then went about two Kos and on the road met several labourers, who were sitting near a fire. The witnesses also sat there. Soon after 5 out of the 8 persons whom the witnesses had met before returned there and asked the labourers to go away. Out of these 5 Badmashes two had guns, one had revolver, one lathi, and one had a sword. It was about 5-30 P.M. that these dacoits threatened the witnesses that in case they did not part with their belongings they would lose their life; and, at the point of revolver, snatched from the witnesses their clothes and the musical instruments and other belongings and decamped with the booty, worth about Rs. 240/-. The witnesses then proceeded to Police Station Dabra eight miles distant from the place of occurrence and lodged report at 11 P.M.

(3) From the deposition of the Sub-Inspector Vijaya Singh, P. W. 7, it appears that some informer had informed him that in village Khedi Raimal, there is one Shankar Singh, at whose house many suspected persons take shelter. On 4th December 1949, the Sub-Inspector reached the place and arrested Shankar Singh and Mouji. According to Sub-Inspector, Shankar Singh though not involved in this dacoity, informed him about persons, who were involved in the dacoity on the Chhimak road. On 16th December 1949, it appears that Shankar Singh's house was raided and 8 accused were arrested. Some property was recovered from them and eight persons as stated above were challaned in this case out of which four were convicted and four were acquitted.

(3) The prosecution evidence against the four appellants in this case is of three-fold character: First, there are confessions of the accused; secondly, the prosecution relies upon the identification proceedings; and, thirdly, upon the recovery of the looted property from the possession of the appellants.

(4) I regret very much to observe that Mr. Mustafa Ahmad, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Antri, who recorded the confessions ignored all the salient and mandatory provisions of law as laid down in Ss. 164 and 364, Criminal P. C.

(5) He did not question any of the accused making the confession about any thing in order to elicit whether the confessions were voluntarily made. There is no mention in the confessions that the accused were informed in the beginning that they were not bound to make the confession and if they did so they would be used as evidence against them. The learned Magistrate did not even consider it proper to make a memorandum at the foot of the confessions as laid down in sub-s. (3) of S. 164, Criminal P. C. The Magistrate, however, appeared as a witness in the case to depose that according to his knowledge the confessions so made were voluntary. As the Privy Council has observed in — 'Nazir Ahmad v. Emperor', AIR 1936 PC 253 (1) that if such oral evidence is believed all the precautions and safeguards laid down by Ss. 164 and 364 would be of such trifling value as to be almost idle. The Magistrate himself admitted that the accused were produced before him for recording confessions at a certain date but he did not record the confessions on that very date, but continued to record confessions at his leisure from day to day; and the Police and Judicial lock-up being one at Antri, the accused remained in Police custody throughout. Under these circumstances, I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that confessions must be discarded.

(6) The manner of conducting the test of identification also shows that the learned Magistrate Mr. Mustafa Ahmad has no idea about the importance which is attached to these proceedings and to the care and precaution with which these proceedings should be conducted. The proceedings took place in the police lock-up first on 22nd December 1949, (Ex. P-10) and next on 5th January 1950, (Ex. P-11). On the first date seven accused were mixed with seven other persons. On the next date eight accused were mixed with six other persons. Where the proportion of the other persons with suspected persons is so less, the result generally, is that it becomes very easy for a witness to hit upon the suspected person. As observed in — 'Kuldip Singh v. Emperor', AIR 1934 Pat 537; — 'Ram Singh v. Emperor', AIR 1943 Oudh 269 and — 'Naubat Singh v. Emperor', AIR 1935 All 653, the proportion of other persons to the accused should be at least 3 to 1. In the Allahabad case it was laid down that the proportion of five other persons to one accused for identification is a minimum desirable proportion for the purpose of satisfying a Court that the identification of the accused was not a mere accident. If the proportion is less there is appreciable risk of a person being implicated purely by chance; in such cases though it is not possible to discard these proceedings merely on that ground, it becomes necessary that the evidence of identification should be subjected to a rigid scrutiny.

In this case, however, though in the first information report hulia of every accused had been given in details, yet, the learned Judge did not exert himself to see whether the hulia of the dacoits given in the First Information Report had tallied with the hulia of any of the accused present in his Court. Jammoo, who according to Ex. P-11 had identified all the accused was not produced in the Court and about Yusuf, P. W. 9, it is written that he identified Mouji, who was not an accused in this case. As regards Aliya, the learned Sessions Judge in his judgment, has remarked that Yusuf witness was not certain whether Aliya was amongst the five dacoits and that Ellahibux witness said in the Court that he could not identify the appellant Aliya. The learned Sessions Judge has convicted Aliya only on the evidence of Babu Khan, P. W. 10. In my opinion it is not safe to base conviction on the identification of a single witness when a proper standard had not been maintained in the mode of conducting a test identification. I would not attach any importance to such identification proceedings. (After discussion of some evidence the judgment proceeds :) Under these circumstances, it will not be safe to convict any of the accused merely on the identification proceedings. In my opinion due to the carelessness or utter lack of knowledge on the part of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Antri, Mr. Mustafa Ahmad, we have to discard the confession as well as identification proceedings. Considering the lawlessness prevailing in the District, where innocent people are waylaid and looted in a most reckless manner and the owners of property are deprived of their life, if once offenders are arrested it becomes the bounden duty of the Magistrate and the Courts to see that the non-compliance of the mandatory and salient provisions of law does not lead to difficulties and does not contribute to the acquittal of any of the accused. In my opinion, Mr. Mustafa Ahmad should be warned to be careful in future.

(7) The only testimony that now remains for consideration is about the recovery of the property from the possession of the accused. The most important discovery was the discovery of several Cornets (i.e. Cornet-a-pistons which are brass portable wind instruments like trumpets). These were recovered at the instance of Bhanwar Singh, appellant, from the huge heap of Karab कर्ब (After statement of some evidence the judgment proceeds :) I am of opinion that Bhanwar Singh's appeal should be dismissed.

(8) Nothing has been recovered from the possession of Munshi and clearly he is entitled to acquittal.

(9) One coat, Article E, is said to have been recovered from Aliya but the evidence is not free from suspicion. The only witness produced by the prosecution to prove this recovery is Komal Persad, P. W. 6, who deposes that he was called to the Thana at Bhitwar and he had reached the office and was sitting there when, after sometime, the eight accused were sent for and at that time when the accused had produced various clothes, Aliya had produced this coat. The witness adds that he could not say since when the clothes were in the possession of the accused. A jersey from Sultan alias Rustom was also produced before Komal Persad. In my opinion, this search seems to be a big farce and cannot be relied upon for basing the conviction thereon. It was incumbent on the Police to have prepared a Panchnama of the clothes the accused had in their possession when Shankar Singh's house at Khedi Raimal was raided on 16-12-1949 and when the accused were arrested there. No such Panchnama was prepared on that date. A search of the accused in the Police Station at Bhitwar twenty-four hours after the arrest is no proof that the accused brought the clothes to Jail from Raimal Khedi or had been wearing these clothes. Some independent witness from Raimal Khedi, who might have seen the accused with these clothes ought to have been produced. A Chadar from Jimipal was also produced in the search in Jail. It also seems to be tainted with suspicion and Jimipal cannot be convicted on this slender material. We, therefore, dismiss the Government appeal against the order of acquittal of Jimipal.

(10) We also dismiss the appeal of Bhanwar Singh.

(11) We are, however, of opinion that there is not sufficient material for the conviction of appellants Aliya, Munshi and Sultan (alias Rustom). We, therefore, allow their appeal and order that they be acquitted.

(12) SHINDE C. J.: I agree.

ORDER: This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Guna, recommending that the conviction and sentence of the applicants Suraj Mal and others by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chachoda under S. 323, I.P.C. be set aside.

(2) It appears that the applicants were challaned in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Chachoda, for an offence under S. 147, I.P.C. The trial Magistrate did not find the charge under S. 147 prima facie established. He accordingly charged the accused for an offence under S. 323, I.P.C. At the end of the trial the learned Magistrate convicted the accused under S. 323, I.P.C. and sentenced each one of them to pay a fine of Rs. 50/-.

(3) The accused persons filed a revision petition before the Sessions Judge of Guna who was of the opinion that an offence under S. 323, I.P.C. being exclusively triable by the Panchayat Court under the Madhya Bharat Panchayat Vidhan, Samvat 2006 (Act No. 58 of 1949), the trial and the conviction of the applicants by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate were illegal. The learned Sessions Judge has accordingly recommended to this Court that the conviction be set aside.

(4) I have heard Mr. Mungre, Government Advocate for the State who opposes the reference. In my opinion, the reference must be rejected. Under S. 75 of the Panchayat Vidhan, an offence under S. 323, Penal Code is, no doubt, within the cognizance of a Panchayat Court. Section 77 of this Act says that if at any stage of proceedings in a criminal case pending before a Magistrate it appears that the case should be tried by the Panchayat Court, the Magistrate shall at once transfer the case to the Panchayat Court. There is no provision in the Act excluding the jurisdiction of other Courts to take cognizance of any case which is cognizable under S. 75 of the Act by a Panchayat Court. It is thus clear from these provisions that the jurisdiction which has been conferred on the Panchayat Court to try certain offences enumerated in S. 75 of the Act is not exclusive. Under S. 5, Criminal P. C. all offences under the Penal Code are required to be investigated, tried and otherwise dealt with according to the Code. Sections 28 and 29 of the Code deal with the Courts constituted under the Code by which the offences under the Penal Code and under any other law are to be tried. These sections govern every criminal proceedings both as regards the tribunal by which a crime is to be tried and as to the procedure to be followed. Sub-section (2) of S. 1, Criminal P. C., no doubt, provides that nothing in the Code shall affect any special law, in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary. But the existence of a special law by itself cannot be taken to exclude the operation of the Criminal Procedure Code. Unless the special law expressly or impliedly provides that certain offences shall be tried exclusively by Courts constituted under the Act, the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts to try the offences under the Code cannot be said to have been excluded. The learned Sessions Judge has placed reliance on two decisions of the Allahabad High Court reported in — 'Kirpa Ram v. Ram Asrey', AIR 1951 All 414 and — 'Jaisri Tiwari v. State', AIR 1951 All 494 in which it has been held that the Panchayati Adalat established under the U.P. Panchayat Raj Act, 1947 has exclusive jurisdiction to try the offences mentioned in S. 52 of the Act. These decisions have no applicability here, because there is a material difference between the Uttar Pradesh Act and the Madhya Bharat Act. The difference lies in this; that whereas in the Uttar Pradesh

Act by S. 55, the jurisdiction of any other Court to take cognizance of any case which is cognizable under the Act by Panchayati Adalat is expressly excluded, in the Madhya Bharat Act, there is no such provision. Again, under S. 56 of the U.P. Act a Magistrate is required to transfer the case to the Panchayati Adalat if it appears to him at any stage of proceedings in a criminal case that the case is triable by a Panchayati Adalat. In our Act the words used in S. 77 are:

"Yadi aparadh sambandhi kisi abhiyoga men jo kisi Magistrate ke samane ho kisi samaya bhi yah malum ho ki is abhiyoga ki sunavi kisi Nyaya Panchayat ko karana chahiye to wah us abhiyoga ko turant saksham Nyaya Panchayat ke pas bhej dega. Jo abhiyoga ki sunavi arambha ho sakegi."

(5) It will be seen that under this section it must appear to the Magistrate that the case should be tried by the Panchayati Adalat before it can be transferred to the Panchayat Court. It is not sufficient for the transfer of a case to the Panchayat Court that it is triable by that Court. The question whether any particular case is cognizable by a Panchayat Court, should or should not be tried by that Court has to be determined by the Magistrate on the facts and circumstances of that case. Thus under S. 77, Madhya Bharat Panchayat Vidhan, the Magistrate has been given the discretion to transfer a case to the Panchayat Court, provided of course it is cognizable by that Court under S. 75 of the Act. If, therefore, in the present case, the Magistrate instead of transferring the case to the Panchayat Court, tried it himself and found the applicants guilty under S. 323, I.P.C., it cannot be held that the trial and conviction of the applicants are illegal.

(6) For these reasons I reject the reference. B/V.B.B. Reference rejected.

DIXIT J.: This is an appeal from an order passed by the District Judge of Shivpuri under S. 433, Gwalior C. P. C., Samvat 1966 directing the attachment before judgment of certain properties of the appellant. On 30-1-45 the respondent Central Bank of India Ltd. instituted a suit against the appellant in the Court of District Judge, Shivpuri for the recovery of Rs. 17,407-6-6. On the same date the plaintiff Bank put in an application under S. 433, Gwalior C. P. C., stating that the goods on the security of which the plaintiff had advanced certain monies to the defendant and which the plaintiff was seeking to recover in the suit, had been attached by the District Co-operative Bank of Shivpuri and that, therefore, the security given to the plaintiff had become insufficient. Further that the plaintiff had learned that the defendant was thinking of selling his property and leaving the State territory. On these grounds the plaintiff prayed that an order of attachment before judgment be granted of a house of the defendant. The attachment was effected on 2-2-45. On the next day the defendant-appellant presented an application objecting to the attachment and praying to the Court that the attachment be set aside and he be awarded compensation in the sum of Rs. 1000 for the wrongful attachment. The learned District Judge, therefore, heard both the parties, recorded their evidence and confirmed the order of attachment before judgment.

(2) In this appeal, Mr. Shiv Dayal for the appellant, contends that the order of attachment passed by the learned District Judge was not legal, because the plaintiff had not stated in his application under S. 433, Gwalior C.P.C. whether the defendant was about to dispose of any part of his property or about to leave the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court with the intention of obstructing or delaying the execution of any decree that might be passed against him. It was said that on the evidence led by the plaintiff, it is not established that the defendant was going to make alienations of his property after the filing of the suit, with intent to delay or obstruct the execution. Learned Counsel for the appellant further said that as the plaintiff had applied for an order of attachment on insufficient grounds, the appellant was entitled to compensation.

(3) The contention of the learned counsel for the appellant that the learned District Judge was not justified in confirming the order of attachment is, in my view, sound and must prevail. Under S. 433, Gwalior C. P. C., an order of attachment before judgment could be made only if the Court was satisfied that the defendant with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that might be passed against him, (a) was about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property; (b) or was about to remove the whole or any part of his property from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court; (c) or had left the local limits of the jurisdiction of that Court wherein his property was situated. The evidence led by the parties is to the effect that the District Co-operative Bank secured an order of attachment against the goods which had been previously pledged by the appellant with the respondent; that for some time before and after the institution of the plaintiff's suit, the defendant was absconding from Shivpuri as a case about a contravention of the Petrol Rationing was pending against him in Shivpuri; that after the institution of the suit, the defendant-appellant was in Gwalior; and that during his stay at Gwalior he met Mr. Khanna the Manager of the plaintiff Bank and told him that in case he was allowed bail he would return to Shivpuri and dispose of his property. The defendant Jeewan Lal did not enter into the witness-box to contradict the statement of Mr. Khanna, that the defendant had met him and told Mr. Khanna of his intention to dispose of the property. The defendant's witnesses tried to show that the properties which the defendant possessed were greater in value than the amount at stake in the suit. From this evidence, the facts that the defendant-appellant at the time of the institution of the suit and after had left Shivpuri where his property was situated, and was also thinking of disposing of the property, are no doubt established. But the evidence does not establish the important fact that the appellant left Shivpuri and intended to dispose of any part of his property with intent to delay or obstruct the execution of the decree that might be passed against him. In the absence of the proof of this intention the learned District Judge was not justified in confirming the order of attachment. The order was, in my opinion, not legal. The question of setting aside the order of attachment is now of academic interest only as the plaintiff's suit has been decreed and in the execution proceedings of the decree in his favour, the plaintiff has already secured a fresh order of attachment of the property.

(4) As to the contention of the appellant that he is entitled to compensation for this wrongful attachment, I think it must be rejected. It is quite true that the plaintiff did not state in his application for attachment before judgment the intent with which the defendant contemplated to leave Shivpuri or dispose of his property. But for awarding compensation whether under S. 439, Gwalior C. P. C., or under S. 95, C. P. C., 1908, the question to be decided is whether there were in fact no sufficient grounds for applying for attachment before judgment and not whether there were no sufficient grounds stated in the application. The words 'insufficient grounds' mean without reasonable or probable cause. See — 'Roulet v. Fetterle', 18 Bom 717 at p. 720. Now it has been found here that the goods pledged with the plaintiff were attached by the District Co-operative Bank; that the defendant had left Shivpuri and that he had told Mr. Khanna, the Manager of the plaintiff Bank, that in case he was allowed bail he would return to Shivpuri and would dispose of his property. From these facts, it is clear that the Bank had reason to suspect that the defendant intended to dispose of his property with a view to delay or obstruct the execution of the decree that the Bank might obtain against him. The plaintiff Bank, however, did not succeed at the hearing in establishing this intention of the appellant. But this in itself does not entitle the appellant to claim compensation from the plaintiff. The appellant must show that the plaintiff was unjustified in suggesting to the Court on 30-1-45 when he procured the order of attachment that he was about to defeat the object of the suit in making alienations or by leaving Shivpuri.

The appellant has not proved this fact at all. All that he did was to show that he had properties of greater value than the amount involved in the suit and that he left Shivpuri on account of Petrol Rationing Contravention case. The appellant made no attempt whatsoever, to challenge the statement of Mr. Khanna that the appellant had told him that he would return to Shivpuri and dispose of his property. It was incumbent on the appellant to prove affirmatively that the attachment was applied for without reasonable or probable cause. On the facts established I am of the opinion that the appellant had failed to make out the case which was necessary for him to establish that the Bank had no sufficient reason on 30-1-45 to suspect that the appellant would dispose of his property to defeat the plaintiff's claim. The appellant's contention that he is entitled to compensation must, therefore, be rejected.

(5) In the result, the order of attachment passed by the District Judge on 13-1-45 and confirmed on 29-7-1948 is set aside. To this extent this appeal is allowed. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs of this appeal.

(6) CHATURVEDI J.: I agree.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 49, 113 and 115 — Gwalior Limitation Act, Arts. 5, 11 and 13 — Applicability — Suit for damages for breach of contract of marriage.

A suit for damages for breach of contract of marriage is not governed either by Art. 5 or by Art. 11, Gwalior Limitation Act (corresponding to Arts. 49 and 113 of Indian Act). Such a suit is no doubt governed by Art. 115 of the Indian Act but there being no corresponding Article in the Gwalior Limitation Act, the omnibus Article 13 would apply to it. (Paras 4, 5, 6)

(b) Contract Act (1872), S. 73 — Breach of promise of marriage — Damages — Suit for return of ornaments or their value given at time of betrothal — Maintainability — (Hindu Law — Marriage).

Under the Hindu Law, betrothal is in the nature of a contract to which the Contract Act applies. A suit for damages for breach of promise of marriage is therefore entertainable: Case law ref. (Para 7)

A agreed to marry his son with B's daughter, B refused to perform the marriage of his daughter on ground that she had not attained the requisite age of 16. A then married his son to another girl but in spite of this marriage he was willing to perform second marriage of his son with B's daughter. B then married his daughter to another person. A sued B for damages for breach of contract of marriage claiming inter alia a specific sum of money as value of ornaments and clothes given to B's daughter at the time of betrothal. B counter claimed certain expenses.

Held that (i) under the Hindu Law, there is no restriction on a husband to marry more than one wife. As A was willing to marry his son with B's daughter in spite of the first marriage and there being no contract that B's daughter was to be the first wife of A's son, there was no breach of contract on the part of A but on the other hand B was guilty of the breach. (Para 8)

(ii) That the gifts of ornaments and clothes made by A at the time of betrothal or ceremony preceding the marriage were not absolute gifts and could be claimed back in case of breach of contract of the proposed marriage: AIR 1950 All 592; 11 Bom 412, Rel. on. (Para 9)

(iii) That the defendant B himself being guilty of breach he was not entitled to any general damages for expenses incurred by him at the time of betrothal. (Para 11)

(iv) That the plaintiff having obtained a decree for a specific sum of money as value of the ornaments as claimed by him could not claim in appeal the return of the ornaments in specie or their value at the time of decree. (Para 12)

SHINDE J: These two appeals arise out of the suit filed by Pyarchand against Khubchand for damages. The plaintiff alleges in his plaint that the defendant entered into a contract with him to give his daughter Mulibai in marriage to the plaintiff's son Manaklal on 5-2-1932: that the defendant married his daughter to one Chothmal on 17-1-1939 and thus broke the contract; that in pursuance of the contract, the plaintiff on the occasion of betrothal, spent Rs. 860/- in giving presents of ornaments and clothes to the daughter of the defendant; that he, as a result of the defendant's action, sustained mental hardship and loss of reputation. On these allegations, the plaintiff claimed Rs. 860/- as special damages and Rs. 1200/- general damages from the defendant. The defendant admitted the contract of marriage and also the fact of marrying his daughter to Chothmal on 17-1-1939, but pleaded that the contract was broken by the plaintiff. He stated in his written statement that the contract between the parties was that Mulibai was to be married to the son of the plaintiff as his first wife.

But the plaintiff in breach of this contract married his son to the daughter of Kauram in May, 1935. He further stated that he incurred an expenditure of Rs. 700/- at the time of betrothal and also suffered mental worry which he estimated at Rs. 1000/-. On these allegations he prayed that the plaintiff's suit be dismissed and the claim for Rs. 1700/- for damages be decreed against the plaintiff. The City Sub-Judge, Ujjain, dismissed both the plaintiff's suit and the defendant's counter claim. The plaintiff filed an appeal and the defendant filed cross-objections. The learned District Judge, Ujjain, decreed the plaintiff's suit to the extent of Rs. 800/- and dismissed the cross-objections of the defendant. Against this judgment and decree both the parties have filed these appeals.

(2) The plaintiff's appeal is confined only to the return of the ornaments or their market price at the time of the decree. The defendant's appeal on the other hand, is for reversing the decree of the District Court for Rs. 800/- passed in favour of the plaintiff and for decreeing the claim of the defendant for Rs. 1700/-.

(3) A preliminary objection has been raised by Mr. Bhagwandas Gupta counsel for the plaintiff that the counter claim of the defendant is time barred. He contends that if plaintiff broke the contract, cause of action accrued to the defendant in May, 1935. The counter claim was filed on 1-5-39. As the Article 5 or 11 of the Gwalior Limitation Act equivalent to Article 49 or 113 of the Indian Limitation Act applies, the period of limitation being 3 years, the claim is time barred.

(4) Conceding for the sake of argument that the cause of action accrued to the defendant in May 1935 we have to consider whether Article 5 or 11 of the Gwalior Limitation Act, which is equivalent to Article 49 or 113 of the Indian Limitation Act, covers this case or not. (After quoting Art. 5, Gwalior Limitation Act in Hindi, the judgment proceeds:)

Article 49 of the Indian Limitation Act reads as follows:

"For other specific moveable property or for compensation for wrongfully taking or injuring or wrongfully detaining the same.	Three years. When the pro- perty is wrongfully taken or injured or when the de- tainer's possession becomes unlawful."
--	---

The wording of Article 49 clearly indicates that the Article is attracted only when specific moveable property or compensation is asked for. The suit as it is framed is not for return of ornaments. The plaint clearly states that the suit is for damages for breach of contract. The written statement filed by the defendant clearly states in para No. 13 that the breach of contract by the plaintiff caused the defendant Rs. 700/- special damages and Rs. 1000/- general damages. The statements made both in the plaint and in the written statement make it abundantly clear that the suit is not for the return of the ornaments but for damages caused by the breach of the contract. In these circumstances Article 49 is not attracted in this case.

(5) The learned counsel for the plaintiff further contends that if Article 5 of the Gwalior Limitation Act is not attracted, Article 11 of the Gwalior Limitation Act is applicable to this case. Article 11 of the Gwalior Limitation Act is as follows: (After quoting Art. 11 in Hindi, the judgment proceeds:) The parallel Article in Indian Limitation Act is Article 113 which reads as follows:

"For specific perform- ance of a contract.	Three years. The date fixed for the perform- ance, or if no such date is fixed, when

the plaintiff has notice that performance is refused."

As already stated the suit is for damages for breach of contract. Hence Article 11, which covers a suit brought for specific performance, cannot be made applicable to the case under consideration. Hence even this Article is not applicable to the present case.

(6) The suit as it is framed no doubt attracts Article 115, Indian Limitation Act. This Article reads as follows:

"For compensation Three years. for the breach of any contract express or implied, not in writing registered and not here-in specially provided for.

When the contract is broken or (where there are successive breaches) when the breach in respect of which the suit is instituted occurs, or (where the breach is continuing) when it ceases."

There is no need, however, to enter into a further discussion as to whether Article 115, Indian Limitation Act, is applicable to the present suit or not. There is no Article in Gwalior Limitation Act analogous to Article 115, Indian Limitation Act. Consequently, the omnibus Article 13, Gwalior Limitation Act, has to be applied to this case. As this Article prescribes six years as the period of limitation, the suit is clearly within time. The preliminary objection, therefore, has no force.

(7) Turning now to the consideration of the main points raised in the case the first point to consider is who broke the contract. Before proceeding to consider that question, it may be mentioned that it is now well established that the suit for damages for breach of promise of marriage is entertainable. In —'Rajendra Bahadur Singh v. Roshan Singh', A. I. R. 1950 All. 592, their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court held that in a Hindu family betrothal is in the nature of a contract to which the Contract Act is applicable. In Mayne's Hindu Law, it is stated that where the marriage contract is entered into on behalf of the minors, courts have generally awarded damages for breach of contract. (Vide Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage 1950 Edn. p. 137). In —'Khimji Kuverji v. Lalji Karamsi ILR (1941) Bom. 211 their Lordships of the Bombay High Court held that a suit for damages for breach of promise of marriage is entertainable. In—'Umed Kika v. Nagindas Narotamdas', their Lordships of the Bombay High Court allowed damages to the bridegroom against the father of the bride for breach of promise. Vide 7 Bom. H. C. (O. C.) 122. In —'Mulji Thakarsey v. Gomti', 11 Bom 412 their Lordships of the Bombay High Court gave damages to the bridegroom for breach of promise of marriage. The same view was followed in —'Purshotamdas Tribhovandas v. Purshotamdas Mangaldas', 21 Bom 23. It is, therefore, now well settled that a suit for damages for breach of promise of marriage is entertainable.

(8) That brings us to the consideration of the breach of promise. The learned counsel for the defendant contends that the contract was broken by the plaintiff when he married his son to the daughter of Kaluram in May 1935. That Manaklal married the daughter of Kaluram in May, 1935 is admitted by both the parties. The plaintiff, however, states that his wife having been burnt she was unable to attend to household work and hence he needed a daughter-in-law, to look after his house.

When he approached the defendant he refused to marry his daughter until she was 16 years old. Hence he married his son to the daughter of Kaluram. Mangilal, who is the son of the plaintiff Pyrachand, also, testifies to this fact. This fact is also mentioned in the reply dated 19-12-1938 to the notice dated 7-12-1938. It also appears from the notice given by Khubchand to the plaintiff dated 18-12-1938, that Mulibai was on that date about 14 years old. The plaintiff applied for permission as both his son and Kaluram's daughter had not attained the requisite age. At that time, Khubchand defendant objected to the permission being given to the plaintiff. If he wanted to marry his daughter, there is no reason why permission may not have been sought for Mulibai as she could not have been less than 10 at that time. This fact goes to prove plaintiff's allegation that in 1935 the defendant was not willing to marry his daughter to the plaintiff's son. There is no evidence to show that the contract between the parties was that Mulibai was to be married at a particular age. Consequently, if the defendant had been willing to marry his daughter in 1935 he would have applied for permission for his daughter. In any case, there is no evidence on record to show that the contract between the parties was that Mulibai was to be Maniklal's first wife and not the second one. Even after Maniklal was married to Kaluram's daughter, the plaintiff sent a telegram on 6-5-36 to the defendant as under:

"Under instructions of Pyarchand of Firm Chhajuram Mangiram you betrothed your daughter Mulibai with Pyarchand's son Maniklal you are going to betrothe her again with Bherubua's son take notice that your action would result in breach of contract for marriage you responsible for damages and consequences".

Ramprasad Bhargava
Vakil"

This telegram shows that the plaintiff was willing to carry out the contract. But the defendant married Mulibai to Chotumal son of Fattaji resident of Badod on 17-1-1939. In Hindu Law there is no restriction on a husband to marry more than one wife. In the absence of a contract that Mulibai was to be the first wife of Maniklal, it cannot be said that the plaintiff, who was willing to marry his son to Mulibai broke the contract. In these circumstances there is no doubt in my mind that the contract was broken by the defendant.

(9) The next contention raised by the defendant is that the ornaments for which the decree had been given by the lower court were given by the plaintiff as gift and hence neither ornaments nor their price can be claimed by the plaintiff. This contention also cannot be sustained. It has been held in a number of cases that when a contract of marriage is broken a person is entitled to the return of jewellery from the person who breaks the contract. The gifts made on the occasion of the various ceremonies preceding the marriage are not absolute gifts. Such gifts are made in anticipation of & as consideration for the proposed marriage. Vide —'Rajendra Bahadur Singh v. Roshan Singh', A. I. R. 1950 All 592. Gooroo Dass Banerjee in the Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan (Tagore Law Lectures, 1878) at page 92 states as follows:

"But though specific performance cannot be enforced the party injured by the breach of a contract of betrothal is entitled to recover compensation for any pecuniary damages that might have been sustained, and also for any injury to character or prospects in life which may naturally arise in the usual course of things from such breach".

In — 'Mulji Thakarsi v. Gomti', 11 Bom 412 it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to the return of the ornaments as the defendant had committed the breach of promise. In — 'Rambhat v. Timmayya', 16 Bom. 673 their Lordships of the Bombay High Court held that the plaintiff is entitled to the return of ornaments. The same view was taken in — 'Umed Kika v. Nagindas', 7 Bom. H. C. (O. C.) 122. In these circumstances there is no force in the contention that ornaments given at the time of betrothal or on the occasion of various ceremonies preceding the marriage are absolute gifts.

(10) The next point raised by the counsel for the defendant is that he has received no benefit from the plaintiff and if any ornaments and clothes were given to Mulibai she has taken them away with her, as she is now out of his control, he is not liable to return them or pay any compensation. This argument though specious is devoid of any force. It is admitted that the ornaments were given when Mulibai was a minor living in the guardianship of the defendant. Teharir dated 6-1-1935 gives the description of the ornaments, given by the plaintiff and states that after the marriage Mulibai will take those ornaments with her to the plaintiff's house. Besides although the weight and price have been disputed by the defendant, he had admitted the receipt of the ornaments in para No. 3 of his written statement. Above all Khubchand in his statement admits that the ornaments given to Mulibai by the plaintiff are with him. Under these circumstances this argument is not tenable.

(11) Turning now to the claim made by the defendant against the plaintiff it may be said at the outset that he is not entitled to get general damages as he himself was responsible for breaking the contract. The question is whether he is entitled to the return of ornaments or their price, under S. 65, Contract Act. The defendant states that he gave the ornaments worth Rs. 600/- at the time of betrothal. The first appellate court held that there is no sufficient evidence to hold that the defendant gave ornaments and clothes worth Rs. 600/- to the plaintiff. We see no reason to differ from the view taken by the lower court. There is no reliable evidence to show that clothes and ornaments worth Rs. 600/- were given by the defendant to the plaintiff. The defendant has also asked to be reimbursed for the expenses incurred for dinner etc. On that count he claims Rs. 100/-. As already stated he is not entitled to damages on that count as he himself is guilty of breaking the contract. The result is that the defendant's claim for Rs. 1700/- cannot be allowed.

(12) The plaintiff has filed an appeal for the return of his ornaments in specie or their market price at the time of the decree. This relief cannot be granted. In his plaint the plaintiff specifically prayed for Rs. 800/- as price of the ornaments and Rs. 60/- as price of clothes and Rs. 1200/- as general damages. In his prayer he states clearly that the decree for Rs. 2060/- be given against the defendant; if the defendant returns the ornaments specified in para 3 of the plaint Rs. 800/- be deducted from the suit claim of Rs. 2060/-. In these circumstances the plaintiff now cannot be allowed to claim either the ornaments in specie or their market price at the time of the decree.

(13) For the reasons given above both the appeals are dismissed with costs.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 514 — Applicability — Surety bond under Opium Act for production of accused before police or Court or Customs Officer — Forfeiture of bond for default to produce them before Customs Officer — Section 514 does not apply.

Section 514, Criminal P. C. is applicable only to those bonds which are taken under the Code and which are for appearance before a Court.

A bond was taken under the Opium Act and not under the Code and the surety thereby undertook to produce the accused persons before the police or the Customs Department as well as before the Court. The bond was, however, forfeited for the surety's default in producing the accused persons before the Superintendent of Customs:

Held that (1) in these circumstances the bond in question cannot be dealt with under S. 514, Criminal P. C.;

(2) even assuming that a bond taken under the Opium Act, if it be for appearance before a Court, is included in para. 2 of sub-s. (1) of S. 514, a bond not taken under the Code for appearance before the police or the Customs Department or the Court cannot be treated as being within the scope of the section when it is sought to be forfeited on the ground of the failure of the accused persons to appear before the police or the Customs Department; (Para 4)

(3) further, if there was no procedure for enforcing bonds such as the one in question, the remedy was to amend the Criminal Procedure Code so as to give power to Magistrates to deal with such bonds. The difficulty cannot be removed by extending the application of S. 514 to bonds which, in the face of the clear words of the section, are not covered by it. To do so would be to legislate and not to interpret the section. AIR 1918 Bom 226, Rel. on. (Para 5)

ORDER: This is a revision petition from an order of the District Magistrate of Shivpuri upholding an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate Shivpuri by which he directed the forfeiture of a bond furnished by the applicant for the appearance of certain persons who had been implicated for an offence under the Gwalior Opium Act, Smt. 1980. By the bond the applicant undertook to produce the accused persons before the police or the Customs Department or the Court on any day as directed. It appears that on 26-4-49 the applicant, who stood surety for the appearance of the accused persons in the sum of Rs. 4000/- was directed by the Superintendent Customs Department Shivpuri to produce the accused persons before him, on 2-5-1949. The applicant failed to do so. Thereupon, the superintendent Customs Department made a report to the Magistrate for the forfeiture of the surety bond. The report was purported to be u/s. 58, Excise Act. The learned Magistrate held that the provisions of the Excise Act were not applicable to the forfeiture of a bond taken under the Opium Act. This order of the Magistrate was upheld by the Sessions Judge of Shivpuri. In a revision petition from that order of the Sessions Judge it was held by Shinde J., (as he then was) that as the Opium Act did not prescribe any procedure with regard to the forfeiture of the bond taken under that Act, the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code "would govern the forfeiture of the security taken under the Opium Act." The learned Judge remitted the case to the lower Court for "being dealt with according to law." When the case went back the Magistrate following the procedure laid down in S. 514, Criminal P. C. found that the bond had been broken and made an order directing the forfeiture of the bond.

(2) In this revision petition Mr. Anand learned counsel for the applicant contends that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct the bond to be forfeited under S. 514, Criminal P. C. as the bond in question was not taken under the Code and was not forfeited for appearance before a Court. On the other hand Mr. Mungre the learned Government Advocate for the State maintained that this question was concluded by the decision of Shinde J., in—'State v. Darshan Lal', Criminal Revn. No. 239 of 1949 when he held that the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code would apply to the forfeiture of the bond and directed the Magistrate to dispose of the case according to law.

(3) In my opinion, the contention of the learned counsel for the applicant is well-founded and must be accepted. It is conceded that S. 514 is the only section in the Code under which, if at all the Magistrate would have jurisdiction to forfeit the bond. Sub-section (1) of this section provides:

"Whenever it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court by which a bond under this Code has been taken, or of the Court of a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the First Class, or, when the bond is for appearance before a Court to the satisfaction of such Court, that such bond has been forfeited, the Court shall record the grounds of such proof, and may call upon any person bound by such bond to pay the penalty thereof, or to show cause why it should not be paid."

(4) It is clear from this section that it is applicable only to those bonds which are taken under the Code and which are for appearance before a Court. It is not disputed that the bond taken in this case was not under the Code and though by that bond the applicant undertook to produce the accused persons before the police or the Customs Department as well as before the Court, the bond was forfeited for the applicant's default in producing the accused persons before the Superintendent of Customs. I fail to see how in these circumstances the bond in question can be dealt with under S. 514 on any straining of the language of the section. I do not think the decision of Shinde J., in—'State v. Darshan Lal', Cri. Rev. No. 239 of 1949 (Madh B) can be taken as deciding the question that the bond in the present case falls under S. 514 of the Code. It is obvious from the order passed in the Criminal Revision that the question whether the bond in this case fell within the scope of S. 514 was not considered in the revision petition, and no arguments were addressed on the question by the counsel then appearing in the case. The question which was considered in the former revision petition was a general question as to the applicability of the Code to the forfeiture of the bond taken under the Opium Act. The question whether a bond taken under the Opium Act not for appearance before a Court or forfeited for default in appearance not before a Court but before any other authority was not decided in that revision petition. I am quite prepared to assume on the basis of the decision of my lord the Chief Justice and for the purposes of this case that a bond taken under the Opium Act, if it be for appearance before a Court is included in para 2 of sub-s. (1) of S. 514. But even on this assumption I do not see how a bond not taken under the Code for appearance before the police or the Customs Department or the Court could be treated as being within the scope of S. 514 when it is sought to be forfeited on the ground of the failure of the accused persons to appear before the police or the Customs Department.

(5) Learned Government Advocate contended that if such bonds are not included in S. 514 then there would be no procedure for enforcing such bonds and that therefore, S. 514 should be liberally construed and applied 'mutatis mutandis' to bonds such as the one we have under consideration here. As to this argument it is sufficient to say that if there is no procedure for enforcing bonds such as the one we have here, the remedy is to amend the Criminal Procedure Code so as to give power to Magistrates to deal with such bonds. The difficulty cannot be removed by extending the application of S. 514 to bonds which in the face of the clear words of the section, are not covered by it. To do so would be to legislate and not to interpret the section. I am, therefore, of the view that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct the forfeiture of the bond. I am fortified in the view I have taken by the decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of—'In re Hubart Crawford', AIR 1918 Bom 226.

(6) For the above reasons I accept this revision petition and set aside the order of the Magistrate directing the forfeiture of the bond. The amount of the bond if already realised from the applicant must be refunded to him.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 146 — Attachment — Possessor dispossessed — Possession given to non-applicant — No power.

While attaching the property a Magistrate has no power to order the party who is in possession at the time of the application to hand over the possession of the property to the non-applicant pending the final decision in the proceedings. He can, after attachment, manage the property subject to his control and supervision. But it is highly undesirable for him to appoint a party to the dispute to manage the property on his behalf. (Para 3)

Abdul Hafiz, for Applicant; Mungre, Government-Advocate, for the State, Gokhale, for Complainant, Bakhtawar Singh.

ORDER: This revision petition arises out of proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C. instituted in the Court of Mr. Bhargava, Second Class Magistrate Shajapur, on a complaint dated 24-7-51 of the non-applicant Bakhtawar Singh. The learned Magistrate after coming to the conclusion that a dispute likely to cause the breach of the peace existed and there was a likelihood of the breach of peace, passed an order attaching the disputed property, pending his decision under S. 145. The learned Magistrate also directed the applicant who was in possession of the property at the time of the presentation of the application to hand over the possession of the property to the non-applicant pending the final decision in the case. The applicant objected to the disturbance of his possession and also raised the objection that Mr. Bhargava being a Magistrate of the Second Class was not competent to entertain the application under S. 145, Criminal P. C. The learned Magistrate overruled both these objections. The applicant then approached the Sessions Judge of Shajapur for a revision of the order of the Magistrate. The learned Sessions Judge rejected the revision petition. The applicant has now preferred this revision petition against the decisions of the Courts below.

(2) Mr. Abdul Hafiz, the counsel for the applicant pressed before me both the objections raised by the applicant in the lower Court. In my opinion, the objections must be upheld, and this petition must be accepted.

(3) As regards the disturbance of the applicant's possession pending the final disposal of the application under S. 145, Criminal P. C., it is clear that the learned Magistrate was in error. Under S. 145, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass any temporary order other than an order of attachment of the property in urgent cases pending inquiry into the question of possession. He has thus no power to order the party who was in possession at the time of the application to hand over the possession of the property to the non-applicant pending the final decision in the proceedings. The Magistrate can, no doubt, in execution of the order of attachment take possession of the property and manage it during the pendency of the proceedings and for this purpose it is open to him to appoint some person to manage the property subject to his control and supervision. Apart from the fact that it is highly undesirable for a Magistrate to appoint a party to the dispute to manage the property on his behalf, it does not appear from the record in the present case that the learned Magistrate in directing the applicant to hand over the possession of the property to the non-applicant intended to appoint the non-applicant as a person to manage the property on his behalf and subject to his control and supervision. That being so, the direction of the Magistrate disturbing the possession of the applicant pending the final decision in the proceedings cannot be maintained. Mr. Mungre the learned Government Advocate for the State frankly and rightly conceded that he could not support this direction of the Magistrate.

(4) The objection that Mr. Bhargava being a Second Class Magistrate was not competent to entertain the application under S. 145, Criminal P. C., is also well founded. Learned Counsel for the applicant says that there is no notification or order of the Government appointing Mr. Bhargava as a Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The learned Government Advocate on the other hand relies on notification No. 258 of the Law Department published at page 6 of the Gazette dated 2-4-49 to show that Mr. Bhargava was a Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Mr. Mungre admits that there is no other notification or order of the Government with regard to the appointment of Mr. Bhargava as a Sub-Divisional Magistrate. In my opinion, the notification relied on by the learned Government Advocate does not in any way help him. This notification was only with regard to the posting at various places of the Second Class Magistrate mentioned in the notification. The notification nowhere mentions that these Second Class Magistrates would be in the charge of sub-divisions at the places of their posting. It is also worthy of note that in the notification the place of posting is stated to be "the Court" of a particular place. Under S. 13, Criminal P. C., a Sub-Divisional Magistrate is a Magistrate of the First or Second Class who has been placed in charge of a sub-division by an order of the Government. No such order of the Government appointing Mr. Bhargava, Second Class Magistrate, as a Sub-Divisional Magistrate is before me and none is stated to exist. Mr. Mungre relied also on an order of this Court passed some time in December 1950 with regard to the transfer of Mr. Bhargava from Bamori to Shajapur as Munsif Magistrate. I do not see how this order shows that Mr. Bhargava was a Sub-Divisional Magistrate at Shajapur. The order of the High Court transferring Mr. Bhargava from Bamori to Shajapur is not an order of the Government placing Mr. Bhargava in charge of a sub-division. There is also nothing in the order to show that Mr. Bhargava was a Sub-Divisional Magistrate at Bamori and was transferred to Shajapur in that capacity. In my opinion, Mr. Bhargava had, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain the application under S. 145, Criminal P. C.

(5) For the above reasons, I hold that the proceedings conducted in this case by Mr. Bhargava were without jurisdiction. The proceedings are, therefore, quashed. The possession of the property must be restored to the applicant who was in possession at the date of the application filed by the non-applicant before Mr. Bhargava. The petition is accordingly accepted.

Per Full Bench: The Madhya Bharat Abolition of Jagirs Act No. 28 of 1951 is declared to be valid except as regards S. 4(1)(g) and sub-cl. (iv) and (v) of cl. 4 of Sch. 1 which are declared to be illegal and inoperative and a writ of mandamus is issued to the State Government directing not to give effect to the above provisions of the impugned Act: AIR 1952 SC 252, Rel. on. (Para 127)

Per Shinde C. J. and Dixit J., Chaturvedi J. contra: Section 4(1)(g) is bad both for want of public purpose and for perpetrating a fraud on the Constitution. It is also void as it contravenes the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution. (Paras 8, 69, 119)

Per Shinde C. J. and Dixit J., Chaturvedi J. contra: The Jagirdars were under no legal obligation to incur expenditure on account of education, public health and roads or on account of police, revenue and judicial powers. These deductions in sub-cl. (4) and (5) of cl. 4 of Sch. I are obviously a device to reduce net income and to bring it down to as low a level as possible. These deductions, therefore, are of an artificial character whose object is to inflate the deduction and thus bring about either non-payment of compensation or reduction in compensation. This is nothing but a colourable exercise of legislative power under Entry 42. Consequently, sub-cl. (4) and (5) of cl. 4 of Sch. 1 are unconstitutional and inoperative. (Paras 13, 63, 69, 122)

Per Shinde C. J. and Dixit J.: Section 4(1)(g) of the impugned Act and sub-cl. (4) and (5) of cl. 4, Sch. 1 can be separated from the rest of the Act. Consequently the whole of the Act need not be declared ultra vires. (Paras 14, 70)

Per Chaturvedi J.: The Jagir lands including forests, quarries, mines, tanks etc. belong to the State and not to the Jagirdars. The Jagirdars can be regarded only as political vassals under the Suzerain, in possession of the properties with a right to enjoy the income thereof, and, also as administrative functionaries responsible for the administration, and, their position is bound to vary with any change in the political set-up of the State. The Jagirdars are entitled to political pension or to compensation as commutation of pension. Whatever compensation on whatsoever basis may be paid to them by the Suzerain, it cannot be challenged by them as they have no right to demand any compensation. It has always to be borne in mind that the power which confers can always take away that which it has granted and the question of compensation does not arise at all. (Para 107)

*(b) Constitution of India, Art. 31(4) — Public purpose is not justiciable issue.

Per Dixit and Chaturvedi JJ., Shinde C. J. dissenting: The existence of a public purpose as a condition precedent to the exercise of the power of compulsory acquisition being a provision of Art. 31(2), an infringement of such a provision cannot, under Art. 31(4), be put forward as a ground for questioning the validity of the Act. AIR 1952 SC 252, Rel. on.

(Note: Shinde C. J. has held that Mukherjea J. has agreed with Mahajan and Aiyar JJ. in AIR 1952 SC 252).

(c) Constitution of India, Arts. 31(2), 39(b), 39(c) — Public purpose — Test — M.B. Act, 28 of 1951 is for public purpose. (M. B. Act, 28 of 1951, S. 1).

It is not necessary to specify public purpose in the Act itself. It can be ascertained from the tenor and intendment of the Act. When the object of the Act is to benefit the community at large, it can be said to be for public purpose. (Para 3)

Public purpose is essentially a product of time and circumstances. Time moves on and circumstances change rapidly, and so does the concept of a public purpose. It has to be construed according to the spirit of the times in which the particular legislation is enacted. The concept is not a rigid concept and it has no settled meaning. AIR 1952 SC 252, Rel. on. (Para 45)

Although the purpose of the M. B. Act 28 of 1951 is not specified, there is no doubt that it is inspired and dominated by a public purpose. It is obvious that the object of the Act is to extinguish the interests of the intermediary and to bring the actual cultivators into direct relations with the State Government and thereby to avoid concentration of wealth and means of production to the common detriment as laid down in Arts. 39(b) and (c) of the Constitution. It cannot be denied, therefore, that there is a public purpose for the acquisition of Jagir lands. (Para 4)

From the whole tenor and intendment of the Act, it can fairly be inferred that the amelioration of the peasantry living in jagir areas and the emancipation of this class of sub-human serfs from the medieval and archaic bondage which is non-conducive to the general interests of the community is the main purpose behind the impugned Act. (Para 99)

(d) Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 1 — Application to acquisitions under other Statutes.

Because the provisions as to assessment of compensation enacted in the Land Acquisition Act only apply to acquisitions that are made by notification under that Act, its provisions have no application to acquisitions made under either local or central laws unless they are specifically made applicable by the provisions of these Statutes. AIR 1952 SC 252, Rel. on. (Para 15)

(e) Words and Phrases — Resumption — Word connotes taking back what is given — What is resumed is not the property of persons from whom it is taken back by the rightful owner. (Paras 16, 75)

(f) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 35, 87 — Official publications.

So long as the opinions expressed in official publications are not treated as conclusive in respect of matters requiring judicial determination, there would appear to be no objection in referring to the report for the purpose of gathering historical facts which are not in issue. (g) M. B. Abolition of Jagirs Act (28 of 1951) S. 4 (1) (a) — Not ultra vires.

Per Dixit J: It is not correct to regard the acquisition of an estate, as an aggregate of the acquisition of separate parts of or interests in the estate considered independently of each other. The contention that S. 4 (1) (a) is ultra vires, because it vests in the State non-income yielding properties in the Jagir for which no compensation is being paid, is therefore, untenable. AIR 1952 Madh B 57 (FB), Rel. on; AIR 1951 All 674 (FB), Ref. (Para 50)

(h) M. B. Abolition of Jagirs Act, (28 of 1951) Sch. I, Cl. 4 (iii) — Validity.

As the deduction under sub-cl. (iii) of cl. 4 of Sch. I is in respect of a legal obligation of the Jagirdars of Madhya Bharat to incur expenditure on account of land records and Choukidari, the sub-clause is valid. (Paras 9, 10, 57)

(i) M.B. Abolition of Jagirs Act (28 of 1951) S. 2 (1) (vi) — Holder of mediatised estate.

With the lapse of the British paramountcy over Indian States in 1947, the guarantees given by the British Government to the holders of the 'mediatised' estates also lapsed and since then the holders of these estates are, in their status or rights, no better than the other Jagirdars of Gwalior State. They cannot claim to be independent chiefs or any other higher status. (Para 73)

SHINDE C. J.: These petitions have been filed under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India for the issue of a writ in the nature of Mandamus or alternatively for the issue of suitable directions and orders to restrain the opposite party from giving effect to, or acting in any manner by virtue of, Madhya Bharat Abolition of Jagirs Act No. 28 of 1951. Although several objections have been taken to the validity of the Act Mr. P. R. Das, learned counsel for some of the petitioners, has confined himself to two main contentions. His third contention that the impugned Act was passed by a Legislature not validly constituted, he has reserved for a possible appeal to the Supreme Court, as it has already been repelled by a Full Bench of this Court in — 'Shree Ram Dube v. The State', ILR (1952) Madh B 178 (A). His two main contentions are as follows:

(1) there being no public purpose, the acquisition of Jagir lands is illegal;

(2) some provisions of the impugned Act are ultra vires in so far as they constitute a fraud on the Constitution.

(2) Mr. Das contends that unlike the Bihar and Uttar Pradesh Land Reforms Act, the impugned Act gives no indication as to the land-reforms which are proposed to be undertaken; Ss. 19 and 20 of the impugned Act provide for land tenure but actually the position of the tenants is made worse under S. 20 of the impugned Act and consequently it cannot be said to be a scheme for land-reforms. Mr. Chitale, the learned Advocate General, contends that the bill, which ultimately was passed into the impugned Act, was pending at the commencement of the Constitution and having been reserved for the consideration of the President has received his assent; consequently the inquiry as to whether there is any public purpose or not is barred by Art. 31 (4) of the Constitution. He further argues that the Supreme Court by majority held in the case of — 'The State of Bihar v. Kameshwar Singh of Darbhanga', AIR 1952 S C 252 (B) that inquiry into the question of public purpose is barred by Art. 31 (4) of the Constitution; and hence the question whether there was any public purpose for the acquisition of Jagir lands or not cannot be agitated in this Court. Mr. P. R. Das counters this argument by stating that in the Bihar Case Mahajan, Mukherjea and Aiyar JJ. held that public purpose is a justiciable issue even in a case covered by Article 31(4). Mahajan and Aiyar JJ., clearly stated in their judgments that Art. 31 (4) does not bar an inquiry as to the existence of a public purpose, for the acquisition of land. The opinion of Mukherjea J. can be gathered from the following observations:

"I had the advantage of going carefully through the judgment of my learned brother Mahajan J. and I concur entirely in the conclusions arrived at by him". (Vide AIR 1952 S C 252, para. 74 (B)."

Another significant passage from which the opinion of his Lordship can be gathered is as follows:

"As regards S. 4(b) it has been held by my learned brother that the provision of this clause is unconstitutional as it does not disclose any public purpose at all. The requirement of public purpose is implicit in compulsory acquisition of property by the State or, what is called, the exercise of its power of 'Eminent Domain'. This condition is implied in the provisions of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution and although the enactment in the present case fulfills the requirements of Cl. (3) of Article 31 and as such attracts the operation of Cl. (4) of that Article, my learned brother has taken the view that the bar created by Cl. (4) is confined to the question of compensation only and does not extend to the existence or necessity of a public purpose which, though implicit in, has not been expressly provided for, by Cl. (2) of the Article. For my part I would be prepared to assume that Cl. (4) of Art. 31 relates to every thing that is provided for in Cl. (2) either in express terms or even impliedly and consequently the question of the existence of a public purpose does not come within the purview of our enquiry in the present case. Even then I would hold that the same reasons, which have weighed with my learned brother in declaring S. 23 (f) of the impugned Act to be unconstitutional, apply with equal, if not greater, force to S. 4(b) of the Act and I have no hesitation in agreeing with him as regards his decision on the constitutionality of this provision of the Act though I would prefer to adopt a different line of reasoning in support of the same" (Vide para. 76)."

The words 'For my part I would be prepared to assume' etc. and the words 'even then' in the following sentence are particularly significant. These words indicate that his Lordship did agree with Mahajan and Aiyar JJ. in holding that the existence of public purpose is justiciable issue. Mukherjea J. held that even on the ground of colourable legislation, S. 4 (b) was ultra vires. The inference that can be drawn, to my mind, is that according to his Lordship both on the ground of non-existence of public purpose and colourable legislation S. 4 (b) of the Bihar Land Reforms Act was ultra vires. In these circumstances the enquiry as to the existence of a public purpose is not barred by Art. 31 (4) of the Constitution.

(3) It is no doubt true that the Madhya Bharat Abolition of Jagirs Act does not state any definite scheme of land reforms. The title of the Act, however, states that it is an Act to provide for the resumption of all jagir lands in the State and for certain other methods of land reforms in Jagir areas. Mr. Das admits that it is not necessary to specify public purpose and that it can be ascertained from the tenor and intendment of the Act. In — 'AIR 1952 SC 252 (B)', Mahajan J. observed as follows:

"It is a well accepted proposition of law that property of individuals cannot be appropriated by the State under the power of compulsory acquisition for the mere purpose of adding to the revenues of the State.

"The principle of compulsory acquisition of property", says Cooley "is founded on the superior claims of the whole community over the individual citizen but is applicable only in those cases where private property is wanted for public use, or demanded by the public welfare and that no instance is known in which it has been taken for the mere purpose of raising a revenue by sale or otherwise and the exercise of such a power is utterly destructive of individual right." (Vide para. 54)."

In the same case Mahajan J. observed that the intention must be to benefit the community at large (para 52). From these observations, it is clear that the object of the Act must be to benefit the community at large. Jagir lands were taken in order to avoid concentration of large blocks of lands in a few hands and to follow the directive principle laid down in Art. 39 (b) and (c) of the Constitution. These directive principles are as follows:

"The State shall, in particular, direct its policy towards securing:

- (b) that the ownership and control of the material resources of the community are so distributed as best to subserve the common good;
  - (c) that the operation of the economic system does not result in the concentration of wealth and means of production to the common detriment."
- (4) Evidently the object of this legislation is to distribute the ownership and the control of the material resources so as to subserve best the common good and to avoid concentration of wealth and means of production to the common detriment. In the case of — 'State of Bihar v. Kameshwarsingh,' (B), Mahajan J. made the following observations with regard to Bihar Land Reforms Act:

"Now it is obvious that concentration of big blocks of land in the hands of a few individuals is contrary to the principle on which the Constitution of India is based. The purpose of the acquisition contemplated by the impugned Act therefore is to do away with the concentration of big blocks of land and means of production in the hands of a few individuals and to so distribute the ownership and control of the material resources which come in the hands of the State as to subserve the common good as best as possible. In other words, shortly put, the purpose behind the Act is to bring about a reform in the land distribution system of Bihar for the general benefit of the community as advised. The legislature is the best Judge of what is good for the community, by whose suffrage it comes into existence and it is not possible for this court to say that there was no public purpose behind the acquisition contemplated by the impugned Statute. The purpose of the statute certainly is in accordance with the letter and spirit of the Constitution of India" (Vide para. 52).

On the same subject Chandrasekhara Aiyar J. made the following observations:

"When the legislature declares that there is a public purpose behind the legislation, we have of course to respect its words. The object of the Act in question is to extinguish the interests of intermediaries like Zamindars, proprietors, and estate and tenure-holders etc., and to bring actual cultivators into direct relations with the State Government. To achieve this end, several provisions have been enacted for the transfer and the vesting of such interests in the State as regards various items of properties. It is impossible to deny that the Act is inspired and dominated by a public purpose..... etc. (Vide para 129)."

These observations apply with equal force to the present case. Although the purpose of the Act is not specified, there is no doubt that it is inspired and dominated by a public purpose. It is obvious that the object of the Act is to extinguish the interests of the intermediary and to bring the actual cultivators into direct relations with the State Government and thereby to avoid concentration of wealth and means of production to the common detriment. It cannot be denied, therefore, that there is a public purpose for the acquisition of Jagir lands.

(5) This, however, does not mean that all the items proposed to be taken over by the impugned Act are for public purpose. As already stated the object of the Act is to do away with the concentration of large blocks of land in a few hands and to bring the actual cultivators into direct relations with the State Government. If this be the object of the Act, one fails to find the object behind the taking over of all buildings on Jagir lands used for schools, offices, hospitals and other purposes. They do not form part of the Jagir lands. Article 31A (2) (a) defines the expression "estate" as follows:

"The expression 'estate' shall, in relation to any local area, have the same meaning as that expression or its local equivalent has in the existing law relating to land tenures in force in that area, and shall also include any jagir, Inam or Muafi or other similar grant."

Section 2 of Kanon Mal Gwalior Smt. 1983 defines the word "land". The definition clearly shows that the word "land" does not include buildings. The same Act also defines the expression "Khata" (holding). That definition also does not include buildings in the expression 'holding'. Dhar and Indore Tenancy Acts also define the expression 'holding'. Those definitions also do not cover buildings constructed on the lands. Qawaid-Jagirdaran which governs rights and obligations of Jagirdars in Gwalior State defines the expression 'Jagirdar'. The expression 'Jagirdar' includes twelve different kinds of grantees. All these grantees, they are either holders of cash grant or of villages or part of a village. Similarly, the Manual for Jagirdars of Holkar State also defines the expression 'Jagirdar' and 'Inamdar'. According to the definition they are grantees of one or more villages or part of a village. It is clear from these definitions that the expressions 'estate', 'Jagir' or 'Inam' only refer to the grant of lands. Besides the impugned Act is clearly designed to resume Jagir lands as is clear from the title of the Act. The expression 'Jagir lands' has been defined in the impugned Act as follows:

" 'Jagir land' means any land in which or in relation to which any Jagirdar has rights as such in respect of land revenue or other earnings; "

This makes it quite clear that the impugned Act does not envisage taking over of any thing else except jagir lands over which Jagirdars have rights in respect of land revenue or other earnings. The purpose of taking over the jagir lands is as stated above to avoid concentration of large blocks of lands in a few hands and to bring the cultivators into direct relations with the State Government. This obviously is not the purpose of taking over the buildings on Jagir lands. Section 4 (1) (g), therefore, has no connection with the scheme of land reforms envisaged by the impugned Act. No doubt the public purpose need not be specified; it can be gathered from the tenor and intendment of a statute. I, however, fail to see from the tenor and intendment of the impugned Act any public purpose behind the taking over of the buildings specified in S. 4 (1) (g). Adding to the resources of the State is not a public purpose. Mahajan J.'s observations and the passage from Cooley cited above fully bear out this proposition.

(6) It has not been proved that the Jagirdars were under any legal obligation to construct schools, hospitals or other buildings for general public use. The Advocate General referred to Darbar Policy of the Gwalior State and argued that it is the duty of the Jagirdars to construct schools and hospitals etc. It may be stated that the Darbar Policy, as its very name suggests, is a policy to be followed. His Highness the Maharaja Madhav Rao Scindia who wrote this policy states in the foreword as follows:

"The energy I have expended and efforts I have put forth in writing this Policy have mainly been inspired with the aim that the work may prove beneficial to the next generation (in which I have meant to include the Ruler as well as the Officers, subjects, etc.) so that for purposes of administering the State and shouldering the grave responsibilities thereof they might discover in this collection a storehouse which may serve to the Ruler, Officers and subjects of the State, as a guide, philosopher and friend."

This makes it quite clear that it is not an Act. It is actually an advice tendered to the Jagirdars. The learned Advocate General also referred to the Education Manual. The Education Manual no doubt lays down that Jagirdars whose gross annual income is Rs. 50,000/- and above will be provided with qualified staff by the Education Department if so desired by the Jagirdars and that their salaries will be paid by the Jagirdars. But it does not lay down that it will be the duty of the Jagirdars to open schools. Besides if there be any duty cast on the Jagirdars having a gross income of Rs. 50,000/- and above, the manual imposes no duty on Jagirdars having less income. The Manual in its preamble states that it lays down the educational policy of the State. Therefore, it is not an Act creating legal rights or obligations. It may also be mentioned here that the impugned Act applies to Jagirdars of all States that comprise Madhya Bharat. Although the expression of a 'pious wish' regarding maintenance of schools and hospitals etc. by some classes of Jagirdars appears in some books on Gwalior State, it has not been shown that any other State imposes any duty on the Jagirdars to open schools and hospitals. The result is that there was no legal obligation placed on the Jagirdars to construct schools, hospitals or other buildings for public use. In these circumstances, by no stretch of reasoning can it be said that these buildings form part of Jagir lands. Consequently public purpose must be separately established for the taking over of the buildings.

(7) Section 4 (1) (g) of the impugned Act which authorises the taking over of all buildings is also inequitable in so far as it does not affect all the Jagirdars equally. Some Jagirdars who were benevolent by nature and who were more public-spirited spent money of their own accord and constructed schools, hospitals and other useful buildings. While others who thought more of their own pockets did not spend any money. The result of S. 4 (1) (g) is to penalise those who were (not?) benevolent and to put a premium on selfishness. The section also hits the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution as it accords differential treatment to the members belonging to the same class. By virtue of Art. 13, therefore, it is void. Article 31 (b) cannot be invoked to afford protection as the impugned Act is not mentioned in the ninth schedule. In Uttar Pradesh Act all buildings situate within the limits of an estate and belonging to or held by an intermediary have been acknowledged to be the property of the intermediary.

(8) Section 4 (1) (g) is also bad on the ground of colourable legislation. Schedule 1 of the impugned Act computes income from forest, quarries and also excise income for purposes of calculating gross income. But the value of these buildings does not find place in the calculation of gross income. The result, therefore, is that the taking over of these buildings without any compensation amounts to confiscation. It is no doubt true that Article 31 (4) debars the courts from enquiring into the adequacy of compensation. But the clause presupposes that the enactment is the result of a valid exercise of legislative powers conferred on the legislature. This legislation is obviously made in exercise of the powers conferred on the State legislature under Entry 36 of List 2 and Entry 42 of List 3, Schedule 7 of the Constitution. Entry 36 of List 2 states as follows:

"Acquisition or requisitioning of property, except for the purposes of the Union, subject to the provisions of Entry 42, List III".

Entry 42, List III is as follows:

"Principles on which compensation for property acquired or requisitioned for the purposes of the Union or of a State or for any other public purpose is to be determined, & the form and the manner in which such compensation is to be given."

Although the legislature purported to act under these two Entries, in effect it evaded their provisions altogether. No principle has been formulated on which compensation is to be paid for the acquisition of buildings. In so far as the legislature has laid down no principle for determining compensation for the acquisition of buildings, it is a fraud on the Constitution. Mukherjea J. with regard to S. 4 (b) of the Bihar Land Reforms Act made the following observations:

"The clause presupposes however that the enactment is the result of a valid exercise of a legislative power conferred on the legislature by the appropriate entries in the Legislative Lists and if the legislature acts outside these entries or under the pretence of acting within them does some thing which is in flat contradiction with its contents, Cl. (4) of Art. 31 could not be invoked to afford any protection to such legislation" (Vide para 80, AIR 1952 SC 252 (B)).

These remarks are most apposite in respect of S. 4 (1) (g) of the impugned Act. Mahajan J.

on the same subject made the following observations:

"The power of legislation in Entry 42 is for enacting the principles of determining such compensation and for paying it. The principles to be enacted are for determining the equivalent price of the property taken away. It may be that the determination of the equivalent may be left for ascertainment on the basis of certain uniform rules; for instance it may be laid down that the principles for determining compensation will be the rental basis or the market value of the property etc. But it is difficult to imagine that there can be any principles for non-payment of compensation or for negating the payment of compensation. No principles are required to be stated for non-payment of compensation". (Vide AIR 1952 S C 252, para 60(B)).

In the same paragraph Mahajan J. makes the following observation:

"An entry concerning payment of compensation in no sense includes legislative power of non-payment of compensation. The whole purpose of this head of legislation is to provide payment of compensation and not the confiscation of property."

From these observations, it is clear that under Entry 42, List III of Schedule 7 it is incumbent on the legislature to formulate principles for the payment of compensation and if the legislature fails to do so, it is acting in flat contradiction of these provisions. Article 31 (4) cannot be invoked to afford any protection to such legislation. If legislature intends to acquire buildings it must formulate principles for the payment of compensation. As no principles have been formulated for the payment of compensation for the acquisition of schools, offices, hospitals and other buildings of public utility, the acquisition is ultra vires. The result is S. 4 (1) (g) is bad both for want of public purpose and for perpetrating a fraud on the Constitution. It is also void as it contravenes the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution.

(9) Mr. Das and Mr. Engineer contended that Sch. 1, Cl. 4 (2) makes a deduction from the gross income which has no relation to actual facts. The deduction made on account of expenses of collection of rents (including irrecoverable arrears) is actually inflated in order to reduce the amount of compensation. This contention cannot be accepted. Some expenses for the collection of rents were no doubt incurred by the Jagirdars. The question whether these expenses have been unduly inflated or not cannot be gone into as Art. 31 (4) precludes an inquiry into the adequacy of compensation. No further comment is, therefore, needed on the arguments advanced by the learned counsel in this behalf. The contention in respect of Sch. 1, Cl. 4 (3) (4) and (5) however, deserves careful consideration. Clause 4 (3) of the Sch. 1 is as follows:

"The net income of a Jagirdar shall be calculated by deducting from the gross income of the Jagirdar:

(iii) On account of land records and Chowkidari establishment, an amount equal to 12½ per cent. of the gross income."

The first thing that we have to consider is whether the Jagirdars are under any legal obligation to incur any expenditure under the head of land records and Chowkidari establishment. Section 140 of Qawaid-Jagirdaran lays down that there should be a watchman in every Jagir village, if there is no watchman appointed in any Jagir village, attention of the Jagirdar first be drawn to it and if in spite of it no watchman is appointed he should be got appointed through the Muntazim Jagirdaran and the expenses of him shall be recovered from the Jagirdar. The Indore Tenancy Act of 1931 imposes a duty on Jagirdars to appoint a Chowkidar for each village (Vide section 129). Similarly, the Dhar Tenancy Act of 1940-1941 imposes a duty on Jagirdars to appoint a Chowkidar for each village. Both the Indore and Dhar Tenancy Acts have been repealed by the Revenue Administration and Ryotwari Land Revenue and Tenancy Act of 1950. However, the Tenancy Act of 1950 has not repealed the provisions of Qawaid-Jagirdaran Gwalior State. Therefore, as far as S. 140 of Qawaid-Jagirdaran is concerned it is still in force. Consequently the Jagirdars of Gwalior are still under a legal obligation to maintain Chowkidari establishment. Although S. 129 of the Indore Tenancy Act and S. 167 of the Dhar Tenancy Act have been repealed, the Tenancy Act of 1950 imposes a duty to appoint Balais or village servants for each village (Vide Sec. 139). It is not very material for our purpose to enquire whether Balai is the same functionary as the Chowkidar. It is possible that the duties of a Balai and a Chowkidar may differ in some respects. But the fact remains that they are both village servants and that expenses have to be incurred either on account of the appointment of a Balai or a Chowkidar. Deduction on account of Chowkidari establishment, therefore, cannot be said to be illegal.

(10) The position with regard to land records appears to be the same. Under S. 62 (a) of Qawaid-Jagirdaran Gwalior State, it was the duty of every Jagirdar to appoint passed and competent Patwaris and to arrange the papers to be prepared in accordance with the rules of the Darbar. It does not appear, however, that any such duty was cast on Jagirdars in Indore, Dhar, Ratlam, or any other State. However, Jagir Land Records Management Act No. 25 of 1949 was passed in 1949. Section 3 of the said Act lays down as follows:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any Act, Regulation or Rule in force in any Covenanting State of the United State, the preparation of the papers of Land Records of all the Jagirs within the United State, and the management of establishing an office for it and the appointment of village Patwari shall be done by the Government and the cost, which will be incurred by the Government in all this management shall in proportion to the land revenue of the Jagirs, be realised from them as arrears of Tanka".

From this provision it is clear that at the time of the passing of the impugned Act the Jagirdars were under a legal obligation to incur expenditure for the maintenance of land records. Deduction, therefore, on this count cannot be said to be improper. I am, therefore, of the opinion that deduction both on account of land records and Chowkidari establishment cannot be said to be invalid.

(11) Sub-clause (4) of Cl. (4) of Schedule 1 of the impugned Act runs as follows:

"In the case of a Jagirdar other than one holding a Jadid-Usul Jagir or Devasthani Jagir, on account of education, Public Health and Roads, an amount equal to 15 per cent. of the gross income, if it exceeds Rs. 2000/- or an amount equal to 10 per cent. of the gross income in other cases;"

It is urged by the learned counsel for the petitioners that these deductions are arbitrary, as the Jagirdars were under no obligation to incur any expenditure on account of education, public health and roads. The learned Advocate General referred us to Education Manual and also Darbar Policy of the Gwalior State. The provisions of Education Manual and Darbar Policy have already been discussed in connection with the maintenance of schools by Jagirdars. I have already held that no duty has been cast on the Jagirdars in Gwalior State to maintain schools. In any case, no duty was imposed on Jagirdars in any other State to incur expenditure on account of education. The learned Advocate General was not able to show that the Jagirdars were under any obligation to incur expenditure on account of public health or roads. In these circumstances I am bound to hold that this deduction is arbitrary.

(12) Sub-clause (5) of Cl. 4 of Sch. 1 is as follows:

"In the case of a Jagirdar who or whose predecessor-in-interest, immediately before the 15th of May 1948 exercised:

- (a) Police powers, an amount equal to 7 per cent. of the gross income;
- (b) Revenue powers, an amount equal to 4 per cent. of the gross income;
- (c) Judicial powers, an amount equal to 2 per cent. of the gross income."

These deductions can be justified if Police, Revenue and Judicial powers were necessary concomitant of a Jagirdar. Section 55 of Qawaid-Jagirdaran Gwalior State clearly states that no judicial powers can be claimed as a matter of right. It also appears from S. 56 of the said Qawaid-Jagirdaran that Judicial powers were not conferred on Jagirdars whose income was less than Rs. 5000/- p. a. Revenue powers were also conferred on Jagirdars on the recommendation of the Muntazim Jagirdaran. With regard to police powers, reference is made to Police Manual of Gwalior State. Section 191 of the Police Manual states that such Jagirdars whom the honour of keeping police has been conferred will follow the instructions given in this Manual. This section does not give any power to Jagirdars to keep police force. On the contrary, the section itself indicates that the honour of keeping the police is conferred by the Darbar in certain cases. The Indore State Manual of Jagirdars states that no judicial powers can be claimed as a matter of right. With regard to revenue powers, S. 65 of the Manual indicates that these powers were conferred on individual Jagirdars. No provision in any Act has been referred to, to show that the Jagirdars in Holkar State enjoyed police powers as of right. We have not been referred to any enactment in Dhar, Ratlam, and other States which enables Jagirdars to exercise these powers by virtue of their position as a Jagirdar. The conclusion is, therefore, inevitable that the deductions on account of police, revenue and judicial powers are artificial and have no relation to facts.

(13) We have now to examine whether the artificial deduction is allowed by Entry 36, List II, and Entry 42 of List III of 7th Schedule of the Constitution. In Bihar Land Reforms Act, the legislature proposed to deduct from the gross assets, cost of works of benefit to the Rayats by S. 23 (f). This clause was discussed by their Lordships of the Supreme Court and it was held by majority that the clause is a colourable legislation. Mahajan J. made the following observations:

"Section 23(f), however, in my opinion, is a colourable piece of legislation. It has been enacted under power conferred by legislative Entry 42 of List III. It is well-settled that Parliament with limited powers cannot do indirectly what it cannot do directly..... The provision herein impeached has not been arrived at by laying down any principles of paying compensation but in truth, is designed to deprive a number of people of their property without payment of compensation. The State legislature is authorised to pass an Act in the interests of persons deprived of property under Entry 42. They could not be permitted under that power to pass a law that operates to the detriment of those persons and the object of which provision is to deprive them of the right of compensation to a certain extent." (Vide AIR 1952 S C 252 Para 59 (B)).

"The provision that four per cent, to twelve and a half per cent has to be deducted out of the net income on account of costs of works for the benefit of raiyats etc. has no relation to real facts. Even the earlier provision in Cl. (d) that costs of management have to be deducted up to twenty per cent, has in its entirety no real relation to actual state of affairs. As already pointed out, it is partially of a confiscatory character in sufficient number of cases. The deduction under Cl. (f) from the gross income is merely a deduction of an artificial character, the whole object being to inflate the deductions and thus bring about non-payment of compensation. Such legislation, in my opinion, is not permitted by Entry 42 of List III. Suppose, for instance, instead of twelve and a half per cent, it declared that a deduction of seventy per cent be made on that account. Could it be said by any reasonable person that such a piece of legislation was legislation on principles of determining compensation or of making payment of compensation. This provision, therefore, in my opinion, has been inserted in the Act as a colourable exercise of legislative power under Entry 42 and is unconstitutional on that ground" (Vide Para 61).

On the same subject Chandrasekhara Aiyar J. observed as follows:

"The provisions in section 23, sub-clause (f) that 4 to 12½ per cent of the gross assets can be deducted from the amount as representing 'costs of works of benefit to the raiyats'. This is an obvious device to reduce the gross assets and bring it down to as low a level as possible. The Act does not say that this charge represents the expenditure on works of benefits or improvements which the Zamin-dars and proprietors were under any legal obligation to carry out and which they failed to discharge. Nor are we told anything about the future destination of this deducted sum. It is an arbitrary figure which the legislature has said must be deducted from the gross assets. The deduction is a mere contrivance to reduce the compensation and it is a colourable or fraudulent exercise of legislative power to subtract a fanciful sum from the calculation of gross assets.

Stripped of their veils or vestments, the provisions in the Act about 'arrears of rent' and the 'cost of works of benefit' amount to naked confiscation. Where the legislative action is arbitrary in the sense that it has no reasonable relation to the purpose in view, there is a transgression by the legislature of the limits of its power. Under the guise of legislating for acquisition, the legislature cannot enable the State to perpetrate confiscation, and if it does so, the Act to that extent has to be declared unconstitutional and void" (Vide AIR 1952 S C 252 Para 136 (B)).

These observations are most apposite to the present case. The Jagirdars were under no legal obligation to incur expenditure on account of education, public health and roads or on account of police, revenue and judicial powers. These deductions are obviously a device to reduce net income and to bring it down to as low a level as possible. The object of these deductions appears to be to bring about a reduction in the compensation. These deductions, therefore, are of an artificial character whose object is to inflate the deduction and thus bring about either non-payment of compensation or reduction in compensation. This is nothing but a colourable exercise of legislative power under Entry 42. Consequently sub-cl. (4) and (5) of Cl. 4 of Sch. I are unconstitutional and inoperative.

(14) Section 4(1)(g) of the impugned Act and Sub-cl. (4) and (5) of Cl. 4, Sch. I, can be separated from the rest of the Act. Consequently, the whole of the Act need not be declared ultra vires.

(15) Mr. Bhagwandas Gupta contends that Art. 31 (5)(a) protects existing laws and consequently the Land Acquisition Act is still in force; compensation, therefore, must be paid in accordance with the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. Similar argument was advanced in the case of AIR 1952 S C 252 (B). But that argument was repelled. Mahajan J. observed as follows:

"This argument really has no force. Because the provisions as to assessment of compensation enacted in the Land Acquisition Act only apply to acquisitions that are made by notification under that Act. Its provisions have no application to acquisitions made under either local or Central laws unless they are specifically made applicable by the provisions of these Statutes (Vide AIR 1952 SC 252 para 68 (B)).

Das J. on the same subject observed that the provision for compensation applies only to land acquired under that Act, and that it has no application to lands acquired under other Statute (Vide para 111). This point, therefore, having been finally concluded by the decision of the Supreme Court, cannot be reagitated in this Court.

(16) Mr. Bhagwandas Gupta also contended that the word 'acquisition' does not include the word 'resumption'. It is no doubt true that the impugned Act has used the word 'resumption'. But it is clear from the tenor and intendment of the Act that the legislature has actually treated Jagir lands as the property of the Jagirdars and adopted the procedure of acquisition. The position meted out to the Jagirdars, therefore, is better than what it would have been in the case of resumption. The word 'resumption' connotes taking back what was given. As, however, better treatment has been accorded to the Jagirdars the implications of the expression 'resumption' need not be enquired into.

(17) Mr. Engineer contends on behalf of Raja Balbhadrasingh that as the petitioner was a holder of mediatised estate the impugned Act cannot be made applicable to him. This argument can be disposed of on the mere ground that Raja Balbhadrasingh held a sanad granted by the ruler of Gwalior. Besides the petitioner has not been able to show that his position is different from that of a Jagirdar. In these circumstances the contention put forward by Mr. Engineer cannot be accepted.

(18) For the reasons given above, I am of the opinion that S. 4(1)(g) and sub-ss. (4) and (5) of S. 4, Sch. I are not constitutional. The rest of the Act is valid. The petitions are, therefore, allowed only to the extent mentioned above. A writ of mandamus will issue to the State Government not to give effect to the provisions of the impugned Act stated above. In the circumstances of the case parties are directed to bear their own costs.

(19) Mr. P. R. Das has asked for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from our decision. Having regard to the general importance of the questions raised in these petitions I would certify these cases as fit for appeal to the Supreme Court, and grant requisite leave to the petitioners as well as to the State.

(20) DIXIT J.: In these forty-four applications under Art. 226, Constitution of India, the petitioners who have variously described themselves as Jagirdars or proprietors of alienated villages, each claiming to be the proprietor of the soil in the village or group of villages set out in their applications, challenge the constitutionality of the Madhya Bharat Abolition of Jagir Act, 1951 (Act No. 28 of 1951 hereinafter referred to as the Act) on various grounds. They pray for the issue of a writ in the nature of mandamus or alternatively directions or a writ against the State of Madhya Bharat prohibiting them from giving effect to or acting in any manner by virtue of or under the said Act.

(21) On 30-11-1949, a Bill intituled "the Madhya Bharat Abolition of Jagir" was introduced in the Legislative Assembly of Madhya Bharat and was passed by the Legislature in 1951. The Bill having been reserved for the consideration of the President received his assent on 27-11-51. On 7-12-51, the Act was published in the Government Gazette and on the same day a notification under S. 1(3) of the Act was published bringing into force the Act immediately. On 5-12-51, that is, before the Act came into force, Maloji Rao Shitole and some other petitioners presented some of these applications to this Court for the issue of appropriate writs against the Government prohibiting it from taking possession of their property. On 7-12-51, this Court passed an interim order directing the Government to forbear until the disposal of these petitions from giving effect to or acting in any manner by virtue of or under the Madhya Bharat Abolition of Jagir Act, 1951.

(22) In all these petitions, the validity of the Act is challenged substantially on similar grounds. The common grounds of attack stated in the petitions are:

- (a) The so-called Legislature which passed the Act was not a Legislature within the meaning of the Covenant entered into by the Rulers of Gwalior, Indore and certain other States in Central India for the formation of the United State of Gwalior, Indore and Malwa (Madhya Bharat) or within the meaning of Schedule IV of the said Covenant.
- (b) The Legislature of Madhya Bharat was not competent to enact the said Act by reason of Entry 36, List II, 7th Schedule of the Constitution read with Entry 42, List III of the said Schedule and by reason of the fact that the said acquisition or resumption is not for a public purpose and there is no provision for payment of compensation as understood in law.
- (c) The interference by the said Act is not for a public purpose.
- (d) The said Act does not provide for payment of compensation as understood in law.
- (e) The compensation provided is wholly illusory.
- (f) The Abolition Act is a discriminatory enactment depriving a particular class of ownership of its inherent rights over such properties.
- (g) The said Act constitutes a fraud on power or fraud on the Constitution.
- (h) The power exercised by the President in giving his assent to the said Act is a fraudulent exercise of power.

(23) Not all these grounds require consideration now. The objection as to the validity of the Constitution of the Madhya Bharat Legislative Assembly is now concluded so far as this Court is concerned by a decision of a Full Bench in ILR (1952) Madh B 178 (A). So also as a result of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Bihar, Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh zamindari cases reported in AIR 1952 S C 252 (B), to which I will refer hereafter as the Bihar Zamindari cases, the applicants are precluded from raising objections as to the extent, adequacy or the illusory nature of the compensation provided by the Act or as to the competency of the Legislature to enact the said Act under Art. 246 of the Constitution read with Entry 36, List II of 7th Schedule of the Constitution read with Entry 42 List III of the said Schedule on the ground that there is no provision for payment of compensation as understood in law. Mr. P. R. Das, the leading Counsel for the petitioners, frankly conceded that by the decision of the Supreme Court in the aforesaid cases, he was debarred from going into the question of the adequacy of compensation or from contending that the State Legislature had no power under Entry 36, List II read with Entry 41, List III to make a law for acquisition of property without providing for payment of just compensation. He reserved the liberty to raise these objections again in the Supreme Court, if need be, and confined his arguments, firstly, to the point that the acquisition of the Jagir Lands not being for a public purpose, the Act was unconstitutional, and secondly, that certain provisions of the Act constitute a fraud on the Constitution in that while they purport to be in conformity with the Constitution, were in fact, repugnant to the Constitution.

(24) Before examining the provisions of the impugned Act, it is pertinent to state that Madhya Bharat is a composite State comprising of the former Gwalior, Indore and other Indian States of Central India. The entire area of the State of Madhya Bharat is about 46166 sq. miles out of which the area of the jagir lands is 8449 sq. miles. There are nearly 1329 jagirs in Madhya Bharat. All these Jagirs are held under sanads or grants either express or implied. In some of the petitions, copies of the sanads and grants have been appended. The Jagirs in Madhya Bharat can be divided into various distinct groups according to their historical origin. Into the details of this origin, it is unnecessary to enter here. They are given in official publications — too numerous to be cited here — issued before 1947 by the Government of India and the various Indian State Governments. A summary of the history and origin of Jagirs in Madhya Bharat is also given in the report of the Committee set up by the Government of India in 1949 under the chairmanship of Mr. C. S. Venkatachar to examine and report inter alia on the existing structure and the working of the Jagirdari system in Madhya Bharat. Mr. Das learned Counsel for the petitioners, objected to the reception of this report in these proceedings. But I think so long as we keep within the rule laid down by the Privy Council in — 'Martand Rao v. Malhar Rao', AIR 1928 PC 10(C) that opinions expressed in official reports should not be treated as conclusive in respect of matters requiring judicial determination, there would appear to be no objection in referring to the report for the purpose of gathering historical facts which are not in issue here.

To proceed it is sufficient to say that some of the Jagirs consist of estates mediated and guaranteed by Sir John Malcolm and other British Officers at the time of the pacification in 1818. Some 43 of these estates were transferred by the British Government in 1921 to Gwalior Darbar and placed under the suzerainty of the Maharaja Scindia of Gwalior and hold sanads from him. The petitioner Balbhadra Singh of Raghogarh in Civil Miscellaneous No. 41 of 1952 is the holder of one such estate. (See Aitchison's Treatise, Engagements and Sanads, Vol. V, fifth Edition, pages 331, 357 and 517). The second group consists of a number of Rajput Chiefs who existed prior to the advent of the Marathas, and who when subdued by Marathas were allowed to hold a few villages as assignment subject to a payment of tribute. The petitioner Raja Pancham Singh of Pahargarh in Civil Miscellaneous No. 638 of 1951 falls in this group. The third category comprises of jagir assignments made by the Maratha Rulers, to warriors who were instrumental in extending the Maratha conquests north-ward and in consolidating the newly acquired territories. The majority of the petitioners before us belong to this group.

Besides the above groups of these Jagirs, there are also jagirs granted by the Rulers of the various Covenanting States of Madhya Bharat for a variety of purposes, both secular and religious, for services rendered or to be rendered. The rights, and obligations of the holders of jagirs in many of the smaller Indian States of Central India which now form parts of Madhya Bharat were never legally defined, or demarcated by metes and bounds. In the territories of Madhya Bharat comprising of the former Gwalior State, the rights, obligations and privileges of the Jagirdars of Gwalior State, are regulated by 'Kawayad Jagirdaran', Samvat 1970 (Manual for Jagirdars) which was promulgated by the Gwalior Darbar in Samvat 1970 and which is still in force. The rights, obligations and privileges of the Jagirdars of the former Indore State have also been similarly defined in a Manual of Indore State. A few of the petitioners who are Jagirdars of the Gwalior State enjoyed until the end of 1948 revenue and police powers as also the right to levy customs duty and maintain their own excise arrangements. Be that as it may, the holders of these jagirs have to-day only the right to collect revenue from their tenants with an obligation to pay to the State a certain amount generally known as a 'Tanka' fixed in the remote past by the Rulers of the States granting the Jagir. These Jagirs are not transferable. They are impartible and the rule of primogeniture applies to them. The question whether a jagir grant confers on the holder thereof merely the right to collect the Government share of revenue or makes him a grantee of the soil depends as pointed out by the Privy Council in — 'Secretary of State v. Laxmibai', AIR 1928 P. C. 6 (D) on the terms of the particular grant and the whole circumstances connected therewith and there can be no presumption one way or the other. Likewise, the question whether a jagir grant was resumable at the will of the Ruler also depends on the terms of the grant and the law and the rules made by the Ruler granting the Jagir in his State.

The question whether the petitioners are proprietors of the soil is not of much consequence here. For the impugned Act purports to acquire whatever right, title and interest the Jagirdars have in the jagir lands. Even if they are regarded as having absolute rights in the soil, there is no bar under the Constitution to the acquisition of these proprietary rights. The important point to note is that the petitioning Jagirdars destitute of the authority, powers and functions which they exercised at one time, are today only persons holding greater or smaller extent of lands with the power to collect and appropriate the land revenue either conditionally or unconditionally. They are, on a theory that all land belongs to the State and it alone is entitled as of right to take a portion of the produce of the land whether in kind or money, merely intermediaries between the State & the tenants in jagir areas. The impugned Act has been enacted in conformity with this theory and in pursuance of the present-day policy of the State to do away with all intermediaries between the State and the cultivators.

(25) For a proper appreciation of the points raised on behalf of the petitioners, it is necessary to give a short account of the provisions of the impugned Act.

(26) The long title of the Act, is "an Act to provide for the resumption of all Jagir lands in the State and for certain other measures of land reforms in Jagir areas."

(27) Section 1 of the Act provides that it shall extend to the whole of the Madhya Bharat and directs that it shall come into force on and from such date as the Government may by a notification appoint in that behalf.

(28) Section 2 is the definition section. By clause (vi) of this section, it is provided that the term "Jagirdar" means "any person recognised as a Jagirdar under any law, rules, regulations or orders governing Jagirs in force in any part of the State."

The next clause defines "Jagir land" as

"any land in which or in relation to which any Jagirdar has rights as such in respect of land revenue or other earnings."

(29) Chapter II deals with the resumption of Jagir lands, and the consequences of the resumption. Section 3 says that the Government may by a notification appoint a date for the resumption of all Jagir lands in the State. Section 4 enacts that as from the date of resumption, the rights, title and interest of every Jagirdar and of every other persons claiming through him (including a Zamindar) in his Jagir lands including forests, trees, fisheries, well, tanks, ponds, water channels, ferries, pathways, village sites, huts, Bazar and Mela grounds, and mines and minerals whether being worked or not, shall stand resumed to the State free from all encumbrances and further all rights, titles and interests created by the Jagirdar or his predecessor-in-interest in and over the Jagir lands shall, as against the Government cease and determine. Clause (g) of S. 4 further lays down that the rights, title and interest of the Jagirdar in all buildings on Jagir lands used for schools, offices, hospital & other public purposes shall stand extinguished and such buildings shall be deemed to have been transferred to the Government.

(30) Chapter III provides for the assessment of compensation and the procedure for the determination of the amount of compensation. A jagirdar on the resumption of his Jagir lands, becomes entitled to receive compensation at seven times the net income determined in accordance with Schedule 1 to the Act. Chapter IV contains provisions for the management and tenure of lands and includes incidental provisions dealing with the consequential changes on the resumption of Jagir lands.

(31) Chapter V contains sections providing for miscellaneous matters and for appeals against the decisions of Tahsildar under S. 23 in proceedings for the issue of certificates of Pacca tenancy and against the decisions of the Jagir Commissioner under Ss. 4, 10, 11, 13, and 14, in the matter of resumption of Jagir lands and determination of compensation. Section 39 which is included in this Chapter empowers the Government to frame Rules for carrying out the purposes of the Act.

(32) Schedule I of the Act is important. It lays down the principles for determining the compensation payable to the Jagirdar whose Jagir land is resumed. Under Cl. 5 of the Schedule, a Jagirdar whose Jagir land is resumed is entitled to receive and to be paid compensation at seven times the net income of his Jagir-land. The net income is arrived at after deducting certain items from the gross-income. The "gross-income" in the Schedule means the aggregate of the rents which were payable in respect of the land in the Jagir for the agricultural year immediately preceding the agricultural year in which the Jagir-land is resumed, whether payable by a tenant or sub-tenants or the Raiyats and includes income of the previous agricultural year from forests, quarries, excise, giras-tankas, Dami including other amounts payable by the Government and Sewai Jama for the previous agricultural year. In the computation of the net income, under Cl. 4 of the Schedule, the following items are deducted from the gross income. They are:—

- "(a) tanka due from the Jagirdar to the Government for the previous agricultural year;
- (b) expenses for collection of rents (including irrecoverable arrears) at the rate of ten per cent. of the gross income, if it exceeds Rs. 2000/- or at the rate of 7 per cent. of the gross income, if it is less than Rs. 2000/-;
- (c) a sum equal to 12½ per cent. of the gross income on account of land records and Choukidari establishments;
- (d) an amount at the rate of 15 per cent. of the gross income, where it exceeds Rs. 2000/-, or at the rate of 10 per cent., if it is less than Rs. 2000/- in respect of education, public health, roads, if the Jagir is one other than a Jadid-usul Jagir of Devasthan Jagir;
- (e) an amount equal to seven per cent., four per cent. and two per cent. respectively, in respect of the police, revenue and judicial powers, if the Jagirdar or his predecessor-in-interest exercised those powers immediately before 15-5-48;
- (f) and any sum due from Jagirdar to the Government for the previous agricultural year on any other account."

(33) The proviso to Cl. 4 of the schedule fixes a limit on the total amount of deductions on account of the above heads excluding the sum payable as Tanka. The limit varies from 5 to 50 per cent., according to the amount of the basic income, which has been defined in Cl. 3 of the Schedule as that arrived at by deducting from the gross income, the amount of the tanka payable by the Jagirdar to the Government for the previous agricultural year. It must be noted that Cl. 4 of the Sch. 1 of the Act which deals with the various deductions from the gross income treats all the different kinds of Jagirs in the various Covenanted States of Madhya Bharat on a uniform basis.

(34) The validity of the Act depends on Arts. 31, 31A and Art. 246 read with entry 36 List II of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution. These provisions have been the subject of a close examination in the Supreme Court in the Zamindari cases from Bihar, Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh (AIR 1952 SC 252 (B)) and there can no longer be any doubt as to the proper meaning, scope and effect of these Articles. The main enquiry here is therefore, whether on an application of the propositions laid down by the Supreme Court in the case referred to above to the present case, an attack on the validity of the Act founded on the absence of a public purpose and on "fraud on the Constitution" can be entertained; and if it can be, whether on the tests indicated by the Supreme Court of a 'public purpose', the impugned Act has been enacted for a public purpose; and whether the conditions on which the Supreme Court declared certain provisions of the Bihar Land Reforms Act, 1950, as constituting a "fraud on the Constitution" and, unconstitutional, are present here.

(35) I will first deal with the contention put forward on behalf of the petitioners that the proposed resumption is not for any public purpose. On this point the argument of Mr.

Das, which has been adopted by Mr. Engineer also, is that the existence of a public purpose and an obligation to pay compensation are the necessary concomitants of compulsory acquisition of property; that Art. 31 (4) protects the impugned legislation from attack only on the ground that "it contravenes the provisions of Cl. (2)"; that the only provision of Cl. (2) is that the law must provide for compensation for the property taken possession of or acquired and either fix the amount of the compensation or specify the principles which and the manner in which, the compensation is to be determined and given; that Cl. (2) assumes but does not provide that the taking possession of or the acquisition of the property should be only for a public purpose; and that the existence of a public purpose being thus not a provision of Cl. (2), it is a justiciable issue.

Mr. Das said that in the majority decision of the Supreme Court in the 'Bihar zamindari cases' (B), this argument has been accepted and it has been held that the provisions of Art. 31 (4) do not take away the Court's power to see whether the acquisition has been made for a public purpose. Learned Counsel proceeded to say that the Act on the face of it did not show that it was for public purpose. It is conceded that the Act need not expressly state the purpose for which the property is being taken. It is, however, argued that from the whole tenor and intendment of the Act, it cannot be gathered that the Jagirs are being acquired either for the purposes of the Union or for the purposes of the State or for the purposes of the public or for the benefit of the community at large or for some other definite and tangible public purpose. It is said that by the abolition and resumption of Jagirs, the proprietary rights of the holders of Jagir are only affected by the impugned Act; that by the resumption no change and betterment, whatsoever, will occur in the nature of the tenure or the rights of the cultivators; that the Act does no more than intercept the rents payable by the tenants to the Jagirdars and does not affect the blocks of land in Khas possession of the Jagirdar; and that the Act is merely a device to increase the income of the State at the cost of the Jagirdars. Mr. Das referred us to certain passages in Cooley's Constitutional Limitations 8th edition, Volume II, page 1118 (Foot Note) and in Willis' Constitutional Law, page 817 and to the decision of the Privy Council in — 'Hama Bai Framjee Petit v. Secretary of State', AIR 1914 PC 20 (E) and urged that acquisition of property for the mere purpose of augmenting the State revenue is not a public purpose; that the policy of the party in power is not a public purpose; and that public purpose must have as its aim or object the general interest and benefit of the community as distinguished from the private interest of an individual.

It was further said that the provisions contained in Chapter IV of the impugned Act might have been designed to improve the position of the tenants and bring about land reforms, but the improvement and reforms contemplated by Chapter IV could not be regarded as a public purpose for acquisition of property under entry 36, List II, for the reason that Chapter IV of the impugned Act was essentially a legislation falling under Entry 18 in List II under which the State could legislate with respect to rights, in or over land, land tenure and other matters mentioned in the entry without there being a public purpose and without providing any compensation. Mr. Das suggested that the inclusion in the impugned Act of the provisions contained in Chapter IV for an alteration of land tenures to the benefit of the tenants was a pure accident and there was nothing to show that this improvement could not be affected except by the abolition of Jagirs. According to Mr. Das there was a material difference between the impugned Act and the Bihar, Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh Acts which were considered by the Supreme Court and the considerations on which the Supreme Court held those Acts as not bad for want of public purpose, did not exist in regard to the local Act, now under examination. It was said that in regard to the Bihar and Uttar Pradesh Acts, the Supreme Court inferred public purpose from the fact that the Bills culminating into those Acts were pending at the commencement of the Constitution in the Legislatures of the States and the Madhya Bharat Abolition of Jagirs Bill was not considered by the Constituent Assembly.

Learned Counsel stressed the fact that the Bihar Act as its very title showed was a Land Reform Act and contemplated the setting up of a land Commission and likewise the Uttar Pradesh Act provided for land reforms; but the impugned Act did not purport to be a Land Reform Act & that there was no land reform scheme within the four corners of the impugned Act. It is further urged that as there is nothing to suggest that large blocks of land are in possession and cultivation of Jagirdars, the directive principle contained in clauses (b) and (c) of Art. 39 cannot be relied upon to say that there is a public purpose behind the impugned Act. Finally, it is said that the abolition of Jagirs does not in its nature import any public purpose; that the recital in the preamble of the impugned Act that it is an Act to provide for "certain other measures of land reform" is not supported by the provisions of the Act and that the impugned Act is not one of those Acts validated under Art. 31-B.

(36) In answer to these contentions, the learned Advocate General read out to us certain passages to which I will refer presently, from the judgments of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in — 'The Bihar Zamindari cases', (B) and said that according to the majority decision, the existence of a public purpose was not open to judicial scrutiny or review; that even if it was, on the tests laid down by this Court in — 'ILR (1952) Madh B 178 (A)' and by the Supreme Court in — 'The Bihar Zamindari cases' (B), the impugned Act fulfilled the requirements of a public purpose. Learned Advocate-General submitted that the transference of Jagir lands to the State being in consonance with Art. 39 (b) and (c) was a public purpose; that the recognition of the rights of actual tillers of soil and the grant of equal status to all tenants envisaged by the provisions contained in Chapter IV of the Act constituted a public purpose and that these provisions could not be put aside lightly by saying that the inclusion of these provisions in the Act was a pure accident. It is said that the abolition of Jagirs is a logical corollary to the extinction of Feudal Order, which is incongruous with the Constitution of India, and the policy of abolition of Jagirs and land reforms adopted by the State to accelerate national economic recovery and lay the foundation of democratic super-structure is a fulfilment of a public purpose. The learned Advocate General admitted that the impugned Act did not provide for setting up of a land Commission. He however, urged that the absence of such a provision did not negative the existence of a public purpose behind the Act.

He also contended that the Madhya Bharat Abolition of Jagirs Bill which subsequently became the M. B. Abolition of Jagirs Act, 1951, was pending at the commencement of the Constitution in the State Legislature and this fact implied that in giving to the Act the protection of Art. 31 (4), the Constituent Assembly recognised that the legislation was for a public purpose. As to the omission of the Act from the 9th Schedule, it is said that the Madhya Bharat Zamindari Abolition Bill had not become an Act when the Constitution was amended and that the protection given by Art. 31 (4) and Art. 31A is not limited only to the Acts specified in the ninth Schedule.

(37) On a consideration of the above arguments of the learned Counsel for the petitioners, I have arrived at a very definite view that the objection that the impugned Act is unconstitutional for lack of a public purpose must be rejected. The first question that arises for consideration is whether the existence of a public purpose is a justiciable issue, under Arts. 31 (4) and 31A. The impugned Act being a law falling within the description given in these Articles, it is plain that it cannot be called in question on the ground that it contravenes the provisions of Cl. (2) of Art. 31. Now, if as Mr. Das contended before us, as he did before the Supreme Court in the Bihar Zamindari cases (B), the existence of a public purpose is not a 'provision' of Art. 31(2) then clearly this Court has the power to see whether the proposed resumption of Jagirs is for a public purpose. On the other hand, if the existence of a public purpose is a provision of Art. 31 (2), then the attack on the Act based on the lack of a public purpose cannot be entertained. The answer to the contention of Mr. Das, as indeed to his other contentions also, is to be found in the views enunciated by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the Bihar Zamindari case. His Lordship Patanjali Shastri C. J., rejecting the contention that Art. 31 (2) did not provide for the acquisition of property for a public purpose said:

"In my opinion, the clause seeks also to impose a limitation in regard to public purpose. The clause was evidently worded in that form as it was copied (with minor variations) from S. 299 (2), Government of India Act, 1935, which was undoubtedly designed to give effect to the recommendation of the Joint Parliamentary Committee in para. 369 of their Report that two conditions should be imposed on expropriation of private property. "We think it (the provision proposed) should secure that legislation expropriating or authorising the expropriation of the property of private individuals should be lawful only if confined to expropriation for public purpose and if compensation is determined either in the first instance or in appeal by some independent authority." It is thus clear that S. 299 (2) was intended to secure fulfilment of two conditions subject to which alone legislation authorising expropriation of private property should be lawful, and it seems reasonable to conclude that Art. 31 (2) was also intended to impose the same two conditions on legislation expropriating private property. In other words, Art. 31 (2) must be understood as also providing that legislation authorising expropriation of private property should be lawful only if it was required for a public purpose and provision was made for payment of compensation. Indeed, if this were not so, there would be nothing in the Constitution to prevent acquisition for a non-public or private purpose and without payment of compensation, an absurd result. It cannot be supposed that the framers of the Constitution while expressly enacting one of the two well-established restriction on the exercise of the right of eminent domain, left the other to be imported from the common law. Article 31 (2) must therefore, be taken to provide for both the limitations in express terms."

(38) His Lordship Das J., observed with regard to Art. 31 (2) as follows:

"The clause makes it clear at once and beyond any shadow of doubt that there are three limitations imposed upon the power of the State, namely, (1) that the taking of possession or acquisition of property must be for a public purpose, (2) that such taking of possession or acquisition must be under a law authorising such taking of possession or acquisition and (3) that the law must provide for compensation for the property so taken or acquired. These three limitations constitute the protection granted to the owner of the property and is the measure of his fundamental right under this clause. Unless these limitations were provisions of the Article, the Article would have afforded no immunity at all. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the existence of a public purpose as a prerequisite to the exercise of the power of compulsory acquisition is an essential and integral part of the "provisions" of Cl. (2) ..... The existence of a public purpose as a condition precedent to the exercise of the power of compulsory acquisition being then, as I hold, a "provision" of Art. 31 (2) an infringement of such a provision cannot, under Arts. 31 (4), 31A, and 31B, be put forward as a ground for questioning the validity of the Act."

(39) This view was not accepted by their Lordships Mahajan and Chandrasekhara Aiyar JJ., who held that the existence of a public purpose is not a provision or a condition precedent imposed by Art. 31 (2) as a limitation on the exercise of the power of acquisition. His Lordship Mahajan J., was of the opinion that:

"What Art. 31 (4) really says is that the contravention of the express provisions of Art. 31 (2) relating to payment of compensation will not be a justiciable issue. It has no reference to anything that may be implied within the language of that clause. The existence of a "public purpose" is undoubtedly an implied condition of the exercise of compulsory powers of acquisition by the State, but the language of Art. 31 (2) does not expressly make it a condition precedent to acquisition. It assumes that compulsory acquisition can be for "a public purpose" only, which is thus inherent in such acquisition. Hence Art. 31 (4), in my opinion, does not bar the jurisdiction of the Court from inquiring whether the law relating to compulsory acquisition of property is not valid because the acquisition is not being made for a public purpose."

(40) His Lordship Chandrasekhara Aiyar stated his view in this way:

"The bar created by sub-cl. (4) of Art. 31 relates to the contravention of the provisions of Cl. (2). The provision of Cl. (2) is only as regards compensation as can be gathered from its latter part....."

It is assumed, rightly, that the existence of a public purpose is part and parcel of the law and is inherent in it. The existence of a public purpose is not a provision or condition imposed by Art. 31 (2) as a limitation on the exercise of the power of acquisition. The condition prescribed is only as regards compensation. Article 31(4) debars the challenge of the constitutionality of an Act on this ground but no other. Whether there is any public purpose at all, or whether the purpose stated is such a purpose is open, in my opinion, to judicial scrutiny or review."

(41) It is upon the observations made by His Lordship Mukherjea J., that the whole controversy whether the existence of a public purpose is or is not open to judicial scrutiny or review turns. After prefacing his judgment with the observation that "I concur entirely in the conclusions arrived at by him" (that is by Mahajan J.) and that "the Bihar Land Reforms Act, 1950, is not unconstitutional, with the exception of the provisions contained in Ss. 4 (b) and 23 (f) of the Act and these provisions alone must be held to be void and inoperative."

His Lordship proceeded to say:

"As regards S. 4 (b) it has been held by my learned brother that the provision of this clause is unconstitutional as it does not disclose any public purpose at all. The requirement of public purpose is implicit in compulsory acquisition of property by the State or, what is called, the exercise of its power of 'Eminent Domain'. This condition is implied in the provisions of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution and although the enactment in the present case fulfils the requirements of Cl. (3) of Art. 31 and as such attracts the operation of Cl. (4) of that Article, my learned brother has taken the view that the bar created by Cl. (4) is confined to the question of compensation only and does not extend to the existence or necessity of a public purpose which, though, implicit in, has not been expressly provided for by Cl. (2) of the Article. For my part, I would be prepared to assume that Cl. (4) of Art. 31 relates to everything that is provided for in Cl. (2) either in express terms or even impliedly & consequently the question of the existence of a public purpose does not come within the purview of our enquiry in the present case. Even then I would hold that the same reasons which have weighed with my learned brother in declaring S. 23(f) of the impugned Act to be unconstitutional, apply with equal, if not greater, force to S. 4 (b) of the Act and I have no hesitation in agreeing with him as regards the decision on the constitutionality of this provision of the Act though I would prefer to adopt a different line of reasoning in support of the same."

(42) We were pressed by Mr. Das to hold that when His Lordship Mukherjea J., said that he concurred entirely in the conclusions arrived at by His Lordship Mahajan J., it meant that he also agreed with the conclusion of His Lordship Mahajan J., that the existence of a public purpose was not a provision of Cl. (2) and that Art. 31 (4) did not in any way touch the powers of the Court to see whether the acquisition was for a public purpose. I can find nothing in the judgment of His Lordship Mukherjea J., to justify me in holding that according to him also the existence of a public purpose as a condition precedent for exercising the powers of compulsory acquisition is not a provision of Art. 31 (2) and that therefore, Art. 31 (4) does not prevent the Court from enquiring whether there is a public purpose at all, or whether the purpose stated is a public purpose. As I read the observations of His Lordship Mukherjea J., it appears to me that the conclusions of His Lordship Mahajan J., with which he expressed his concurrence are the conclusions that Ss. 4 (b) and 23 (f) of the Bihar Land Reforms Act of 1950 are unconstitutional and that the rest of that Act is good. That the existence of a public purpose as an essential condition for the acquisition of the property is not a provision of Art. 31 (2) and that therefore, Art. 31 (4) does not bar the jurisdiction of the Court from examining whether the law authorising the compulsory acquisition of the property was made for a public purpose, is the process of reasoning by which His Lordship Mahajan J., after examining the law and after finding that S. 4 (b) alone was not enacted for a public purpose came to the conclusion that the section was not constitutional and that the rest of the Act with the exception of S. 23 (f) was good. To my mind, His Lordship Mukherjea J., while considering the question of the validity of S. 4 (b) did not accept the reasoning of His Lordship Mahajan J., as to the illegality of that provision. While agreeing with the conclusion that S. 4 (b) was not constitutional, His Lordship Mukherjea J., preferred to adopt a different line of reasoning. For the purposes of his judgment, he assumed that Cl. (4) of Art. 31 related to everything that was provided for in Cl. (2) either in express terms or even impliedly and consequently the question of the existence of a public purpose did not come within the purview of the enquiry by the Court. The suggestion of the learned Counsel for the petitioners that in making this assumption, His Lordship Mukherjea J., expressed his final opinion that the existence of a public purpose was not a provision of Art. 31 (2), I believe is completely mistaken. That assumption, it will be found, is preceded by a recital of His Lordship Mahajan J.'s reasoning and not by an expression of His Lordship's own final opinion contrary to the assumption. It is also followed by the declaration that the same reasons which weighed with His Lordship Mahajan J., in declaring S. 23 (f) of the Bihar Land Reforms Act to be constitutional applied with equal, if not greater, force to S. 4 (b) of the Act and the concluding words of that declaration that "I have no hesitation in agreeing with him as regards his decision of the constitutionality of this provision of the Act, though I would prefer to adopt a different line of reasoning in support of the same," being added because of his difference with His Lordship Mahajan J.'s reasoning for the conclusion that S. 4 (b) was unconstitutional. That reasoning was that the existence of a public purpose was not a provision of Art. 31; that therefore Art. 31 (4) did not prevent the Court from enquiring as to the existence of a public purpose and that on an examination of S. 4 (b), it did not disclose any public purpose at all. His Lordship Mukherjea J., declared S. 4 (b) as unconstitutional not on this reasoning but on the ground that it constituted a fraud on the Constitution and was a colourable piece of legislation. In my opinion, when the judgment of His Lordship Mukherjea J., is carefully examined, it affords no ground for the contention that according to him the existence of a public purpose is a justiciable issue. It must be noted that this reading of the passage quoted above from the judgment of His Lordship Mukherjea J., accords with his observations in the case of — Chiranjit Lal v. Union of India, AIR 1951 SC 41 (F). In that case His Lordship Mukherjea J., observed:

"Article 31 (2) of the Constitution prescribes a two-fold limit within which such superior right of the State should be exercised. One limitation imposed on the acquisition or taking possession of private property which is implied in the clause is that such taking away must be for public purpose. The other condition is that no property can be taken unless the law which authorises such appropriation contains a provision for payment of compensation in the manner laid down in the clause."

(43) As to the meaning of these observations I can do no better than quote what His Lordship Das J., himself has said in his judgment in the Bihar Zamindari cases. He said:

"I do not, however, see how the above observations of Mukherjea J., in any way support the arguments of Mr. P. R. Das that the existence of a public purpose is not a provision of Art. 31 (2) but is an inherent condition of any legislation for compulsory acquisition of private property. It is significant that Mukherjea J. recognises that Art. 31 (2) prescribes a two-fold limit. Surely a limit which is prescribed by the Article must be a provision thereof. In any case, what is implied in the clause must, nevertheless, be a provision of the clause, for the expression "provision" is certainly wide enough to include an implied as well as an express provision."

(44) If this is the true meaning of the observations of His Lordship Mukherjea J., in the case of — Chiranjit Lal (F) and it must be so regarded in the absence of any qualification with regard to these observations from any other Judge of the Supreme Court, then consistent with those observations, there can be no basis for the implication that His Lordship Mukherjea J., in the passage reproduced above from his judgment in 'the Bihar Zamindari cases' (B) intended to hold that the existence of a public purpose was not a provision of Art. 31 (2) and, therefore, in cases to which Cl. (4) of Art. 31 applied, it could be called in question in any Court. I have made quotations from the views expressed by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in — 'the Bihar Zamindari cases' (B) copious in order to show by their own inherent strength that the contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioners that according to the majority of the Supreme Court the existence of a public purpose in cases to which Art. 31 (4) applies is a justiciable issue is not correct. On a careful reading of the judgment of His Lordship Mukherjea J., on which learned Counsel rests his contention, there cannot be any serious misapprehension as to the conclusion actually reached by him and his reasons therefor. In view of the pronouncement of their Lordships in the Bihar Zamindari case (B), I am not disposed to accept the argument of Mr. Das that the existence of a public purpose being not a provision of Art. 31 (2) the bar imposed by Art. 31 (4) does not preclude this Court from enquiring whether the impugned Act postulates a public purpose.

(45) Even assuming that the question of the existence of a public purpose is at large, I am further of the opinion that the statute before us is definitely for a public purpose. The term 'public purpose' is not a new term. Its meaning and import in relation to different statutes passed in different times has been examined in a number of decisions. But I do not think much assistance can be derived from those decisions. For, as I indicated in the case of — ILR (1952) Madh B 178, (A) public purpose is an indeterminate concept which varies according to the zeitgeist, i.e., according to the drift of thought and feeling in a period. To me it appears that public purpose is essentially a product of time and circumstances. Time moves on and circumstances change rapidly, and so does the concept of a public purpose. For our purposes, it is sufficient to seek the meaning and test of a public purpose from the decision of the Supreme Court in — 'Bihar, Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh Zamindari cases' (B). That decision deals with Acts passed after the commencement of the Constitution and which are in principle analogous to the impugned Act. In those cases, His Lordship Mahajan J., has observed that the phrase "public purpose" has to be construed according to the spirit of the times in which the particular legislation is enacted and that the concept of a public purpose is not a rigid concept and it has no settled meaning. He has also pointed out that the precise purpose for which property is being acquired need not be stated in express terms in the statute itself and if from the whole tenor and intentment of the Act, it can be gathered that the property was being acquired either for the purposes of the State or for purposes of the public and that the intention was to benefit the community at large then the statute must be held to have been enacted for a public purpose, and that the point to be determined in each case is whether the acquisition is in the general interest of the community, as distinguished from the private interest of an individual. His Lordship has also taken the view that a law made for the purpose of securing an end stated in Art. 39 of the Constitution & which aims at

"destroying the inferiority complex in a large number of citizens of the State and giving them a status of equality with their former Lords and prevents the accumulation of big tracts of land in the hands of a few individuals which is contrary to the expressed intentions of the Constitution" would be for a public purpose.

To the same effect are the observations of his Lordship Chandrasekhara Aiyar J., who has said that if the object of the Act is to extinguish

"the interests of intermediaries like zamindars, proprietors, and estate and tenure holders etc. and to bring the actual cultivators into direct relations with the Government", then there is a public purpose behind the Act. Learned Counsel for the petitioners while accepting these tests of a public purpose, sought to distinguish the local Act from the Acts considered by the Supreme Court and attempted to demonstrate on the grounds already summarised that the impugned Act is wanting in public purpose. I am unable to see any essential difference in the principle behind the impugned Act, and that behind the Acts examined by the Supreme Court, and I do not think that on any of the grounds urged by the learned Counsel, the impugned Act can be pronounced as unconstitutional for lack of a public purpose.

The impugned Act, no doubt, does not bear the title of a Land Reforms Act. There is however, nothing in a name. It is to the provisions of the Act that we must look for determining whether it has been enacted for a public purpose. Section 4 of the impugned Act vests in the State all Jagir lands resumed. The provisions contained in Chapter IV of the Act aim at elevating the status of tenants and bringing the actual cultivators into direct relations with the State. Under these provisions the Jagirdar is reduced to a Pacca tenant and his tenants are elevated to the Status of a pacca tenant and thus equality of status is sought to be achieved. It is clear from S. 4 and the provisions contained in Chapters II and IV that the object of the Act is to eliminate the interests of Jagirdars in their lands as intermediaries, to recognise the rights of the actual tillers of the soil and to bring about a reform in the land tenure system for the general benefit of the community. The vesting of the land in the State, the extinguishment of the rights of the Jagirdars as intermediaries, the conferment of equal status on all holders of the land and the consequential reforms that may take place in the land system are all purposes which accord with the letter and spirit of the Constitution.

(46) It is not denied on behalf of the petitioners that the resumption contemplated by the Act is for the State purpose and that Chapter IV of the Act does envisage some land reform. It is, however, urged that the policy of the abolition of proprietary interests of the Jagirdars is a policy of the party in power; that the impugned Act only aims at abolition of proprietary rights of Jagirdars and at intercepting the rents payable by the tenants to the Jagirdars; that by the provisions contained in Chapter IV of the Act, the status of the tenants would in no way be improved and that in some cases it would actually be worsened and that in any case the alteration in the land tenure can be brought about without resuming the Jagirs. All these objections seem to me to be futile. The vesting in the State of all Jagir lands regarded by the State as the first essential step—and of this fact prima facie the State is the best judge—for securing the objects specified in Art. 39 (b) and (c) is clearly a public purpose and not a policy of the party in power. One may accuse the framers of the Constitution of writing in the Constitution the policy of a particular party, but nonetheless, the policy having been embodied as a principle fundamental in the governance of the Country, it is a State policy irrespective of the character of the party in power. The policy embodied in Art. 39 may appear to some as revolutionary.

To others, it may appear progressive. It may again become out-moded some years hence and come to be regarded as reactionary. But so long as the policy is a part of the Constitution, the States have to follow it in the governance of the Country. The vesting in the State of all resumed Jagir lands being thus in itself a public purpose, the assertion that the impugned Act merely extinguishes the proprietary interests of Jagirdars and intercepts the rents payable by the tenants to them or that the provisions of Chapter IV do not really confer any benefit on the tenants, or again that the alteration in the land-tenures contemplated by these provisions can be secured without abolishing the Jagirs, cannot in my view, be accepted as indicative of the non-existence of a public purpose behind the Act. The fact that the alteration in the land tenure contemplated by Chapter IV could have been the subject of an independent legislation under Entry 18 in List II, in no way destroys the nexus, that is apparent, between the provisions contained in Chapter IV and the other parts of Act, which in "pith and substance" is a legislation falling under Entry 36 of List II. The provisions contained in Chapter IV of the impugned Act may operate to the detriment of a few individual tenants, but from this circumstance, it does not follow that the primary object of the provisions is not to benefit the tenants as a class. A public purpose has for its primary object the general interest of the community and not the direct benefit of any individual or individuals. It is worthy of note that his Lordship Mahajan J., held that the Bihar Land Reforms Act, 1950, was enacted for a public purpose after observing that "there is no scheme of land-reforms within the frame-work of the Statute except that a pious hope is expressed that the Commission may produce one."

Later on he has said

"it may be conceded that the present statute does not disclose the Legislature's mind as to what it would ultimately do after the estates are vested in the State Government."

In view of these observations, I think, it is impossible to contend successfully that the proposed resumption is not for a public purpose because the impugned Act gives no indication whatsoever as to what the Government proposes to do after the Jagirs are vested in the State or that it does not contain any scheme of land-reform. On the principles laid down by the Supreme Court in 'the Bihar Zamindari cases (B)', in my opinion, there can be no escape from the conclusion that there is a public purpose for the impugned Act. Indeed, Mr. Das himself felt a little unhappy in this branch of his arguments and during the course of his reply, he was constrained to say that he would not be surprised if by force of the decision of the Supreme Court, we came to the conclusion that the impugned Act postulated a public purpose.

(47) Mr. Das next challenged the validity of cls. (a) and (g) of sub-s. (1) of S. 4 and sub-cl. (ii) to (v) of Cl. 4 of Sch. I to the Act on the ground that they constituted a fraud on the Constitution. On this head learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioners and the learned Advocate-General addressed to us elaborate arguments and placed before us all the material they would get hold of both as to the facts and the law which could assist us in our responsible task. I propose to state in some detail their contentions later when considering each of the provisions of the Act which are said to be invalid. Briefly stated, the argument of Mr. Das is this: that the impugned Act in providing compensation on the basis of net income fails to pay any compensation for the non-income fetching properties such as wells, tanks, ponds, water-channels, open lands, un-worked mines, buildings used for schools, hospitals, offices and other public purposes, which under Cls. (a) and (g) of S. 4(1) vest in the State on the resumption of the Jagirs; that the deduction under Sub-cl. (ii) of Cl. 4 of the Schedule on account of expenses of collection of rents is arbitrary and has no relation to the actual costs of collection; that the deductions from the gross income under sub-cl. (iii) to (v) besides being arbitrary and artificial, are about matters in respect of which the Jagirdars are under no legal obligation to defray any expenditure; that as each of these sub-clauses fixes a consolidated deduction at a certain percentage of the gross income in respect of the various items grouped together in the sub-clause, it follows that if the deduction in respect of any item in the sub-clause is unjustified, then the whole of the sub-clause must be held to be invalid; that in that event it would not be open to this Court to apportion the percentage of deduction between other items, for so to do would be to amend the legislation. Mr. Das using the words of Abbott C. J., in — Fox v. Bishop of Chester, (1824) 107 ER 520 (G) said that by these “shifts or contrivances” the legislature has produced a scheme denying payment of compensation to the Jagirdars and thus while pretending to legislate in conformity with Entry 42 of List III and to lay down certain principles on which compensation is to be determined has really done something prohibited by the Constitution, namely the taking of private property without payment of compensation. On the authority of the decision of the Supreme Court in ‘the Bihar Zamindari cases (B)’, and the cases referred to therein for explaining the meaning of the term “fraud on the Constitution”, it is maintained that Cls. (a) and (g) of S. 4(1), and sub-cl. (ii) to (v) of cl. 4 of the Schedule being colourable in character are ultra vires.

Mr. Engineer in supplementing the arguments of Mr. Das pointed out that whereas S. 4(1)(d) provided for deduction of the expenses of collection of rents at the rate of 7 per cent, Cl. 4(ii) of the Schedule fixed the amount of deduction as regards these expenses at 10 p.c. of the gross income & that these provisions were contradictory and that therefore, it was obvious that the deduction under cl. 4(ii) was not on a rational basis. Mr. Engineer also added that in considering the question whether the deductions contemplated by sub-cl. (iii) to (v) of Cl. 4 of the Schedule were on account of items which the Jagirdars were under a legal obligation to bear it was necessary to bear in mind the constitution of Jagirs prior to the formation of Madhya Bharat; that there were different types of Jagirs in different Covenanted States of Madhya Bharat regulated by different laws and that what might have been an obligation of a Jagirdar in one Covenanted State could not be regarded as an obligation of a Jagirdar of another covenanted State but the impugned provisions overlooking this fact treated all Jagirdars on uniform basis. Mr. Samvatsar appearing on behalf of some of the petitioning Jagirdars of the former Indian States of Indore and Dhar, argued that under the laws of those States, the Jagirdars were under no legal obligation to incur any expenditure on account of any of the heads dealt with in sub-cl. (iii) to (v) of cl. 4 of the Schedule.

(48) The learned Advocate-General does not dispute the proposition that the competency of the State Legislature being limited under the Constitution, it cannot do indirectly what, it cannot do directly and that if the impugned Act and any provisions thereof are colourable in character in that under the guise or pretence of doing something permitted, they are in reality doing something prohibited by the constitution, then the Act or the provisions cannot be justified as valid. He, however, argues that having regard to Arts. 31(4) and 31(A) it is not open to the petitioners to urge objections as to the quantum of compensation arrived at by a certain process of evaluating the gross income and determining therefrom after certain deductions, the net income; that for purposes of compensation the Jagirs are regarded as a whole and that cl. (a) and (g) of S. 4(1) are not unconstitutional on the ground that no compensation is provided for some items of properties which are to vest in the State under those provisions; that the amount of deduction mentioned in sub-cl. (ii) of cl. (4) of the Schedule has been evolved objectively and all the deductions in the subsequent sub-clauses are related to the obligations of the Jagirdars. It is also contended that even if there was no legal obligation on the Jagirdars at the time of the passing of the impugned Act to incur any expenditure with respect to any item mentioned in sub-cl. (iii) to (v) of clause 4 of the Schedule, the fact that in the historical setting, all Jagirs sprang out of a feudal order and it was within the power of the Ruler of the State to call upon any Jagirdar in his State to shoulder any responsibility of administration that the Ruler thought fit, is in itself sufficient for regarding the deductions challenged as valid.

(49) I now proceed to consider those provisions of the Act, the constitutionality of which is challenged by the petitioners. Taking S. 4(1), (a) first, the argument of the learned Counsel for the petitioner is that this sub-section is invalid because it vests in the State many items of properties which are not producing any income and for which under the scheme of compensation provided by the Act, no compensation is being paid to the Jagirdars. On this point it becomes unnecessary to do more than to refer to the decision of the Supreme Court in the ‘Bihar and U. P. Zamindari cases (B)’, where a similar argument advanced on behalf of the petitioners in those cases, was rejected by the Supreme Court. In the case of — Raja Suryopal Singh v. The State of U. P. (B), His Lordship Mahajan J., while repelling the contention said,

“It is true that the principles of payment of compensation stated in the Act do not give anything like an equivalent or ‘quid pro quo’ for the property acquired and provide only for payment of what is euphemistically described in the resolution of the U. P. Legislature as “equitable compensation”. Properties fetching no income pass to the State without payment of any separate compensation and as comprising part of an estate which yields some net income to the proprietor....."

"In none of the cases could it be said that the provisions of the impugned Act would result in non-payment of compensation. Great emphasis was laid on the circumstance that nothing was being paid for non-income fetching properties. It has, however, to be observed that these non-income fetching properties are integral parts of an estate as defined in Art. 31A and it cannot be said when payment of compensation is provided for on the basis of the net income of the whole of the estate, that the legislation is of a confiscatory character. Different considerations might have prevailed if the estates as a whole were not being acquired but different pieces of property were made the subject-matter of acquisition. Properties comprised in an estate may be income-fetching and non-income fetching, the value of these to the owner in the market may well be on the basis of income and if the Act has laid down the principle of payment of compensation on the foot of net income, it cannot be said that the legislation is outside the ambit of Entry 42 of List 3."

(50) To the same effect are the observations of this Court in ILR (1952) Madh B 178 (A) in which it was argued with reference to the Madhya Bharat Zamindari Abolition Act, 1951 that it did not provide any compensation for non-income yielding properties, as the compensation under the Act was being determined on the basis of the net income of properties. Rejecting this argument, Kaul C. J., agreed with the view taken by the learned Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court in — 'Suryapal Singh v. State of U. P.', AIR 1951 All 674 (H) that it was not correct to regard the acquisition of an estate, as an aggregate of the acquisition of separate parts of or interest in the estate considered independently of each other. There is thus no substance in the contention of the learned counsel for the applicants that S. 4(1)(a) is ultra vires, because it vests in the State non-income yielding properties in the Jagir for which no compensation is being paid.

(51) The validity of S. 4(1)(g) is attacked mainly on the ground that if there was no legal obligation on the Jagirdars to maintain schools, hospitals and offices in their Jagirs, the buildings belonging to the Jagirdars which were being used in Jagir lands for these purposes cannot be acquired by the State without paying any compensation to the Jagirdars. The learned Advocate-General sought to justify the validity of these provisions by saying that there was a legal obligation on the Jagirdars to maintain schools, hospitals, etc. It would be convenient to consider this clause at a later stage along with sub-cl. (iv) of cl. 4 of the Schedule, as its validity on the arguments addressed before us, depends solely on the existence of a legal obligation on the Jagirdars to open and maintain schools and hospitals in their Jagirs.

(52) In regard to sub-cl. (ii) of cl. 4 of the Schedule, which provides for a deduction of an amount at rates stated therein on account of expenses of collection of rents (including irrecoverable arrears), the objection advanced on behalf of the petitioners is not as to the principle of deduction, but it is as to the percentage of deduction. It is said that this clause in fixing the amount of deduction at 10 per cent, of the gross income, where it exceeds Rs. 2000/- and an amount equal to 7 per cent. of the gross income, where it is less than Rs. 2000/- ignores the elementary rule of economics that costs of collection of revenue decrease as the gross income increases; that according to R. 9 of the rules made by the Government under the Madhya Bharat Zamindari Abolition Act, 1951 (published at page 424 of Madhya Bharat Government Gazette dated 28-7-1951) the remuneration of Patels in Raiyatwari villages has been fixed at 3½ per cent of the land revenue realised by them; that in S. 4(1)(d) of the impugned Act itself the expenses of collection of rents and revenue have been fixed at 7 per cent, & that having regard to these facts, the percentage of deduction fixed in sub-cl. (ii) of cl. 4 of the Schedule must be regarded as arbitrary, artificial, having no relation, whatsoever to the actual costs of realisation of the rents and having no other object than that of inflating of the deduction for the purpose of nullifying the provisions of the Act regarding the payments of compensation. To support his contention that if the deduction on account of expenses for collection of rents prescribed in the sub-clause has no relation to real facts, then the enactment of the provision must be declared as a "fraud on the Constitution" and therefore ultra vires, Mr. Das pressed into service certain observations of His Lordship Mahajan J., in 'the Bihar Zamindari cases (B)' with regard to S. 23(1)(e), Bihar Land Reforms Act, 1950, which provides for a deduction on a percentage basis out of the gross assets as costs of management. With regard to this provision of the Bihar Act, His Lordship has observed that the rates of deduction "have been fixed in an arbitrary manner bearing no relation, whatsoever, to the actual costs of management." At another place in the judgment, His Lordship has again said

"the provision in cl. (e) that costs of management have to be deducted up to twenty per cent has in its entirety no real relation to actual state of affairs."

On the strength of these observations of His Lordship Mahajan J., Mr. Das sought to argue that in the judgment of His Lordship Mahajan J., with whom their Lordships Mukherjea and Aiyer JJ., concurred, not only cl. (f) of S. 23(1) of the Bihar Act but also cl. (e) thereof has been held to be unconstitutional on the ground that the deductions provided by these clauses were of artificial nature & had no relation to any actual expenses. Mr. Das suggested that the omission of any reference to S. 23(1)(e) of the Bihar Act in the order of the Supreme Court was obviously due to oversight. He also stated that a petition for a review of the judgment of the Supreme Court on this point was pending in that Court.

(53) The reply of the learned Advocate-General is that as stated in the affidavits filed on behalf of the Government, 10 per cent is the normal cost of collection of rents inclusive of irrecoverable arrears; that the rate fixed by the Rules issued in 1951 under the Madhya Bharat Zamindari Abolition Act is as Rule 9 shows a temporary measure and only relates to the remuneration of Patels and not to all the costs of collection of rents; that the rate for the deduction on account of collection of rents in sub-cl. (ii) of S. 4 of the Schedule is higher than that provided in S. 4(1)(d) because the former includes the costs of collection of irrecoverable arrears of rents also, whereas the latter does not include this cost; that the rate of deduction specified in the sub-clause conforms to the rates prescribed in S. 21 of Kanoon Raiyatwari of Gwalior State Samvat 1994 and S. 509 Kanoon Mal Gwalior Samvat 1983 and other local Acts of the various Covenanted States. It was further said by the learned Advocate-General that the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners that according to the majority of the Supreme Court, S. 23(1)(e) of the Bihar Act, was unconstitutional on the ground that it provided for a deduction having no relation to the actual expenses of costs of management, was based on a misreading of the judgment of His Lordship Mahajan J.

(54) The contention of the learned counsel for the applicant that sub-cl. (ii) of cl. 4 of the Schedule is unconstitutional, is in my opinion, untenable. While there does not appear to me any logical basis for the variation in the rates of deduction according as the gross income is less than or exceeds Rs. 2000/- I do not think the percentage of deduction provided in the sub-clause can be called as palpably unreasonable and arbitrary. It is for the petitioners who are challenging the validity of the sub-clause to show that the ten per cent deduction on account of costs of collections of rents is fantastic and arbitrary. It is worthy of note that in the various affidavits filed by the petitioners, though they have stated that the Government has by rules recently issued fixed the remuneration of Patels in Raiyatwari Villages at 3½ per cent and that the deduction provided by sub-cl. (ii) is arbitrary, nowhere in those affidavits have they said anything about the actual costs of collection in their Jagirs. I do not see how from the fact that the Government has fixed the remuneration of the Patels at 3½ per cent of the rent recovered by them, it can be inferred that the costs of collection provided in the sub-clause is arbitrary. Costs of collection of rents include many items of expenditure besides the remuneration payable to a Patel. Again as R. 9 of the Rules published on 28-7-1951 shows it is open to the Government to increase the remuneration of 3½ per cent of the Patels if it is found not conforming to the actual existing condition. In the affidavit filed on behalf of the Government in 'Civil. Misc. No. 106 of 1951, Chandroji Rao Angre v. the State', it has been stated that the said rate of remuneration of the Patels is low and that it is the intention of the Government to revise and increase those rates.

As to the alleged inconsistency between S. 4(1)(d) and the sub-clause under consideration, I do not think there is any. It will be noted that S. 4(1)(d) and the impugned sub-clause deal with different matters. Section 4(1)(d) relates to the apportionment between the Jagirdar and the Government of all rents, revenue, cesses for the agricultural year in which Jagir is to be resumed, and recovered by the Jagirdars before the date of resumption and by the Government after that date. It is in connection with this matter that expenses of collection in that section have been fixed at 7 per cent of the rents and revenue actually recovered. The rates of deduction specified in sub-cl. (ii) of cl. 4 of the Schedule on the other hand, cover the expenses that might be incurred for the recovery of irrecoverable arrears. The higher rate in the sub-clause is, therefore, clearly justified on account of the trouble and expense involved in the collection of doubtful and irrecoverable arrears. Even if it is assumed that the percentage of deduction fixed by sub-cl. (ii) is high and does not correspond to the actual costs of collection of rents, I do not think it can be held that the provision having been enacted in colourable exercise of legislative power under entry 42 List 3 is unconstitutional. The argument of Mr. Das founded on certain observations of His Lordship Mahajan J., as regards S. 23(1)(e), Bihar Land Reforms Act and on the fact of pendency in the Supreme Court of a petition for a review of the judgment in the Bihar Zamindari cases, must now be rejected for the simple reason that the said review petition has been summarily dismissed by the Supreme Court. This fact has been stated in an affidavit dated 30-10-52 filed on behalf of the Government—and accepted by Messrs. Gupta and Patankar Junior counsel for the petitioners—on the basis of information received from the Deputy Registrar Supreme Court. The assistance or comfort which the learned counsel sought to derive from the observations of His Lordship Mahajan J., and the review petition is, therefore, not now available to him.

I, however, venture to add that when His Lordship Mahajan J., observed that the rates of deduction fixed in S. 23(1)(e) of the Bihar Act on account of costs of management bore no "relation to actual state of affairs", he was obviously referring to the percentage of deduction and not to the principle involved in the deduction. While when he said in regard to S. 23(1)(f) of that Act that the deduction thereunder on account of costs of works for the benefit of raiyats had "no relation to real facts", he questioned the principle itself of the deduction. This is made clear by the observation in the judgment of His Lordship Chandra Sekhar Aiyer J., that

"the Act does not say that this charge represents the expenditure on works of benefit or improvements which the Zamindars and proprietors were under any legal obligation to carry out and which they failed to discharge."

It is important to remember that according to the majority of the Supreme Court S. 23(1)(f) of the Bihar Act was held unconstitutional on the ground that the deduction sought to be made by that provision was about a matter in regard to which there was no legal obligation on the zamindars and proprietors to incur any expenditure, and not on the ground that the rate of deduction fixed therein had no relation to the actual expenses incurred by the zamindars or proprietors. In fact, as is evident from the arguments of Mr. Das noted in the judgment of His Lordship Patanjali Sastri C. J., in the Supreme Court Mr. Das attacked the validity of S. 23(1)(f) by saying that "there was no evidence to show that it was usual for the zamindars to incur such expenditure, and that the deduction was a mere contrivance to reduce the compensation payable for the acquisition of their estates."

It is thus clear that there is no basis for the suggestion that inasmuch as His Lordship Mahajan J., while saying that the deduction in section 23(1)(f) of the Bihar Act had no relation to real facts held the provision unconstitutional on that ground, he also intended to hold S. 23(1)(e) of the Bihar Act unconstitutional when he said that the rates of deduction fixed in that provision bore "no relation, whatsoever, to the actual costs of management." For these reasons I think the contention of Mr. Das that sub-cl. (ii) of cl. 4 of Sch. 1 is unconstitutional, must fail.

(55) Coming now to the other sub-clauses of cl. 4 of the Schedule, it must first be stated that the challenge to the validity of these sub-clauses rests on the decision of the Supreme Court as to the unconstitutionality of S. 23(1) (f), Bihar Land Reforms Act of 1950. Section 23(1)(f) of the Bihar Act provided for a deduction on a percentage basis out of the gross assets as costs of works of benefit to the raiyats of an estate or tenure in ascertaining the net assets on which compensation is based. The principle on which the majority of the Supreme Court held this section unconstitutional was that there was no legal obligation on the zamindars or proprietors to incur any expenditure on works of benefit or improvements in their estates or tenure and that therefore the legislature could not purporting to exercise the legislative power under entry 42 of List 3 insert the provision in the Act for the purpose of "negating partially the provisions of the Act regarding the payment of compensation". From what I have stated in the previous paragraph, there can be no room for thinking that His Lordship Mahajan J., held this provision unconstitutional on a ground other than that stated by His Lordship Chandra Sekhar Aiyer J. There can also be no room for the suggestion that such a deduction would be valid if it is in respect of an imperfect obligation or in respect of an obligation which though not in existence at the time of the passing of the impugned Act could have been imposed on proprietors, zamindars or Jagirdars. In applying these principles, as I propose to do, to the present case, the main inquiry must, therefore, be whether the Jagirdars are under a legal obligation to incur expenditure on account of the various items specified in sub-cl. (iii) to (v) of cl. 4 of the Schedule. I now address myself to that inquiry.

(56) Sub-clause (iii) of cl. 4 of Sch. 1 provides for a deduction on account of land records of choukidari establishments at the rate of 12½ per cent of the gross income. The validity of this sub-clause was challenged before us solely with reference to the liability of the Jagirdars from the former Indian States of Gwalior, Indore and Dhar. I am, therefore, bound to presume that the sub-clause is valid in relation to the liability of the Jagirdars from other Covenanted States of Madhya Bharat to bear these charges. As a matter of fact in 'Civil Misc. Petn. No. 113 of 1951 (Indore Bench)' the petitioner Thakur Uday Singh, who is a Jagirdar of the former Ratlam State, nowhere in his affidavit disputes his liability to bear these charges. All he says is that the 12½ per cent deduction in respect of these items is "a very exaggerated figure which has no relation to actual existing condition". Similarly in 'Civil Misc. Petn. No. 109 of 1951 (Indore Bench)', the petitioner Thakur Pratap Singh, who is a Jagirdar of the former Sittamu State, also does not dispute his liability as regards these charges. Mr. Das appearing for Sardar Shitole and some other Jagirdars of Gwalior State while conceding in reply that the Jagirdars of Gwalior State were under a legal obligation to incur expenditure on account of Choukidari establishment said that no such liability was thrown on them under the Kawayad Jagirdaran Gwalior State, Samvat 1970 (Manual for Jagirdars) with regard to land records, and that in any case if any such liability existed, it ceased after the enactment in 1949 of Jagir Land Records Management Act (Act No. 25 of 1949) under which the Madhya Bharat Government took over the management of land records in all Jagirs.

Mr. Engineer on behalf of the petitioners Sardar Angre and Balbhadra Singh, who are also Jagirdars of Gwalior State, on the other hand admitted that there was a legal liability on these Jagirdars to pay charges on account of land records establishment but said that they were under no legal obligation to defray any expenditure as regards choukidari. It was further said that the obligation to keep choukidars under the Kawayad Jagirdaran existed so long as the Jagirdars were allowed by the Government to levy a cess of 2 per cent of land revenue on the tenants for the purpose of meeting the expenses of keeping choukidars and that as the Government abolished this cess by a notification dated 24-11-51 (published at page 1008 of the Gazette dated 1-12-51) the Jagirdars were relieved of the responsibility of appointing choukidars at their own cost.

On behalf of the Jagirdars of the former Indore and Dhar States, Mr. Samvatsar argued that a Jagirdar of Indore State was no doubt, required under S. 129, Indore Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, 1931 and the rules framed under that Act to keep a choukidar at his own expense in his Jagir and that under S. 167, Dhar State Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, 1940, a Jagirdar in Dhar State was also similarly liable to keep a choukidar, but that inasmuch as these provisions were repealed by S. 3, Madhya Bharat Revenue Administration and Ryotwari Land Revenue and Tenancy Act (Act No. 66 of 1950), the Jagirdars of these two States were no longer under any obligation to keep choukidars at their own expense. To controvert these contentions, the learned Advocate-General relied on the provisions of the Jagir Land Records Management Act, 1949, Ss. 62A and 140, Gwalior State Kawayad Jagirdaran and S. 139, Madhya Bharat Revenue Administration Act, 1950 (Act No. 66 of 1950) and said that these provisions unmistakably showed that all the Jagirdars in Madhya Bharat were under a legal obligation to incur expenditure on account of choukidari and land records establishments.

(57) I do not think there is any force in any of these contentions put forward on behalf of the petitioners. The liability of the Jagirdars in Madhya Bharat to bear expenditure on account of management of the land records is plain enough from the provisions of the Jagir Land Record Management Act of 1949 which replaced the Land Records Management Ordinance of Samvat 2005. Sections 3 and 4 of this Act distinctly say that "notwithstanding anything contained in any Act, Regulation or Rule in force in any Covenanted State," the management of the land records and the appointment of village Patwaris in Jagirs shall be done by the Government and the costs thereof shall be realised by the Government from the Jagirdars as arrears of Tanka in a proportion to be determined under S. 4 of the Act. Under S. 4 of the Act, power is given to the Government to determine "the amount and the proportion of the cost to be realised" from Jagirdars for the maintenance of land records. In view of these clear provisions, there cannot be any doubt as to the liability of the Jagirdars in Madhya Bharat to pay land records management charges. Mr. Das said that if a liability in respect of the charges for the management of land records existed under this Act, it could be separately enforced against the Jagirdars. I do not see the point in this criticism. When the Jagirs are to be resumed and the Jagirdars are to be paid some compensation for the resumption, how else is the liability to be enforced except by making a deduction from the gross income while computing the amount of compensation payable on the basis of net income.

As regards choukidars, it is clear from S. 140 of Kawayad Jagirdars that the Jagirdars of the Gwalior State are under an obligation to appoint choukidars at their own expense in their Jagirs. This liability is, in no way, dependent on a supposed right of the Jagirdars to levy and collect a cess from their tenants for meeting the choukidari charges. The Jagirdars of Gwalior were no doubt levying this cess for some time in their Jagirs but as this cess was prima facie illegal, it was abolished along with other illegal cesses by the notification referred to by Mr. Engineer. The notification in no way affected the liability of the Jagirdars of Gwalior State to bear choukidari charges.

The position of the Jagirdars of Indore and Dhar States in this respect is that under S. 129, Indore Tenancy Act, 1931 and S. 167, Dhar Tenancy Act, they had also to appoint choukidars in their Jagirs at their own expense. These provisions have, no doubt, been repealed by the Madhya Bharat Revenue Administration and Ryotwari Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, 1950. But then S. 139 of this Act provides that for each village or a group of villages to which the Act applies there shall be village servants appointed in accordance with rules made under the Act and that the rules may also prescribe inter alia the remuneration and the duties of these village servants. Our attention has not been drawn to any rules framed under the Act regulating the duties and the remuneration of these village servants. But it appears to me that the expression "village servants" is wide enough to include a choukidar and as the Madhya Bharat Revenue Administration and Raiyatwari Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, re-enacts with some modifications the provisions contained in the Indore and Dhar State Tenancy Acts, the rules framed under those Acts with regard to the duties and remuneration of choukidars must be deemed to have been issued under the Madhya Bharat Ryotwari Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, 1950 and continuing in force by virtue of S. 23, Madhya Bharat General Clauses Act, 1950 (Act No. 84 of 1950). The contention, therefore, of Mr. Samvatsar that the Jagirdars of Indore and Dhar States were, at the time of the passing of the impugned Act, under no obligation to keep choukidars at their own expense cannot be accepted.

During the course of his arguments, Mr. Das also said that the deduction from the gross income of only those expenses could be regarded as legitimate which had to be incurred for earning the gross income and that as expenditure on land records and choukidari was not of such a nature, the deduction on that account was not legal. The short answer to this argument is this that 'net income' has been specifically defined in Cl. 4 of the Schedule and has not been left to be determined by other tests. Even on the test propounded by the learned Counsel, I do not think it can be said that expenditure incurred on land records and choukidars is not a necessary expenditure for earning the gross income. A Jagirdar cannot clearly know the amount due from his tenants, if he does not maintain land records. He also cannot collect with ease the rents due if he does not keep a choukidar one of whose well-known duties is to take the tenants to the officer entrusted with the duty of collecting rents for paying the rents due from them. It was then said that the deduction at the rate of 12½ per cent. of the gross income was exorbitant. There is nothing to show that these charges are unreasonably high. Even if they are to a certain extent higher than the actual expenses, the sub-clause cannot, for the reasons which I have already stated in connection with the earlier sub-clause be declared invalid. For all these reasons, I am of the opinion that the deduction under sub-cl. (iii) is in respect of a legal obligation of the Jagirdars of Madhya Bharat to incur expenditure on account of land records and choukidari. The sub-clause must, therefore, be held as valid.

(58) The next sub-clause provides for a deduction from the gross income in the case of Jagirs other than a Jadid usul Jagir or a Devasthanani Jagir of an amount equal to 15 per cent. of the gross income, if it exceeds Rs. 2000/- or of an amount equal to 10 per cent. of the gross income if it is less than Rs. 2,000/- on account of education, public health and roads. On the question of this deduction the case for the petitioners, as put by their learned Counsel Mr. Das, is that the Jagirdars of Gwalior State are under no legal obligation to incur any expenditure in their Jagirs for education, public health or roads and that those Jagirdars who have so far defrayed expenditure on these items have done so voluntarily. It is also added that Jagirdars whose income exceeded Rs. 5000/- made some contribution to the Gwalior Government for education and roads but never on account of public health; that by circular No. 2 of Samvat 1980 of Gwalior Darbar, the Jagirdars were authorised to levy and recover a cess at the rate of one anna per rupee of land revenue from their tenants for the purpose of meeting the expenses of schools, dispensaries, roads and sanitation; that it was out of this 'cess-fund' known as 'Anni fund' that the Jagirdars maintained schools, dispensaries and roads in their Jagirs and that with the abolition of this cess by a notification of the Gwalior Government (published at p. 543 of Gwalior Government Gazette, 16-6-1945) the responsibility of the Jagirdars to establish and maintain schools, dispensaries and roads ceased.

Mr. Samvatsar learned counsel for the petitioning Jagirdars from the erstwhile Indore & Dhar States also said that Jagirdars of those States were under no legal obligation to spend any money for education, roads and public health. The learned Advocate-General admitted that in Indore State, education and public health in jagir villages was looked after by the State itself at its own cost. In regard to the Jagirdars of Gwalior State, he, however, contended that their liability to incur expenditure on account of the above items arose under the Darbar Policy enunciated by His Late Highness Maharaja Madhav Rao Scindia of Gwalior and under S. 2 of Part A of Chap. IV of the Education Manual of Gwalior State. As to the cess of one anna per rupee of the land revenue, the learned Advocate-General pointed out that the receipts from this cess accumulated into a fund known as "Anni fund," which was meant to be administered by a committee of the tenants & villagers for their own welfare; that this fund was abolished because it was found that a number of Jagirdars prevented such public bodies from administering the fund for the intended purpose; and that the abolition of the cess in 1945 did not, in any way, relieve the Jagirdars of their obligation to provide at their own expense educational, public health and road facilities in their Jagirs.

(59) In my view, sub-cl. (iv) of cl. 4 of Sch. I is clearly ultra vires. That the Jagirdars of Indore State were under no legal obligation to defray expenditure on account of education, public health and roads is not in dispute. That the Jagirdars of Gwalior State were also under no such legal obligation cannot, as I will show in a moment, be doubted. Nowhere in the Gwalior State Manual for Jagirdars, is there any provision casting any obligation on the Jagirdars to expend money for the establishment, construction and maintenance of schools, hospitals and roads in their Jagirs. Nor is such obligation imposed on any Jagirdar by the terms of his Sanad. True, in Volume XI of the publication well-known as "Darbar Policy (Gwalior State)," there are passages reminding the Jagirdars of their duties to their tenants and exhorting them to spend money in their Jagirs for the welfare of their tenantry. For instance in para. 10 at page 7 of Volume XI of Darbar Policy, which has been relied on by the learned Advocate-General it is stated:

"Besides fidelity and loyalty to their Suzerain, there are other obligations incumbent on the Jagirdars. They must treat such of their subjects as are entrusted to their charge with justice, sympathy & humanity, endeavour to better their condition and carefully consider their education, sanitary condition and general welfare."

But at page 37 of this Volume, it has been observed that:

"Every one will admit that Public Works of utility such as the opening of hospitals and schools, the construction of roads and railways and the sinking of wells, building of tanks etc.. are essential for the prosperity and well-being of the State. But together with the opportunity and necessity of carrying out such works, there arises the question of money generally. Where money is available an estate just like the State, can undertake works of this nature to its advantage. The difference in the position of an estate and the State in such cases lies in the fact that if the estate is unable to bear the expenditure necessary for a road or a school, which is essential for it, in view of the mutual advantages to be derived, the Darbar itself provides the funds required."

Again, in volume IV of the publication at p. 68, His Late Highness remarked:

"It is not compulsory on the Jagirdars that each one of them should have a separate hospital in his Jagir, for it depends upon the financial condition of his estate whether he can afford to have one or not, but where circumstances allow, one should certainly be opened and where a Jagir has not the means to do so, it should join its neighbours in maintaining a travelling dispensary."

(60) Quite apart from these observations which show that the Jagirdars of Gwalior State were under no legal obligation to incur any expenditure on account of education, roads and public health, it is obvious that the 'Darbar Policy' as its very title implies and its content shows is a "Policy" and not a law defining and regulating the rights, duties, privileges and obligations of the Jagirdars of the quondam Gwalior State. It simply enunciates abstract declarations, pious aspirations, moral precepts and principles which His Late Highness desired should be followed in the administration of Gwalior State after his death. This is clear from the foreword in the first volume of the publication in which His Late Highness explained the aim and object with which he wrote the several volumes of 'Darbar Policy' he said:

"The energy I have expended and efforts I have put forth in writing this Policy have mainly been inspired with the aim that the work may prove beneficial to the next generation (in which I have meant to include the Ruler as well as the Officers, subjects etc..) so that for purposes of administering the State and shouldering the grave responsibilities thereof they might discover in this collection a store house which may serve to the Ruler, Officers and subjects of the State, as a guide, philosopher and friend; also the ways and the means for the well-being and prosperity of the subjects and those conducive to the progress and good name of the State may lie clearly chalked out before them and they may not have to wander aimlessly for want of a well-tryed and sympathetic guide."

(61) It is thus clear that no legal efficacy is attached to the Darbar Policy which merely embodies the principles for legislative and executive action. The practical efficacy of the principles enunciated in Darbar Policy was in fact, though not in law, considerable, inasmuch as a disregard of its spirit by any person concerned would have subjected him to strong disapprobation from the higher authorities. But this consideration can have very little weight in considering whether the principles enunciated in 'Darbar Policy' are legal principles enforceable in any Court. As I have said before the Darbar Policy only lays down guides for political and administrative conduct and is not the source of law.

(62) The learned Advocate-General placed some reliance on S. 2 of Part A Chapter 4 of Gwalior State Education Manual to show that the Jagirdars were under a legal obligation to establish schools in their Jagirs. I do not see how this provision helps the State. It only prescribes the conditions under which schools could be opened in Jagir areas by the Gwalior Govt. This section by itself does not cast any obligation on the Jagirdars to establish and maintain schools in their Jagirs. The learned Advocate-General then argued that the obligation of the Jagirdars to establish schools, dispensaries and construct roads in their Jagirs flowed from the historical fact that they constituted an "imperium in imperio" and that under the Jagir Manual of the Gwalior State, the Jagirdars of Gwalior State were bound to comply with the orders of the suzerain power, namely the Ruler of Gwalior State, for the care of the subjects entrusted to their charge. I do not propose to enter into, what seems to me, a profitless discussion of the polemic problem of the position of the Jagirdars of Gwalior State vis-a-vis the Ruler of Gwalior State. It is, however, clear to me that if in the relationship contended by the learned Advocate-General, the obligation of the Jagirdars to incur expenditure on account of education, roads and public health was inherent, it was a political obligation. The obligation, if I may say so, was in no way, different from the obligation, which existed on the administrators of the yore and which exists on the administrators of the present day of promoting the welfare of the people. Such an obligation is enforceable not in law but by political pressure.

(63) Learned counsel for the State felt the force of these considerations and then preferred to contend that the Ruler of Gwalior or Indore or any other State in the exercise of his sovereign authority could have imposed these obligations on his Jagirdars and in the event of their disobeying the orders of the Ruler, the Jagirs could have been also resumed by him. I am not disposed to deny that the Ruler of a former Indian State if he had chosen, could have passed an order calling upon the Jagirdars of his State to establish and maintain schools and hospitals and roads in their Jagirs and could have also taken appropriate measures to enforce his orders. That the Rulers while preserving the rights, privileges and dignities of their Jagirdars did not effectively and legally compel them to ameliorate the condition or relieve the suffering of their tenantry may ever be a matter for disappointment. But the fact remains that no such order of any ruler imposing an obligation on all Jagirdars of his State is shown to exist and produced before us. What we are concerned with, is not the law as it would have been or would be in future, but the law as it is. The truth is that there is really no answer to the contention of the petitioners that the deduction under sub-cl. (iv) is unwarranted. The validity of this sub-clause must be judged on legal considerations and not on political or moral considerations. In my opinion, as the petitioners were under no legal obligation to defray any expenditure for education, roads and public health in their Jagirs, this clause must be held, on the basis of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Bihar Zamindari cases (B), as constituting a fraud on the Constitution and therefore, unconstitutional on that ground.

If, as I think, there was no legal obligation on the petitioners to open schools and hospitals and construct roads in their Jagirs, it must follow that cl. (g) of S. 4 (1) of the Act which vests in the State without any compensation all the buildings belonging to the Jagirdars standing on Jagir lands and being used for schools and hospitals must also be held to have been inserted in the Act "as a colourable exercise of legislative power under entry 42" of Concurrent List and unconstitutional on that ground. If the Jagirdars are under no obligation then clearly the buildings belonging to them and being used for schools and hospitals cannot be regarded as integral parts of a jagir estate for which no compensation need be paid separately. The learned Advocate-General said, as I understood him, that even if there was no legal obligation on Jagirdars to spend money on education, health etc., the mere circumstance that certain buildings belonging to them were in fact being used for schools and hospitals, would be sufficient to treat such buildings as parts of a Jagir Estate. I do not see how they could be so regarded when there is nothing to suggest that in permitting the user of these buildings for schools and hospitals, the Jagirdars intended to part with their proprietary rights therein.

(64) The next and the last sub-clause which is assailed, is sub-cl. (v) which makes a provision for deduction from the gross income on account of police, revenue and judicial powers exercised by certain Jagirdars. Unlike the preceding sub-clauses, the language of this sub-clause is not general. Its applicability is restricted to those Jagirdars "who themselves or whose predecessors-in-interest immediately before 15-5-1948 exercised these powers." The question of the liability of the Jagirdars to defray the charges of police, judicial and revenue administration in their Jagirs arises with reference to some Jagirdars of the former Gwalior State. It is common ground that of the petitioners before us only some of the Jagirdars of Gwalior exercised before 15-5-1948 police, judicial and revenue powers. The submission of Mr. Das, the learned Counsel for the petitioners, is that no law of Gwalior State placed any obligation on the Jagirdars to exercise police, revenue and judicial powers and to incur expenditure on their account; that when any of these powers was conferred on a Jagirdar, he exercised it and spent money for the police, revenue or judicial establishment as the case may be, not as an obligation but as a privilege "only to satisfy his dignity." Learned counsel further pointed out that by the Jagir Courts, Revenue and Police Powers Abolition Act, 1949 (Act No. 18 of 1949) and by the Ordinances which that Act replaced, the revenue and judicial powers of Jagirdars were withdrawn on 24-5-48, and the police powers were also taken away on 6-11-48; that from those dates, the Jagirdars were not exercising any of these powers or incurring any expenditure on these heads; and that there being thus no legal obligation at the time of passing of the impugned Act on the Jagirdars to exercise these powers or to bear their charges, the deductions provided in sub-clause (v) were illegal. In reply the learned Advocate-General placed reliance on Chaps. 13 and 14 of the Gwalior State Manual for Jagirdars, Samvat 1970 and on S. 191 of the Gwalior State Police Manual, Samvat 1990 and argued that these provisions indicated that when a Jagirdar was invested with any of these powers, he had no option but to exercise the power as an obligation and bear charges for the necessary establishment for the exercise of that power. He also said that though the State of Madhya Bharat took away in 1948 the police, revenue and judicial powers from the Jagirdars, their liability to contribute towards the expenses of the police, revenue and judicial administration in their jagirs continued.

(65) Strictly speaking, the point raised can be disposed of by reference to the provisions of the Jagir Courts, Revenue and Police Power Abolition Act, 1949 (Act No. 18 of 1949) which relieved the Jagirdars of their police, revenue and judicial powers. But it seems to me desirable to stress the status or title in which the Jagirdars exercised these powers before they were withdrawn in 1948. The relevant provisions bearing on the subject are to be found in Chaps. 13 and 14 of the Gwalior State Manual for Jagirdars. A careful reading of these provisions shows that no Jagirdar could claim to exercise revenue or judicial powers as a matter of right. The power had to be specifically conferred by the Suzerain, namely the Maharaja of Gwalior for the time being, and it was subject to such conditions as the Maharaja imposed. The power could be enlarged, curtailed or taken away at any time. Again, on the death of a Jagirdar invested with these powers his successor or heirs could not exercise those powers without a fresh conferment of the power from the Gwalior Darbar, and the heir or successor could exercise only those powers which had been specifically conferred on him. It must be noted that the rights granted under a Sanad were also subject to the operation of Ss. 56 and 57 of the Manual, which contained inter alia the rules stated above. Section 66 of the Manual laid down that the State would be entitled to the whole of the stamp revenue and judicial receipts of every kind as for examples, fines, forfeiture of security bonds etc., and the State would allot the necessary funds for the establishment of the Courts. An exception was, however, made in the case of Jagirdars, in whose Jagir sanads the term "Diwani, Foujdari" occurred. Such Jagirdars retained the entire judicial receipts and income, and were also required to defray the cost of the establishment of the Courts. There is no provision in the Jagir Manual as regards the investment and exercise of police powers. We have not been referred to any other law of Gwalior State regulating the conferment and exercise of police powers. The Advocate-General drew our attention only to S. 191 of the Gwalior State Police Manual. But this section by itself does not deal with the conditions and circumstances in which a Jagirdar could be invested with police powers. It only lays down the directions which a Jagirdar invested with police power was required to follow in the recruitment and establishment of a police force in his Jagir. It may be mentioned that S. 191 of the Police Manual speaks of the exercise of police powers by the Jagirdars as an "Aijaz" (honour). Provisions similar to those contained in Chaps. 13 and 14 of the Gwalior Jagirdar's Manual also exist in the Indore State Manual for Jagirdars.

(66) It is clear from the above brief summary of the material provisions of the Manual for Jagirdars and S. 191 of the police Manual that those provisions exclude the idea of the Jagirdars exercising these powers as a matter of right, independently of the sovereign power. On the other hand the provisions make it amply clear that whatever powers the Jagirdars exercised in police, revenue and judicial administration, they exercised in complete subordination to the Ruler of the State for the time being, from whom such powers were derived by specific conferment and on whose pleasure their continued exercise entirely depended. The provisions proceed on the premise that police, revenue and judicial powers are sovereign rights of the Ruler of the State and are not incidents or attributes of any right, even proprietary, in the soil granted by the Ruler to the Jagirdar.

If, therefore, these rights could not be exercised without a specific conferment and if they could be withdrawn at any time, and if no Jagirdar could enforce those rights in a Court of law or claim damages from the State for the withdrawal of those rights, I am unable to see, how it can be asserted that in the exercise of police, revenue and judicial powers and in incurring expenditure for these purposes, the Jagirdars were acting not as persons on whom certain privileges had been conferred but were acting in the discharge of a legal obligation imposed on them by law or by the terms of their sanads. The privilege of exercising revenue, judicial or police powers, no doubt, involved some expenditure on the part of the Jagirdars for the establishment of police force and civil and revenue Courts. But those Jagirdars who sought these powers and exercised them, were evidently prepared to pay the price for privileges which many might regard as empty or burdensome. The voluntariness of the Jagirdars to bear the charges on account of police, judicial and revenue administration cannot clearly be regarded as an obligation imposed on them to exercise those powers and incur the necessary expenditure. No instance has, however, been cited before us in which without the conferment of these powers on any Jagirdar, he was asked to contribute towards the expenses of police, judicial and revenue administration by the State in his Jagir or in which on the withdrawal of those powers from him a demand was made on him for such a contribution. To me, it is clear that even before 1948, when the judicial, police and revenue powers were withdrawn from the Jagirdars, there was no legal obligation on the Jagirdars to exercise those powers and to incur any expenditure for police, revenue and judicial administration in their Jagirs.

(67) The matter seems to me to be now concluded by the enactment in 1949 of the Jagir Courts, Revenue and Police Powers Abolition Act. This Act replaced two Ordinances promulgated in the previous year taking away the police, revenue and judicial powers of the Jagirdars. Sections 3 and 5 of the Act abolished all police, judicial and revenue powers of the Jagirdars and prohibited them from exercising those powers. Section 7 of the Act repeals inter alia

"all provisions in, and powers under any other enactment, Manual, Circular, Rule or Order whatsoever, which are in force and are being exercised in any part of the United State (i.e., Madhya Bharat) and which are inconsistent with the provisions of the Act."

From what is provided in Jagir Courts Revenue, Police Powers Abolition Act, it is plain that the provisions contained in the Gwalior State Manual for Jagirdars about the conferment & exercise of the revenue and judicial powers stand repealed and that when the impugned Act was enacted, there was no obligation on the Jagirdars to exercise these powers or to meet any expenditure for police, judicial and revenue administration in their Jagirs. It is significant that the Jagir Courts, Revenue and Police Powers Abolition Act, unlike the Jagir Land Records Management Act 1949 (Act No. 25 of 1949) does not contain any provision for the realisation from the Jagirdars of the expenses that might be incurred by the Government for police, revenue and judicial administration in the Jagirs as a result of the withdrawal of the powers exercised by the Jagirdars. To me, the omission is eloquent as emphasising the fact that the Jagirdars were at no time under any legal obligation to defray the costs of police, revenue and judicial administration in their Jagirs. Another section of the Act which deserves to be noted is S. 6 (1) which says that "When a Jagirdar is unable to collect rent due to him, he may, according to the provisions of law, relating to rents, for the time being in force, in the area concerned apply before a competent Court or authority."

The insertion of this provision in the Jagir Courts, Revenue and Police Powers Abolition Act, can only be explained by the fact that the Act presupposes that the grant of police, revenue and judicial powers to Jagirdars was to enable them to collect the rents due. If this is the real purpose of the grant of these powers, then I think it could be argued with considerable force that expenditure incurred by a Jagirdar for revenue, police and judicial establishments is a part of the costs of collection of rents, for which a provision has already been made in sub-cl. (ii) of cl. 4 of Sch. I.

(68) From what I have said above, it is clear that whatever may have been the position before 1948, since that year there is no legal obligation on the Jagirdars to incur expenditure for revenue, police and judicial administration in their Jagirs. As there was no such obligation at the time of the enactment of the impugned Act, sub-cl. (v) of Cl. 4 of Sch. I, must on the strength of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Bihar Zamindari cases (B), be held as unconstitutional. During the course of his arguments, the learned Advocate-General suggested that it was sufficient to support the validity of the sub-clause if a legal obligation existed not at the time of the passing of the impugned Act but at some time anterior to it. I am unable to accede to this argument. If this test is accepted then one is led to the strange conclusion that if the legislature had chosen to provide for a very high deduction in respect of the legal obligation for which many of the Jagirs were originally granted, to wit, to furnish a certain number of armed followers and cavalry, the deduction would be valid. I have no doubt in my mind that according to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Bihar Zamindari cases (B), the deduction from the gross income in order to be valid must be in respect of a legal obligation existing at the time of the passing of the impugned Act.

(69) I am, therefore, disposed to think that sub-cl. (v) of Cl. 4 of Sch. I is colourable in character in that it provides for something which really cannot be done in the exercise of the legislative power under entry 42 of List III and is, therefore, unconstitutional. If this sub-clause is unconstitutional, it must follow that the buildings standing in Jagir lands and belonging to the Jagirdars which were being used by them for the exercise of police, judicial and revenue powers cannot vest in the State under cl. (g) of S. 4 (1).

(70) It is not suggested that if cl. (g) of S. 4 (1) and sub-cl. (iv) and (v) of Cl. 4 of Sch. I are invalid, then the whole Act is ultra vires. Mr. Das conceded that upon the principles indicated by the Supreme Court in the Bihar

Zamindari cases (B), these provisions must be regarded as severable from the general scheme of the impugned Act of which they form a part, and I think that they are so severable.

(71) It only remains for me to consider the special points urged by Mr. Engineer and Mr. Gupta with regard to some petitions.

(72) Mr. Engineer contended that the Madhya Bharat Jagir Abolition Act, 1951 could not be made applicable to the petitioner Balbhadra Singh in petition No. 1 of 1952 who was a holder of a 'mediatised' estate and not of Jagir granted by the Scindia. It was said that under the sanads given to the ancestors of the petitioner by the British Government, he was an absolute owner of the estate exercising sovereign rights therein. In substance it is claimed that the petitioner Bhalbhadra Singh is an independent chief and the Madhya Bharat Government has no power to acquire compulsorily any part of his estate. The answer I would make to that contention is, that "an Indian State" has been defined in Art. 366 of the Constitution as "any territory which the Government of the Dominion of India recognised as such a State" and it is not the case of the petitioner Balbhadra Singh that his estate was recognised by the Government of the Dominion of India as an 'Indian State'. It is also clear from a copy of the Sanad granted by the Ruler of Gwalior which has been filed with the petition, and from the references, given in the appendices to the petition, to Aitchison's "Treaties, Engagements and Sanads", Vol. V that the petitioner was at no time recognised even by the British Government as an independent Chief. On the other hand, it is plain from the pronouncement dated 14-3-1921 of Lord Chelmsford the then Viceroy of India (given at p. 517 of Aitchison's "Treaties, Engagements and Sanads", Vol. V) that the petitioner's ancestors and other holders of 'mediatised' estates were since the beginning of 19th Century always under the suzerainty of the former Gwalior State and that when in 1921 the British Government modified their practice in relation to the 'mediatised' estates and permitted the Gwalior Darbar to exercise those rights over the estates which belonged to it as a Suzerain, they only assured that the Gwalior Darbar would issue to the holders of these estates fresh sanads and honour the pledges given and the rights 'mediatised' by the British Government. Paragraph 8 of that pronouncement is very significant. It said:

"In view of this settlement, Political Officers will no longer concern themselves with your affairs and you will in future look to your Suzerain, His Highness the Maharaja Scindia for the time being, and his Darbar in all matters connected with your estates and tankas. You will, therefore, henceforth be entitled to the rights and subject to the obligations contained in the Manual of Jagirdars of the Gwalior State Samvat 1970, as in force for the time being."

(73) In the face of this pronouncement, which was later implemented by the Gwalior Darbar, the claim of the petitioner that he is an independent Chief cannot seriously be countenanced. With the lapse of the British paramountcy over Indian States in 1947, the guarantees given by the British Government to the holders of the 'mediatised' estates also lapsed and since then the holders of these estates are in their status or rights no better than the other Jagirdars of Gwalior State. I do not think it is necessary to say more on this point. For, the question whether any particular estate or village is, or is not a Jagir for the purposes of the impugned Act does not really arise at this stage. It can arise only when Government issues a notification under S. 3 of the Act and claims by virtue of that notification that certain lands being jagir lands have vested in the State.

(74) Mr. Gupta appearing in cases Nos. 628 and 629 of 1951 contended that under Entry 36 List II the State Legislature had the power to legislate with respect to acquisition of property but not with respect to resumption of property; that the impugned Act dealt with the resumption of Jagirs and was, therefore, beyond the competence of the State Legislature and ultra vires. Mr. Gupta also raised the point that the State Legislature could not pass any law with regard to the acquisition of Jagir-properties & the payment of compensation for the acquisition, as the subject-matter of acquisition of land and compensation therefor was already covered by an existing law, merely, the Gwalior Land Acquisition Act. It is also said that the two petitioners are holders of Jagirs in which lands have been settled on the Zamindari system and that under the scheme of compensation provided by the Act, as the zamindars in the Jagirs are to receive compensation out of the compensation payable to the Jagirdars, no compensation would really be received by the Jagirdars, and that on the other hand they would be required to pay from their own pockets substantial amounts for the payment of compensation to the Zamindars.

(75) These contentions are devoid of any substance. I find it difficult to understand how the argument based on the distinction between "acquisition" and 'resumption' really helps the two petitioners on whose behalf Mr. Gupta appeared. To me it appears that by advancing that argument Mr. Gupta is impliedly assenting to the proposition that a 'Jagir' is not the property of the holder thereof and is liable to be resumed. For 'resumption' connotes the idea that the land resumed is not the property of the persons from whom it is taken back by the rightful owner. On this argument it would follow that Jagirs could be resumed without any legislation and the Jagirdars are not entitled to any compensation for the resumption. The argument of Mr. Gupta ignores the fact that the rights of Jagirdars recognised by the impugned Act are actually higher than those claimed by Mr. Gupta on their behalf. It presupposes that the Jagirdars have by usage, prescription and grant acquired in relation to the lands a bundle of rights exercisable with respect to the lands; that this "bundle of rights" is a property which can only be acquired in consonance with the provisions of Art. 31(2) of the Constitution. The impugned Act is, no doubt, described as an Act for the resumption of Jagir lands, but it is in essence an Act for the acquisition of the "bundle of rights exercisable by the Jagirdars with respect to the lands".

The argument that the State Legislature by enacting the impugned Act could not deprive the petitioners of the benefit of the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, must also be rejected. A similar argument was raised in the Supreme Court in the Bihar Zamindari Case and was repelled. Rejecting the argument His Lordship Mahajan J., said

"the provisions as to assessment of compensation enacted in the Land Acquisition Act only apply to acquisitions that are made by notification under that Act. Its provisions have no application to acquisitions made under either local or central laws unless they are specifically made applicable by the provisions of these Statutes."

The position here is no different as to the contention that no compensation would really be paid to Jagirdars in whose Jagirs, land is settled on Zamindari system, I must confess I have had small success in appreciating the argument of the learned Counsel. In the affidavit filed by the petitioner Sardar Jadhav in 'Civil. Misc. Case No. 629 of 1951' details of the amount of compensation that would be payable to the petitioner and to his zamindars have been given and an attempt has been made to show that the compensation payable to the Zamindars is actually more than that the Jagirdar himself would get. The mistake in these calculations lies in the fact that the gross income of a Zamindar under cl. (2) of Sch. II has been taken to be the gross income of the Jagirdar under cl. (2) of Sch. I. A perusal of these clauses of the two Schedules will show that the gross income of a Jagirdar in the case of land settled on the Zamindari system, is not the same as the gross income of a zamindar. It includes the land revenue payable to the Jagirdars by the Zamindars and many other items. In the calculation set out in the affidavit of Sardar Jadhav, the land revenue payable by the Zamindar to the Jagirdar or income under other heads has not been included, as it should have been, in the gross income of the Jagirdar. There does not appear to me any force in this contention.

(76) In the result on the arguments addressed before us, I take the view that the Madh. Bharat Abolition of Jagirs Act, 1951, with the exception of the provisions contained in S. 4(1)(g) and sub-cl. (iv) and (v) of cl. 4 of Sch. I is valid. The excepted provisions are, in my opinion, unconstitutional and a writ of mandamus should be issued to the Madhya Bharat State Government not to give effect to the provisions contained in S. 4(1)(g) and sub-cl. (iv) and (v) of cl. 4 of Sch. I. In the circumstances of these petitions, I would make no order as to costs in any of them.

(77) Mr. Das learned Counsel for the petitioners has asked for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from our decision. In view of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Bihar Zamindari Cases, it cannot clearly be certified that these cases involve a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution. I would, however, having regard to the general importance of the questions raised in these petitions certify these cases as fit for appeal to the Supreme Court and grant leave to appeal to the petitioners, as well as to the State.

(78) CHATURVEDI J.: I have had the advantage of going through the draft judgment dictated by my learned brother Dixit. I agree that inasmuch as an estate is being acquired and the non-income fetching properties such as wells, tanks, ponds, water channels, open lands, unworked mines etc., are integral parts of an estate as defined in Art. 31A of the Constitution the observation of Mahajan J. in — 'Raja Suryapal Singh v. State of U. P.', 1952 S C J 446 (B) are fully applicable to the facts of this case and the contention of Shri P. R. Das that S. (1)(a) is invalid must be rejected. I also agree that the contentions of Sardar Jadhav in 'Civil Misc. Case No. 629 of 1951' have no force and should be rejected. On other questions, I have approached the subject on entirely different lines, and, I feel, I should give my reasons and conclusions in my own words. I also think that some of the observations of the Supreme Court in Bihar Appeals '(1952 S C J 454 (B))' if made applicable to the case of Jagirdars will require suitable modifications as the rights of the Zemindars are altogether different from those of the Jagirdars. During the course of arguments I could see considerable confusion at the Bar as to the exact rights and obligations of a Jagirdar. In my opinion the Jagirdari System as it developed in Central India is something different from that developed in other parts of former British India and the questions argued in this case require adjudication keeping in mind this difference. The material provisions of the impugned legislation as well as the provisions governing the Jagirs. in the Covenanted States of Madhya Bharat, in my opinion, cannot be fully understood independently of the historical evolution of different kinds of Jagirs in Central India. I, therefore, propose to give a very brief description of the evolution of Jagirs in Madhya Bharat and then discuss the various provisions of the Manual for Jagirdars to show that exact nature and rights of the Jagirdars at the formation of Madhya Bharat State. I would then discuss the development since 1948, and would also briefly refer to the legislation coming in its wake that affected the interests of Jagirdars. It is in the light of these facts that I think it proper to consider the two main contentions raised on behalf of the petitioners.

(79) The Jagirdari system had its origin in the military-cum-political contracts, or what could be regarded as such, within whose scope a large part of North and Central India during the Mohammadan period had been brought. The Moghuls apportioned their territory into Khalsa and Jagir lands. The former was divided into charges and managed by State officials. The rest was divided out into blocks or estates which were made over to military commanders or courtiers who took the revenues for their own support, or that of a military force which they were bound to maintain. At first Jagirs were granted only for life time (Baden Power: Land Systems in British India, Vol. I, page 257) and, only by the Emperor, or, on the recommendation of the Governors of the most important of the distant provinces, as Kabul, Bengal and the Dakhan. In the times of the decline, however, all sorts of local governors granted them, the precautions and rules fell into abeyance, and the grant became hereditary (ibid, page 530). In its inception causes were at work which were trying military service to the tenure of the land and so the Jagir grants were connected with military or State service of some kind. Jagir is a Persian word (from 'Jai' — place, and Gir — holder) meaning an assignment of the land revenue of a territory to a chief or noble to support troops, etc. (ibid page 189). There were other grants which involved the remission of the revenue and in time came to constitute actual estates in land. One such revenue — free grant was called 'altamgha', i.e., grant by the royal seal or stamp (tamgha). The grant of the Dewani to the East India Company was an 'altamgha' (ibid page 530). The system of assigning the revenues of a tract as a reward for good service, or for the support of troops was continued by the Marathas and also by the British. The Mahratta leaders granted Jagirs in Central India to their warriors in the Camps, to cadet members of the chief's families for their support and maintenance, to temples (Devasthanis), or, to sacred institutions (Dharmadaya), and to several Rajput Chiefs who had helped them and whom they recognised as their Jagirdars.

Several independent small Rajput Chiefs who had fought against them and who had been defeated & driven from their possessions found refuge in the hills and jungles and avenged themselves by levying contributions from the detached villages which had been usurped by the stronger powers. The larger States were compelled to purchase immunity from their raids by paying them blackmail money, known as Girasia. The districts in Malwa and in Central India were in so disorganised a state as to be unsafe even for troops to pass through. There were few places that were not subject to murderous 'forays', & few in which the cultivator could safely ply his peaceful calling. All parties at this time solicited the interference of the British Government, and, as it afforded them an opportunity of breaking the continuity of the Mahratta powers, Sir John Malcom, on their behalf, intervened and induced the petty chiefs to desist from the predatory incursions, by asking their superiors to grant them lands under the British guarantee or by guaranteeing to them payments equivalent to the Girasia which they levied. The various engagements were concluded in 1818 and the degree of interference exercised by the British Government in the affairs of the guaranteed estates varied with the nature of the engagements concluded (Aitchison: Treaties, Engagements and Sanads; Vol. IV pages 5 to 7). A hundred years later, the larger states desired that these "guaranteed estates" be handed over to them and as it was proving a matter of much difficulty to the British to manage them they were entrusted to the Suzerainty of their overlords. These Jagirdars, known as "guaranteed Estate-holders" always claimed semi-independent jurisdiction. In March 1921, for the first time, Suzerain rights of Gwalior Durbar were restored over 43 Guaranteed Estates and the announcement was made by the Viceroy at a Darbar held at Delhi on 14th March. The Gwalior Darbar thereafter granted new perpetual Sanads to these 43 holders. I shall deal with this matter later in connection with certain contentions advanced on behalf of the Guaranteed Estates.

(80) The granting of Jagirs had been going on since the Moghul Period and so in Gwalior and other States it was decided to scrutinise each and every Sanad. In case a defect was found in the Sanad the Jagir village was to be surveyed and assessed at the cost of the State and in supersession of the old Tanka (tribute), the amount of the new Tanka was to be fixed at 50 per cent of the Nikasi after setting apart 5 per cent. of the gross Nikasi for expenses on account of Patwari and Chowkidar. In case the old amount exceeded 50 per cent of the Nikasi it was to be reduced to that standard.

These Jagirs were termed as 'Jadid-Usul-Jagirs'. A new Sanad was to be given to the holders in new terms. The amount of Tanka was thus for the first time regularised in terms of land revenue. Formerly there was no rule regulating the Tanka and the amount varied from time to time depending upon political exigencies of the occasion. At least one thing was certain that it was not based upon any system of assessment and had no connection with the crop or with the average harvest price of a series of years and could not be called a "share in the produce". The contention of Shri P. R. Das that, in order to calculate 'net income' only 'tanka' should be deducted from the gross income of a Jagir thus loses its force. From the figures given at page 30 of the Report of the Rajasthan — Madhya Bharat Jagir Enquiry Committee it will be apparent that there are in all 1329 Jagirs in this State having 4,249 villages deriving an annual income of roughly rupees 74 Lakhs out of which the State receives nearly 12 Lakhs of rupees in the form of Tanka, a major portion of the income (nearly 62 Lakhs) remaining in the pockets of Jagirdars benefiting neither the State, nor the tillers of the soil. The Jagirdars contend that according to the terms of their Sanads the Jagirs are their property and they are not bound to spend any portion of their income towards the general welfare of the subjects.

(81) The terms of the earlier Sanads vary from place to place and from time to time. Generally the form is "these villages are given to you for maintenance of your family, from generation to generation". Some times a condition is imposed:

"you or your relation or any other shall not disturb the peace of the Fort and the Pergana. If somebody does mischief due compensation shall be taken and the Sarkar will confiscate the properties" (C. M. Case No. 619 of 1951);

or
"you will obey the order of the Sarkar, remaining in service. If you cause disturbance of peace in the territories of the Sarkar or of those of the East India Company your Jagir will be confiscated" (C. M. Case No. 4 of 1952);

or,
"you shall not create disturbances in the territories of the Sarkar, those of the Company or in those of other States. You shall not mix with them, nor shall give shelter to criminals of the Sarkar. You shall keep Chowkies in your territories and protect roads and be responsible for any damage that might occur." (C. M. Case No. 631 of 1951);

or,
"in all 14 villages yielding thirty thousand rupees as Nankar and cash payment for 100 horsemen (Cavalry) and 200 footmen (infantry) are hereby conferred. Enjoy the same as Nankar year to year plus cash for the expenses of the horsemen and footmen." (C. M. Case No. 3 of 1952)'.
(82) There is no invariable line of demarcation between one Sanad and another and sometimes a Sanad appears to be an extremely formless document. I have mentioned these things in order to show the complexity of the problem & to bring out the importance of the following two points that should be kept in mind:

(1) First, that the enforcement of obligations laid down in the sanads could have been dictated by conscience, or by political caprice, or by force of arms, but not by a positive vinculum juris;

(2) Secondly, it must be impossible to lay down general principles for payment of compensation to the Jagirdars which would not fail in several cases.

It was not till 1913 when the creative initiative of His late Highness Maharajah Madhav Rao Scindia of Gwalior State brought about rules and regulations for the governance of the Jagirs and reduced the Sanads to a more systematic and standard form. These rules and regulations received recognition from the Viceroy when he told the 43 guarantee-holders:

"In view of this settlement, Political officers will no longer concern themselves with your affairs, and you will in future look to your Suzerain, His Highness the Maharajah Scindia for the time being, and his Darbar in all matters connected with your estates and tankas. You will, therefore, henceforth be entitled to the rights and subject to the obligations contained in the Manual of Jagirdars of the Gwalior State, Sambat 1970, as in force for the time being" (Aitchison, Vol. 5, para 8, page 518).

The contention of the guarantee-holders that the guarantee of continuance of possession should be respected can be disposed on the short ground that political treaties of guarantee do not devolve upon successors, but become void through the extinction of the contracting parties (Oppenheim's International Law, vol. II, chapter XI, page 851; 7th Edn. 1948).

(83) In 1928, the Manual for Jagirdars was, with slight modifications, adopted by the Indore State and since then the Jagirs are being governed by the provisions of these two Manuals in Gwalior and Indore State. The Jagirdars of the Covenanting States other than Gwalior and Indore have not argued that the rules in their States differ in any fundamental manner from the two Manuals and so it will be proper to examine closely the provisions of the two Manuals only to know the exact nature of the rights and obligations of the Jagirdars.

(84) The first provision which attracted comments and lengthy and elaborate arguments is that the Jagir is an indivisible and impartible property, inalienable except under certain conditions, and that the rule of primogeniture has invariable application to it. On behalf of the petitioners, Shri P. R. Das and Shri Samvatsar have contended that there are Zemindaries which are impartible and which descend to a single member and that restriction on alienation can also be imposed on private Zamin-daries by statute. Obviously the Punjab Alienation of Land Act (Act 13 of 1900) was in view. It is true that, in the interest of agriculture and of agriculturists, statute has often imposed restrictions on alienation of land. In order to create a strong-rooted peasantry, in Germany, the Nazi legislation of 1933 had prohibited the alienation or division of farms of medium size. The land descended in toto to one heir and was put beyond the reach of creditors (Paton: A Text Book of Jurisprudence p. 388). So in several places primogeniture, or, in other ultimogeniture was designed to keep the estate of the deceased as a unit whereas division among all the children was considered as leading to difficulties in an agricultural community as the units of land become too small as subsistence. Then alienation of land may also be forbidden by religious scriptures or in the interest of family estate. In Hindu Dharma Shashtra the sale of land is not contemplated. Though a gift of land is extolled, yet the sale of family land is regarded as sacrilegious. Passages pointing to the inalienability and even to the impartibility of ancestral property may be found in the Smriti Chandrika chapter VII para 44. The inseparableness of the family lands from the family to which they belonged was a favourite notion, almost throughout antiquity, both with the populace and with philosophers.

"The difficulty placed in the way of alienation fostered the natural attachment to the soil they had tilled, which the Hindus shared with other races of men, and which still makes them, in general, greatly prefer a mortgage or lease with fine to a sale" (2 Bom. 299 at pages 328-329).

(85) A perusal of the two Jagirdari Manuals will, however, make it clear that the provision of inalienability and impartibility and of the rule of primogeniture in Jagirs had no other motive than a purely political one. In the preamble to both the Manuals it is provided that

"a Jagir is generally conferred as a reward for loyal and meritorious services and the Ruler (or the Government) has a direct interest in the preservation of Jagirs in their integrity and their continuance in their particular families on which they were conferred, and, that it is with that end in view that restrictive regulations against alienations are enforced — restrictions from which private property is generally immune."

As the Jagir was generally conferred on persons, whom we may call officers of State, landless men, and professional careerist in the service of the Ruler, the motive could not have been actuated by a desire to benefit the agriculturist class. As it will be seen hereafter that the Jagir was liable to be resumed and given to another person the motive for making it descend as an integral whole could not have been for safeguarding the family estate. It was always for the Ruler's advantage that he should have but one heir to deal with and one man whom he can hold responsible for production of armed warriors and for maintenance of order in the Jagir. Thus though inalienability, impartibility and rule of primogeniture may have been common to Jagirs and to big Zemindaris, yet their introduction must have been with different motives. Hence the principle enunciated in — 'Naraganti Achammagaru v. Venkatachalapati', 4 Mad 250 (I) and in — 'Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari', 10 All 272 (J) cited by Shri P. R. Das and the observations at page 635 of Mulla's Hindu Law (10th Edition) relied upon by Shri Samvatsar have no material bearing on the facts of the present case. In fact Jagir rights have never been governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law which governs the property of a Hindu in these parts. Even for adoption of a son by a Jagirdar, the Ruler's consent or permission was necessary. Of course there was nothing which prevented the Ruler to split up one Jagir into two or three Jagirs but that would not make it partible property. There have been several cases of splitting up; but that was always the Ruler's choice. Whenever a vassal became strong and showed signs of insubordination and the ruler was afraid of him, politically, it was to his advantage to split the Jagir amongst the sons of the last Jagirdar. This rule of prudence was acted upon in other countries also. It is said that the King at Paris would not have been sorry to see the great inheritance split amongst co-heirs (Pollock and Maitland: History of English Law, Book 2, page 265). The descent in the feudatory's or Jagirdar's family must be governed by the rules laid down by the Suzerain. This principle was also adopted in S. 8, Punjab Laws Act (Act IV of 1872) and also in Ss. 7 and 8, Punjab Jagirs Act 1941 (No. 5 of 1941). At least it was natural that the Suzerain who looked to one man for a unit of fighting power should refuse to recognise an arrangement which would split that duty into fractional parts; and it is not surprising that the two Manuals adopted the rule of primogeniture which had the great merit of simplicity.

(86) It has also to be borne in mind that before the British era, there was no difference between a Jagirdar and a Zemindar so far as their duties were concerned. Both were responsible for the defence of the territory and the maintenance of peace and tranquillity and with the general administration of the areas under them. The following passage from a judgment of the Privy Council is significant:

"It appears that the Zemindars were entrusted, previously to the British possession of India, as well with the defence of the territory against foreign enemies, as with the administration of law and the maintenance of peace and order within their district; that for this purpose they were accustomed to employ not only armed retainers to guard against hostile inroads, but also a large force of Tannahdars or a general police, and other officers in great numbers, under the name of Chowkidars, Pykes, and other descriptions, as well for the maintenance of order in particular villages and districts as for the protection of the property of the Zemindars, the collection of his revenue, and other services personal to the Zemindar. All these different officers were at that time the servants of the Zemindar, appointed by him and removable by him and they were remunerated in many cases by the enjoyment of land rent free or at a low rent in consideration of their services." (Joykishen Mookerjee v. Collector of East Burdwan, 10 Moo Ind App 16 at pages 40-41 (K)).

(87) After the British conquest the "Tannahdary" lands were made resumable by the Government which took upon itself the maintenance of the general Police force and relieved the Zemindar from that expense (section 8(4) Bengal Regulation 1 of 1793). The Zemindar, in 1743, was a Government servant '(page 207 of 6 W R)' and had lands for certain political and governmental purpose but subsequently he lost the political functions along with the lands, thereafter remaining a mere intermediary. The family usage of inalienability, impartibility of estates and the rule of primogeniture which presumably had been introduced for political reasons previously however continued to remain with the new purpose of safeguarding family estate. Historically it may be interesting to note that in other countries also (e.g. in England) family functions of land had commenced only after the decay of its political functions. The big and old Zemindars, where the rule of primogeniture was in vogue and which by custom were impartible and inalienable, represented the function of land on the basis of family organisation while Jagirs in Madhya Bharat are still the symbol of the political function of land. In order to make my meaning clear and to bring the distinction most forcefully, I think it proper to quote an extract from page 275 of Dr. Julius Stone's "The Province and Function of Law" (1946 Edition) where dealing with "Real Property and Commercial Law" the learned author observes:

"The idea of a man's land as his absolute property, like his watch, is only the latest of three ideas which have successively moulded the land law. In essence, it had begun in the feudal period as an aspect of government service being provided to the King in return for tenure of land, which was thus not property in the modern commercial sense. The three centuries prior to the Statute of Tenures, 1660, saw a transition of the land law to suit a new function of land as a basis of family stability and organisation. From about 1660 to 1883, the land law had been moulded to its new function, on the basis of the system of estates, by the Court of Chancery's invention of the trust and the complex of devices known as the family settlement. This transformation of the nature of land had taken place by devious fiction-ridden procedures, only occasionally aided by statutes to clear away the debris. Most of the debris remained, & a major problem crying out for attention in Bentham's time was the expurgation from the law of the fictions and anomalies used by ingenious lawyers to kill the political idea of land, and realise the family idea. This purging process was only to begin with the Report of the Real Property Commissioners in 1828 and the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, and was only virtually completed in England by the property legislation of 1922-25. But this was only a part of the urgent need for reform. The family idea of the function of land was itself out of tune with the developing needs of Bentham's age. The industrial revolution brought to the fore the role of land as a commodity, marked by the retreat of family estates before factory sites, and the rise of the industrial middle class, for whom land was worth its market value, no more, no less."

Again at page 532 the learned author writes:

"The law of feudal tenures dominated medieval English Law; behind it stood, however, not merely claims of substance in the modern sense, but claims for the efficient conduct of governmental institutions. Feudal landed property was in part governmental in function. It was with the decay of tenures and growth of equitable interests in land that the property aspect became dominant. Even then, however, the individual claims of substance were closely allied in their pressure with claims to the stability of the family and the general social structure. It was around the "family settlement" in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries that legal change was concentrated and that the elaborate apparatus of life estates, legal and equitable contingent remainders, executory interests, rule of remoteness and limitations were clustered, gradually with the sporadic aid of statute moulding the land law from the governmental to its familial function..... It was not until the reforms of the nineteenth century that individual claims of substance came to dominate the scene, as land became a vital element in the system of capitalist production and investment."

(88) Though I would not like to pursue the analogy further still it may be observed that from all that has been said above it would appear that like the feudal lord's right one can regard a Jagirdar's rights as bearing a political rather than a proprietary character. At any rate there is a gulf of difference between his rights and the rights of a Zemindar, who had paid valuable consideration for his Zemindari. The unfathomable chasm between the rights of the two will be manifest when other provisions of the two Manuals are considered.

(89) The question relating to succession and adoption in a Zemindar's family could be determined by a Court of law but chapter 22 of the two Manuals clearly laid down that "questions regarding adoption, succession and maintenance shall be outside the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. Such questions shall be decided departmentally."

Every Jagirdar, in addition to the duties and obligations specified in his Sanad was bound to render any service demanded of him by the Darbar or the Government (S. 117, Gwalior Manual, and S. 120, Indore Manual). A Jagirdar before going to a foreign territory (for longer than one month) — and a foreign territory included at that time even British India and other Indian States — was to apply for leave to the Muntazim Jagirdaran in Gwalior State and to the Government in Indore State stating the place where he intended to go and the period for which leave was required. If he was to leave for a period less than one month no permission was required in Gwalior State; but before his departure he was bound to communicate his address to Muntazim Jagirdaran. In Indore State he was to apply for leave to the Collector of his District (S. 100, Gwalior Manual, and S. 105, Indore Manual). If Jagirdars even moved in their state territory and were to be absent for more than a month from their Jagir timely information of the same was to be given to the Inam Commissioner in Indore State and Muntazim Jagirdaran in Gwalior State (S. 122, Indore Manual, and S. 119, Gwalior Manual). They were also required to send the report of births and deaths and marriages in their houses to Muntazim Jagirdaran of the Gwalior State and Inam Commissioner of the Indore State (S. 120, Gwalior Manual, and S. 123 Indore Manual). Chapter 18 of the two Manuals gave the Jagirdars a privileged position so far as their trial for offences was concerned. They were also in a privileged position in cases of execution of decrees against the Jagir or the Jagirdar.

(90) The most important provision, however, was contained in S. 45 in the Gwalior State Manual and S. 48 in the Indore State Manual which laid down that

"the Jagirs whose holders may be found guilty of disloyalty or criminal offence or disobedience to Darbar's Law and Orders, or are notorious for profligacy and extravagance or, who keep the State dues in arrears from wanton neglect or contumacy shall be resumed subject to the following rule:

"In case of disloyalty towards the Darbar or the British Government, or in case of heinous offence or offences in respect of coinage or stamps the Jagirdars will be permanently deprived of their status and estate. In the remaining cases, the holders for the time being will be suspended from powers over the estate for a longer or shorter period or will be set aside altogether in favour of any one having the right to succeed, under chapters 2 and 3, according to the degree of the delinquency or dereliction committed."

It was further made clear that holdings of persons answering to this description which had been resumed in the past would remain so, as no consideration of their cases are possible. Section 87, Dhar State Land and Tenancy Act, 1940, is also to the same effect. Resumption of Jagirs had often been ordered and many cases can be cited from the Gwalior Administration Reports which are authorised Government publications. Two examples may be sufficient in this respect. At page 157 of the Administration Report of Gwalior State, 1940-41, we read:

"Nine estates were ordered to be taken under the direct management of the Court of Wards during the year under report. Two of them M and K were taken under direct management on account of oppressive behaviour of the Jagirdars towards the Jagir ryots and wilful disobedience of orders on their part. In the case of M the Jagirdar behaved so badly with the Jagir ryots that the Durbar were obliged to depose him permanently and forbid his entry into the estate." (I have omitted the full names purposely).

Then at page 223 of the Administration Report of Gwalior State for the year 1945-46 it is mentioned that "Thakur D. S. D. who was deposed and removed from his Jagir in 1937 for ten years was re-instated and permitted to use the title of Raja and enter the Jagir territories."

Some other instances have been mentioned by the Revenue Secretary in his affidavit and I need hardly observe that the provision about resumption of Jagir in the Manual was not an empty threat.

(91) Then provisions were laid down in the two Manuals for investing the Jagirdars with Revenue and Judicial powers. In Revenue matters a Jagirdar could be invested with the power even of a Collector for his Jagir. In civil matters a Jagirdar could be invested with the powers of a Magistrate, Sub-Judge, or even District Judge; and in Criminal matters he could be a Magistrate of any class or even a District Magistrate for his Jagir. Subject to certain conditions the Jagirdar could also delegate these powers either in whole or in part to his Kamasder, Kamdar, or Manager, who was expected to be qualified for the discharge of those duties (chapters XII and XIV of the two Manuals). There is no provision in the Manuals for police powers, but it is a fact that in Gwalior State several big Jagirdars had been invested with Police powers and subject to certain conditions could recruit their own police force. It was contended that in the Covenanted States other than Gwalior, Jagirdars were not invested with Revenue, Judicial or Police powers. It does not appear to be true; for, two petitioners have admitted before us that they had been exercising these powers till 1948. In 'C. M. Case No. 112 of 1951' an affidavit has been sworn by Maharaj Anand Pal Singh of former Ratlam State, para 8 of which runs as follows:

"I did not enjoy Police powers. I enjoyed Judicial powers. I was vested with the powers of Second Class Magistrate. I also enjoyed all Revenue powers. But no extra expenditure was incurred in exercise of these powers. It was a privilege conferred on me and yielded a small income of about Rs. 2500/- (twenty five hundred) per year in the shape of Nazrana."

In 'C. M. Case No. 110 of 1951', paras. 9 and 10 of an affidavit sworn by Thakur Jaswant Singh, Jagirdar of Bidwal, Dhar State run as follows:

"I enjoyed certain judicial and police powers till 1948, but had to incur no extra expenditure in the exercise of these powers. On the contrary there was income about Rs. 2000/- from stamps, Rs. 1000/- from fines, Rs. 1000/- from Lawaris and Rs. 1000/- from cattle pounds."

"I enjoyed all Revenue powers in respect of my villages till the year 1948. In the exercise of Revenue powers I incurred no expenditure. But on the contrary there was an income of Rs. 2000/- in the shape of Nazrana."

So there was an income of Rs. 7,000/- (seven thousand rupees) per year in this Jagir. It is difficult to say whether the temptation to increase the income of the Jagir had not gone so far as to make it an engine for oppression.

(92) The question that now arises is: whether the Jagirdars had acquired any proprietary right in the soil by long possession of their estates? A similar question had confronted the British after their conquest of the Punjab. A large number of Jagirs were handed down to them by the Sikh Rule; some of them had been created by it, and others represented the remains of the chiefships and dignities of that Government. The British told the Jagirdars that they did not require service from them as a condition of tenure; in some cases where such a condition was distinctly existent when the Jagirs came up for confirmation, the British commuted it for a small money payment in reduction of the Jagir allowances. In the settlement arrangements, the original landholding communities or individuals were settled with and retained full proprietary rights. The Jagirdar was made a mere assignee of the revenue, taking part of what would otherwise go to the State. (Baden Powell: Land Systems of British India, Vol. 2, pages 699 and 701). Many rules had been framed in this connection and a great body of orders and circulars on the point were collected in the Financial Commissioner's Consolidated Circular No. 37. This Circular accepted the fact, and this is important, that the assignee's interests may have come to be something different from that of a mere assignee of Government revenue, and may have grown into more or less complete proprietary or sub-proprietary status.

"The grantee may have resided on the land and directly acquired fields; he may have made gardens, erected buildings and tombs, may have sunk wells, or made other improvements. He may be able to show particular facts which connect him with the land and which entitle him to be called proprietor in some sense or to some degree". (ibid page 700).

This will, of course, be a question of fact to be decided by competent authorities, but it appears to me that this principle has been properly considered by the Madhya Bharat State in the impugned legislation and the Jagirdar has been acknowledged as proprietor of Khud Kasht lands, of open enclosures used for agricultural or domestic purposes which had been in continuous possession for twelve years, of all open house-sites purchased for valuable consideration, of all private buildings and places of worships and wells situated in, and, of trees standing on, such lands—if these are within the limits of a village-site. In addition, all groves wherever situate, all tanks, trees, private wells and buildings in occupied land belonging to or held by the Jagirdar are recognised to be the property of the Jagirdar (S. 5).

(93) As regards the estates themselves the Jagirdars claim to be the owners. I have already discussed the various sections of the Manual of the two States to ascertain their true position; and there is no escape from the conclusion that the Jagirdars were only feudatories or vassals of the Rulers, holding, free of revenue, an assignment from them, consisting of one or more whole villages, enjoying temporarily certain proprietary rights over them; occupying office and entrusted with certain administrative duties subject to such orders of their Suzerain as may be received from time to time. The learned Advocate General urged that this was definitely a feudal order; & there is no doubt that several authors dealing with Indian States have used this term. The Viceroy in his announcement of March 1921 also used the term 'feudatories' for the Jagirdars. Even in the comments of Sir Charles Aitchison upon the treaties this phrase has been used at many places. Even a small state like Dhar claimed to have "twenty-two feudatories" (Dhar State Administration Report, 1941-42, page 2, para 6). After a lengthy discussion of the subject Tupper had come to the conclusions that it was 'inchoate feudalism' in India and that there was "no general system which can properly be termed feudal in the European sense of the word" (Our Indian Protectorate, page 246; and Lee Warner: The Protected Princes of India, pages 376-377).

(94) I feel reluctant to use the term 'feudal order' for several reasons. Institutions, tenures, Government and laws which developed during the feudal period were so widely different from those which developed here in the Covenanted States of Madhya Bharat that we may embarrass ourselves if we make use of arguments drawn from one system for the purpose of inferences as to the other. The word 'feudalism' is extremely vague and represents a very large piece of world history of every century from the eighth or ninth to the fourteenth or fifteenth, the ideal or the principles governing it not remaining the same from place to place and from century to century. "Feudalism is an unfortunate word" observe the authors.

"In the first place, it draws our attention to but one element in a complex state of society and that element is not the most distinctive; it draws our attention only to the prevalence of dependent and derivative land tenure. This however, may well exist in an age which cannot be called feudal in any tolerable sense. What is characteristic of the feudal period is not the relationship between lender and hirer, or lender and borrower of land, but the relationship between lord and vassal or rather it is the union of those two relationships. Were we free to invent new terms, we might find 'feudo-vassalism' more serviceable than feudalism." (Pullock and Maitland: History of English Law, Book I, chapter III, Second Edition, pages 66-67).

The second reason is that even feudalism, as it was developed in English Law and as we understand it now, was founded upon the notion of contract and not of command (C. H. Allen: Law In the Making, page 10). The vassal and the lord both had clearly definite rights and obligations and the fief could not be resumed unless the act of the vassal came within the four corners of the principles laid down by common law regulating their relations. In India, on the other hand, there was no living sense of the reciprocal services and relations of overlord, lord, and vassal, and, as Lee Warner points out, no constitutional germs emerged from the Indian system which was maintained by force of arms (Protected Princes of India, page 377).

In the Covenanted States of Madhya Bharat, a Jagir could be resumed if there was any disobedience to any order of the Ruler or if the vassal was found to be extravagant. Whether it was merely a suspected case or a proved case was a question of fact to be decided by the Ruler and there could be no appeal from his decision. It was his order that had to be complied with and the system seems to have been based not on the notion of contract but on that of command. The affidavit of the Revenue Secretary giving several instances of recent resumption of Jagirs in Gwalior State is clear on the point. The Jagirdar's property and office and, in fact, his fate, depended upon the Ruler's pleasure. If he was pleased, the Jagirdar could be invested with Judicial, Revenue and Police powers and even become a Minister. If the Ruler was displeased it was difficult for the Jagirdar to retain his Jagir in peace. We, therefore, see that the relics of feudalism along with the distinction between Sovereignty and Suzerainty had been fading out and the Ruler's authority had become paramount. It follows that in the Jagirdari system in the Covenanted States of Madhya Bharat every thing had been organised on a system of perpetual political tutelage. The system derived its life from above, and, its vitality depended not on the roots in the native soil but on the benevolence of a distant despotism and most of the Jagirdars had to depend on political or royal caprice. The Court of an all powerful Suzerain under these circumstances would appear to be more attractive than district life, and though there must be one or two notable exceptions, yet ordinarily the absentee Jagirdar's only interest in his Jagir would remain in the hard-wrung remittances from his Kamdar or manager. The condition of the peasantry can well be realised when we find that a big Jagirdar with his influence at the Court had the power to issue coercive processes for the realisation of the arrears of land revenue from the tenants and he had his own Tehsildars, Kanoongos, Patwaris, Sub Inspectors and Magistrates. In this respect, the Jagirdari system in Madhya Bharat altogether differed from the system prevailing in the Punjab or other States (see S. 5, Punjab Jagirs Act, No. V of 1941). In fact, in the Covenanted States of Madhya Bharat, Jagir remained a political institution till 1948 and the Jagirdars were administrative functionaries, the bigger ones remaining as part and parcel of the Ruling class.

(95) It was this system that continued to exist till 1948, when the bloodless revolution, the most radical in the history of our country, swept the sub-continent. The Rulers of Covenanting States in Madhya Bharat read the writing on the wall and gave their consent to the formation of a single union comprising of 22 States in May 1948. It is difficult to ignore the evolutionary crisis and the transformation that took place immediately after it. The rapid process of integration and democratization that came in its wake changed the map of the former Indian States in Madhya Bharat. With the loss of the powers of the Rulers the Jagirdari system received a severe set back and fell in a heap as ivy does from the uprooted tree that so long gave its support. It was now left as a form without a foundation, and with the onslaught of democratic movement, the whole thing stood discredited and constituted an anachronism. After the formation of the Congress Ministry in the former Gwalior State in Jan. 1948 the Government supported the popular view that the existence of quasi-independent administrative and judicial powers in the hands of jagirdars constituting an "imperium in imperio" must be done away with immediately. On May 24th the Gwalior State Ordinance No. 18 of 1948, was promulgated which deprived the Jagirdars of the judicial and revenue powers. After the coming into being of the State of Madhya Bharat, the Jagir Courts and Revenue Powers Abolition and Police Ordinance (Ordinance No. 19 of 1948) was promulgated on 6-11-1948 and it extended the provisions of the Gwalior Ordinance to the whole of Madhya Bharat. This was followed on 12-2-49 by an Act of the Legislature (Act No. 18 of 1949). All police stations and the Magistrates and Judge's Courts which were under the authority of a Jagirdar came directly under the State of Madhya Bharat. The power of Jagirdars to issue coercive processes for the realisation of arrears and revenue was also done away with.

(96) This was a prelude to several enactments affecting Jagirs which may briefly be referred to here. The Government on 29-1-1949 acquired power to take over the management of a jagir during abnormal times for the maintenance of peace and tranquillity by virtue of Jagir Areas Administrative Ordinance (No. 40 of 1948). On 6-11-48 the Jagir Land Records Management Ordinance (No. 21 of 1948) was promulgated which was on 7-5-1949 followed by an Act of the Legislature (Act No. 25 of 1949). The Patwaris of the jagir villages and the Revenue Officers of Jagir thus came under the jurisdiction of the State Government. On the same date Jagir Tenants Restoration of Land Act (Act No. 26 of 1949) came into force which, notwithstanding a decree for ejectment passed by a Jagir Court, conferred upon the Government and on the Revenue Board power to restore possession to a tenant who after 15-8-1947 had been unjustly dispossessed thereof by a Jagirdar. The Scheduled Areas Jagir Maintenance Ordinance was also passed which was on 28-7-1949 enacted as an Act of the Legislature (Act No. 1 of 1949), conferring on the Government the power of taking over the direct management of jagirs in Scheduled Areas. It was followed by the Jagir Forests (Prevention of Indiscriminate Cutting) Act (Act No. 55 of 1950), which tried to stop indiscriminately cutting of forests by the Jagirdar in their jagirs. In August 1949 the Government of India had constituted a Committee to examine and report on the Jagirs and land tenure system of Rajasthan and Madhya Bharat. The Committee submitted its report at the end of the year. Meanwhile on 30-11-1949 that is within a short period of passing of the Act (No. 18 of 1949) the Bill for Abolition of Jagirs was introduced in the Legislative Assembly of the State and it was entrusted to a Select Committee on 11-4-1950. The Select Committee's report was published on 15-10-1951, and eleven days after, the Bill was passed by the said Assembly. Then it was reserved by His Highness the Raj Pramukh for the President's assent which it received on 27-11-1951.

(97) I have referred to the various dates not only to show that the impugned legislation was hit by the provisions embodied in Arts. 31 (4) and 31A of the Constitution but also to show that the various enactments coming one after another in rapid succession must be viewed as parts of an organic whole. Through these enactments, the intention of the Legislature was made quite clear that it regarded the Jagir estates as properties not of the Jagirdars, but of the State. Though the Jagirdars were deprived of their powers, still there is nothing in these Acts which could show that these Acts impaired, in any way, the "vassalage" that, in my opinion, remained intact. The Suzerain sometimes invests the vassals with power and sometimes deprives them of it. So the legislation depriving the Jagirdars of their powers could not materially affect their position, though for all practical purposes, they were reduced to the position of assignees of revenue. The compensation to them on the basis of their position just on the formation of the Madhya Bharat State is to be seen in this light and it is against this background that we have to consider the two main contentions advanced on behalf of the petitioners.

(98) The first contention of Shri P. R. Das is that the impugned legislation is without a public purpose. In — 'AIR 1952 S C 252: 1952 SCJ 354' (B) the learned Chief Justice of India was of opinion that the objection based on the lack of a public purpose is barred under Art. 31 (4) of the Constitution. Justice S. R. Das concurred in this view and was of opinion that the existence of a public purpose as a condition precedent to the exercise of the power of compulsory acquisition being a provision of Art. 31 (2), an infringement of such a provision cannot, under Art. 31 (4), be put forward as a ground for questioning the validity of the Act. The contrary view was expressed by Mahajan J. who held that the barring provisions of Art. 31 (4) do not in any way touch the powers of the Court to see whether the acquisition has been made for public purpose. Justice Chandrasekhara Aiyer expressed the same opinion. Shri P. R. Das strenuously argued that Mukherjea J. had concurred in the conclusion arrived at by Mahajan J., but the following words of His Lordship's judgment are quite clear on the point:

"For my part I would be prepared to assume that Cl. (4) of Art. 31 relates to every thing that is provided for in Cl. (2) either in express terms or even impliedly and consequently the question of the existence of a public purpose does not come within the purview of our enquiry in the present case."

(99) From the above words it is apparent that His Lordship (Mukherjea J.) put his weight in favour of the view held by the Chief Justice of India; and the majority judgment of the Supreme Court, in my opinion, is to the effect that the validity of an Act cannot be questioned under Art. 31 (4) on the ground of lack of public purpose. If it be assumed that the question whether there is any public purpose or not is open to judicial scrutiny, even then it will be difficult to deny that the impugned legislation was inspired and dominated by a public purpose. In the words of Mahajan J.

"the legislature is the best judge of what is good for the community, by whose sufferance it comes into existence and it is not possible for the Court to say that there was no public purpose behind the acquisition contemplated by the impugned Statute" (at page 274 in AIR 1952 SC 252 (B).)

It, therefore, follows that the public policy of the State as it has found expression in a legislative enactment is entitled to weighty consideration and all reasonable doubts on the question are to be resolved in favour of a legislative declaration thereon (Corpus Juris, Vol. 50, page 361). So a decision of a Legislature is not to be reversed unless it is palpably and manifestly arbitrary and incorrect (ibid; footnote 88a). If the abolition of the intermediary between the State and the cultivator in the Khalsa area is for a public purpose as has been held in Bihar Appeals, surely the doing away with the political vassal and administrative functionary and an intermediary — all combined — in Jagir area, must be held to be for a public purpose. The integration between the two areas must be complete; for, how can there be two sets of rights for people living in areas within the same State? The Jagir system, being a creation of the Ruler and an appanage of his rule, the system could not have existed when the rulers had lost their power. I agree with the learned Advocate-General that the abolition of "imperium in imperio" and the abolition of the relics of the feudal order must be held to be for a public purpose. Then, if the demolition of an edifice is considered for a public purpose, can it be contended that the dismantling of the corner towers, the carved balconies, and balustrades of various designs, which either decorated or supported the edifice, is not for a public purpose? Keeping in view the historical background, the socio-economic trends of the present times, the recital in the preamble to the impugned legislation, and Chap. IV of the impugned Act, I have no doubt in my mind that from the whole tenor and intendment of the Act it can fairly be inferred that the amelioration of the peasantry living in jagir areas and the emancipation of this class of sub-human serfs from the medieval and archaic bondage which was non-conducive to the general interests of the community was the main purpose behind the impugned legislation, and, in my judgment, on this ground the first contention of Shri P. R. Das must be rejected.

(100) Next it was contended that the impugned Act is a fraud on the Constitution and therefore void. Mr. P. R. Das strenuously contended that the impugned Act pretended to make elaborate provisions for paying compensation but by shift and contrivance it has provided for the evasion of its payment. The learned counsel took us through various clauses of Ss. 4 and 5 of the Act and various sub-clauses of Cls. 2 and 4 of Sch. I and argued that the deductions from the gross income under sub-cl. (ii), (iii), (iv) and (v) of Cl. 4, Sch. I, are merely deductions of artificial character, the whole object being to inflate the deductions and thus bring about non-payment of compensation. The learned Advocate-General's main argument was first that the jagir was State property and that Jagirdars had no rights in the Jagirs and that they cannot claim as of right any compensation for the resumption of the jagirs. Secondly, he contended that the compensation has been paid and is not illusory, and, thirdly, that Art. 31 (4) of the Constitution is a complete answer to the contentions advanced by Shri P. R. Das and Shri Engineer.

(101) Now where there is admittedly a scheme of payment of compensation provided under various clauses of various sections it seems to be necessary to treat them together as part of an organic whole and to see how they interact. It will therefore be useful for reference to quote here various sections which are material for the purpose of this case:

(102) (After mentioning the relevant sections of the Act, the judgment proceeds as follows): It will be seen that a sliding scale for assessment of compensation has been laid down and the smaller and the poorer Jagirdar has been dealt with more liberally than the bigger and the wealthy Jagirdar. In Jagir with a basic income of Rs. 5000/- the total deduction that could be made would not exceed Rs. 500/-. In other words, he will get compensation seven times Rs. 4500/- or Rs. 31,500. On the other hand, a Jagirdar with a basic income of one lac will be hit hard but he too cannot get less than 7 x 50,000 or Rs. 3,50,000/-. A Jagirdar with a basic income of 4 lakhs cannot get less than fourteen lakhs. These figures of 31,500/-, 3,50,000 or Rs. 14,00,000 though inadequate or rather grossly inadequate to our sense of justice for persons who had been in possession of their Jagirs for several generations and who had been holding a very high status in society and the State, yet they can by no stretch of imagination be termed as illusory. Howsoever inequitable the compensation may appear to be this Court's hands are tied by the provisions of Art. 31 (4), and, I feel, we have no power to examine the contents of the Act on the question of quantum of compensation. If the quantum cannot be challenged, in my opinion, the process by which the quantum has been arrived at too cannot be challenged. The Supreme Court's judgment in Bihar Appeals has only taken note of a distinction between items reasonably related to real facts and items having no reasonable relation to the purpose in view, a distinction similar to that which is observed between a 'causa causans' and a 'causa sine qua non' (a remote cause and a proximate cause) in assessing damages. It is always a question of degree which is to be decided "according to the ordinary plain common sense of the business". In my opinion the judgment of the Supreme Court lays down that the item which has no reasonable relation to actual facts should not be considered in computing the quantum of compensation. If it is taken as a factor in computing it the deduction should be considered to be a mere contrivance to reduce the compensation so it will amount to a colourable or fraudulent exercise of legislative power if a fanciful sum is subtracted from the calculation of gross assets. In 'Bihar Appeals' 1952 S C J 354 (B) only two items were, on this basis, eliminated from consideration. The first was the "arrears of rent" due to the landlord for a period before the Zamindari was vested in Bihar State. It was held that such arrears could not vest in the State as a normal result of acquisition of any estate or interest therein, and that giving of 50 per cent. of these arrears was only a mere device or pretence to deprive a Zamindar of his money which was not a subject-matter of acquisition. Then the second item was the provision in sub-clause (f) of S. 23 of the Bihar Act 30 of 1950 laying down that 4 to 12½ per cent. of the gross assets would be deducted from the amount of compensation as representing "costs of works of benefit to the ryots". It was held to be invalid as it had also no reasonable relation to the purpose in view. In this connection again and again Shri P. R. Das drew the attention of this Court to the following observations of Chandrasekhara Aiyar J. in that case:

"The Act does not say that this charge represents the expenditure on works of benefit or improvements which the Zemindars and proprietors were under any legal obligation to carry out and which they failed to discharge."

(103) According to Shri P. R. Das there ought to be a legal obligation on the Jagirdars to carry out certain work of public utility (e.g., in relation to roads, schools and dispensaries) before a certain percentage could be deducted from the gross income.

(104) With very great respect, I feel that the above observations of His Lordship cannot be made applicable to the case of Jagirdars who could not have gone to a Court of law for the enforcement of their rights against the Suzerain. In India a Civil Court can entertain a suit about a Jagir only when a Deputy Commissioner or a Collector gives a certificate that a particular question can be determined by the Courts (see Ss. 4 and 6, Pensions Act, Act 23 of 1871). In the Covenanting States of Madhya Bharat, on the other hand, a Civil Court's jurisdiction was completely barred and a suit against the Suzerain was unthinkable. Considering that the relations of the Jagirdars with the Suzerain were political, there was no possibility of legal rights and legal obligations flowing from this relation. Whatever obligations there were could have been enforced only by the exercise of the Suzerain powers. So the observations of His Lordship Chandrasekhara Aiyar J. do not apply to the facts of this case. It, however, appears to me that His Lordship was using the term 'legal obligation' in a wide and very comprehensive sense and was not confining it merely to contractual obligations. In attempting a classification of "legal obligations" Salmond in his Jurisprudence (Art. 174, p. 473, Edn. 10) says that they are either (1) Contractual, or (2) delictal, or (3) quasi-contractual, or (iv) innominate. Explaining the last term, the learned author observes that:

"It is necessary to recognise a final and residuary class which may be termed as 'innominate' as having no comprehensive and distinctive title. Included in this class are the obligations of trustees towards the beneficiaries."

That the Jagirdars had an obligation towards the ryots admits of no doubt. But these obligations could have only been enforced by the Suzerain, not by the Courts of law. A very broad view is, however, to be taken of these obligations. At the time when the Sanads were drafted, or, when the Manuals were framed, nobody could have dreamt that compensation would have to be paid for resumption of Jagir lands and that such compensation would depend upon specific words by which an obligation for the welfare of the subjects could be created. At that time no Jagirdar could have gone to a Court of law against an order of resumption or could have claimed compensation from the Ruler. So there was no need for creating an obligation for the welfare of the subjects in specified terms. We should not therefore expect any clear-cut form for laying down obligations on a Jagirdar for the general welfare of the subjects. It is true that 'law' comes from the Ruler as the sole proper source of sovereign control; but it has to be borne in mind that at that time it used to come sometimes in the form of 'orders' and sometimes in the form of 'advice' to the Jagirdars. It is too well-known now that an 'advice' emanating from the political Suzerain gives the dependant no option and that it is meant to be accepted in its entirety. Such 'advices' are specially noticeable in the far-reaching formative work done by His Late Highness Maharaja Madhava Rao Scindia of Gwalior State during whose regime, in 1913, (Samvat 1970), the rules and principles for the governance of Jagir had been framed. In the last paragraph of the Preface to this Manual for Jagirdars His Late Highness observed:

"If an aristocracy is to be maintained and is to be worthy of the name, it must be at once an enlightened and a prosperous aristocracy for an impoverished or illiterate aristocracy is worse than useless. Hence the Suzerain must see that the dignitaries of his State maintain themselves in prosperity and 'at the same time enable their ryots to enjoy the same advantages of wise and beneficent management as are enjoyed by the direct subjects of the Suzerain power'."

(105) In para. 10 on p. 7 of the Durbar Policy Vol. 11, His late Highness succinctly stated the duties of the Jagirdars in the following words:

These words could well have been written by other Rulers also in other States on the obligation of a Jagirdar towards his subjects. The obligations there were not different from those in Gwalior State. We have only to see the actual intention behind the words. In my opinion the advice should be viewed not merely as a pious wish but as laying down a foundation for an altogether new and enlightened interpretation of all sanads (old and new). The Durbar Policy had in 1925 acquired the status of a Durbar Circular (see Gwalior Government Gazette Vol. 74 p. 1, dated 21-2-25). The laconic and often obscure terseness of the early Sanads has to be seen in the light of the changed surroundings. There being no necessity of military and political service, the Jagirdars were asked to devote their time and money towards the general welfare of their subjects. The progressive wants of society imposed new responsibilities on those who were charged with the administration. The cesses that were levied from holders of old grants were increased and money was utilised by the State for the welfare of the subjects. The old Sanads were scrutinised and whenever an opportunity offered itself the sanads were declared defective, the Tanka was revised and was raised to 50 per cent. of the village Nikasi after a survey of the village at the cost of the State (R. 42 of the Gwalior Manual). It was further declared that Road-cess, School-cess, Naksha-Navisi and all other cesses levied on the holders of the grants were to be included in the 'half assets' standard and were not to be realised over and above the 50 per cent. of the Nikasi. Besides paying the new Tanka at 50 per cent. basis the holder was also bound to render services in furtherance of works for the benefit of the public (S. 43 (A), Gwalior Manual).

What, then, does all this indicate? The intention of the ruling authority was nothing but that a large portion of the Nikasi should be spent on the welfare of the subjects. I need hardly observe that the views of Gwalior Durbar worked as a propelling force in other States as well. It is however stated on behalf of the old Jagirdars of Indore State that the principles on which the Gwalior Jagirdars were governed could not be made applicable to them. It appears to me that the Gwalior Ruler's opinion was sufficiently persistent to prevail in the end, when in 1928, the Indore State adopted, with some modification, the same rules and principles which had been governing Jagirs and Jagirdars in Gwalior State since 1913. Chapter 8 of Indore Manual deals with special Tenures for Jagirs resting on defective sanads or titles and lays down in R. III, S. 45 that in supersession of the old Tanka the 'half assets' rule would also apply there; and that if the old Tanka exceeded 50 per cent of the Jama, it would be reduced to that standard. The old sanad was then replaced by a new one in the form given in Appendix B. It meant clearly that the Indore State also adopted the principle that a Jagirdar should spend a portion of his income for the general welfare of his subjects. Since 1928 it is this Sanad that is regarded as the standard sanad and it clearly mentions in cl. (1) of "Terms and Conditions" that there are several cesses which are being levied from holders of old sanads. In the presence of this note I do not understand how it is said that old Jagirdars in Indore State were not paying cesses or had no obligation in this respect. The appointment of Patwaris and Chowkidars being made compulsory by the statute, one is entitled to ask the question: for what purposes these cesses were being levied? Every sanad for grant from Ruler thereafter reminded the grantee of his responsibility for the welfare of his subjects. The following paras from the prescribed form of a sanad at p. 45 of the Indore Manual for Jagirdars are important:

"(4) you should assist according to your capacity in the management and promotion of institutions of public utility; such as village Panchayats, schools etc. (5) you shall serve the State faithfully, shall keep the ryots pleased, and, by extending and developing cultivation, shall improve the village and maintain it in a prosperous condition."

A similar provision in Marathi in a sanad can be seen at p. 13 of the Hindi Gwalior Jagirdar Manual ... ..

(106) If we come to the conclusion from what I have stated above that all Jagirdars, old and new, were bound to spend some portion of their income for the general welfare of their subjects then, in my opinion, the State should have power to determine, in a general way, the capacity of a Jagirdar for spending money on this account or the extent to which a Jagirdar could be made liable on this account for the purpose of giving him compensation. The State should also have the power to split the obligation towards "the general welfare of the subject" (which is after all a vague term) into suitable Heads e.g. into those "for Education, Public Health and Roads" as has been done in the impugned legislation. A Ruler's doing or not doing anything for the Jagir subjects in this respect has nothing to do with the Jagirdar's liability. It, therefore, comes to this that if a Jagirdar had obligations towards the general welfare of the ryots, though these obligations could be enforced only by the exercise of the Suzerain powers yet they would have to be considered in computing the quantum of compensation. Then comes the element of precariousness in the position of Jagirdars. As stated above the sword of Damocles was always hanging on the head of a Jagirdar. Any displeasure of the Ruler was bound to make the Jagir liable to resumption and the Ruler's decision was not subject to challenge or judicial review. After the formation of Madhya Bharat State, the rights of the Rulers had devolved on the Madhya Bharat Government by virtue of Art. VI (a) of the Covenant. It is the element of precariousness that has also to be taken into consideration while awarding pecuniary compensation to a Jagirdar.

(107) The learned Advocate-General contends that a Jagirdar has no rights in the Jagir and has no property. I am clear in my mind that the Jagir lands including forests, quarries, mines, tanks etc. belong to the State and not to the Jagirdars. The Jagirdars could be regarded only as political vassals under the Suzerain in possession of the properties with a right to enjoy the income thereof, and, also as administrative functionaries responsible for the administration, and, their position was bound to vary with any change in the political set-up of the State. In my opinion, the Jagirdars were entitled to political pension or to compensation as commutation of pension. Whatever compensation on whatsoever basis may be paid to them by the Suzerain cannot be challenged by them as they have no right to demand any compensation. It has always to be borne in mind that the power which confers can always take away that which it has granted and the question of compensation does not arise at all. On this ground I should dismiss these petitions.

(108) There is however another side of the question which should also be considered. Article 31A of the Constitution, contemplates framing of laws by the State for the acquisition of any estate or of any rights therein; and, further lays down that the expression "estate" includes any Jagir, inam, muafi or other similar grant. The impugned legislation seems to have been prepared on this basis and lays down principles for awarding compensation. The word 'property' has not been defined anywhere in the Constitution; and, though I am not sure, still I am disposed to think that the Jagirdar may be said to have a right, as an occupant of a Jagir, to enjoy many kinds of income therefrom subject to certain restrictions and subject to certain obligations so long as his Jagir was not resumed according to the relevant provisions of the Manual of Jagirdars. It is the loss of this right that may give him a right to compensation. The word 'property' is an ambiguous term in law; for, its meaning varies according to the purpose in hand; and as Lord Porter observed at p. 1051 in (1940) AC 1014:

"The word property is not a term of art, but takes its meaning from the context and from its collocation in the document or Act of Parliament in which it is found and from the mischief with which that Act or document is intended to deal".

To-day many instances can be given which extend the term 'property' to cover whatever has a present or potential material value. In my opinion, the Jagirdar, in this sense, may be said to have 'property'; and this 'property' is to be acquired. This aspect of the question also merits consideration. The correct assessment of the value of that property which is subject to many obligations and restrictions and which has an element of precariousness involved in it must however present an extremely complicated and speculative problem. Under the provisions of our Constitution the law has however to abstract some principles to reduce the right to terms of money "not perhaps on grounds of pure logic but simply for practical reasons". If the State has abstracted some principles on the basis of experience gained in the Jagir Department of Gwalior State which had been dealing with more than 500 Jagirdars and where a high water-mark had been reached in Jagir administration, this Court must hold its hand and leave the principles as they are; for, the Legislature and the executive it controls had the necessary information, the knowledge, and the experience to judge what percentage should be deducted for what item. On this ground, I do not think it proper to embark on detailed and close enquiry into the provisions of various sub-clauses of the clauses of Sch. I. This Court cannot arrogate to itself the powers of an appellate Court in this respect. If the Legislature had merely laid down that the compensation to be paid to a Jagirdar would be three times the gross income surely we could not have set it aside as 'ultra vires' or as a fraud on the Constitution. We should, on the other hand, be satisfied that the Legislature in this case has not attempted to disguise or conceal the process by which the quantum of compensation has been arrived at. I will therefore be satisfied with general observations relating to the practice regarding various sub-clauses of Cl. 4 of Sch. I.

(109) Sub-clause (ii): It was argued on behalf of the petitioners that the percentage on account of expenses of collection of rent is too exorbitant. I do not think it merits any consideration. It is 7 per cent. for Jagirs with a gross income upto Rs. 2,000/- and 10 per cent. for above this amount. In Gwalior Qannon Ryotwari of Samvat 1974 the Patel was allowed one anna per rupee (or 6½ per cent.) on actual realisation of the rent (S. 22). The Gwalior Revenue Manual of Samvat 1990 (S. 212) allowed 10 per cent. as charges for collection of rent. In my opinion a reasonable percentage has been laid down in the impugned legislation which is the same as in Madhya Bharat Zamin-dari Abolition Act (Act 13 of 1951).

(110) Sub-clause (iii): The next item disputed is on account of land records and Chowkidari establishment on which 12½ p.c. is to be deducted. Shri P. R. Das urged that the two items are lumped up without any reason and 12½ per cent. has no relation to actual facts. In my opinion the village Watchman and the village Patwari are like the acid and the alkali combining to form the salt of village administration. It is difficult to conceive how a village can be managed in the absence of either of them. I can find no fault in 'lumping' them together. Apart from provisions of law, it was incumbent on a Jagirdar to engage a patwari and a chowkidar for discharging his obligations in regard to the Jagir village and for maintaining it. It is not in dispute that every Jagirdar in Gwalior, Indore and Dhar State was bound to maintain a Chowkidar (vide S. 140 of Gwalior Jagir Manual, S. 197 of Gwalior Police Manual, Ss. 129 and 130 of Land Revenue and Tenancy Act of Holkar State; Revenue Circular No. 26 of 2-2-1932 Holkar State and Ss. 167 and 168 of the Dhar State Land Revenue and Tenancy Act (Act 1 of 1940). It is however, urged that the Indore Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, 1931 and the Dhar Land Revenue Tenancy Act, 1940-1941 have been repealed by virtue of S. 2 (3) of Madhya Bharat Revenue Administrative and Ryotwari Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, Samvat 2007 (Act 66 of 1950) and that there is no provision in the new Act for Chowkidars. It is conceded that S. 139 of the said Act 66 of 1950 deals with the appointment of village servants but it is urged that no rules have been formed by the Government for appointment of village servants and therefore the Jagirdars now are not bound to pay the Chowkidars. In my opinion the contention is not well founded. A village watchman is a 'village servant' within the meaning of S. 139 of Act 66 of 1950 and the proviso to S. 2 saves all such Rules, Standing orders and Circulars as are not inconsistent with or contrary to any provision of the new Act until they are superseded or repealed by Rules made under the new Act. So the Rules framed for appointment of Chowkidars in Jagirs made under S. 135 of the Indore Act 1 of 1931 and under S. 173 of the Dhar Act 1 of 1940-41 are still in force.

(111) As the Jagir Manuals have not yet been repealed the Jagirdars of former Gwalior State could not raise this objection; but it was argued on their behalf that Chowkidari cess from tenants having been stopped with effect from 1-11-1951 (vide Vigyapti Revenue Department No. 72332/9B dated 24-11-1951, Madhya Bharat Government Gazette dated 1-12-1951) they are freed from their obligation in this respect. I need hardly observe that the Jagirdars were realising a number of cesses from their tenants and they had to be stopped by an order of the Raj Pramukh; but this in no way affects their liability towards the Chowkidars.

(112) As regards the Patwaris it was laid down in the Jagir Manuals that a Jagirdar had to engage passed and competent Patwaris (S. 62A of Gwalior Manual and proviso to S. 66 of Indore Manual). The Patwaris of Jagirs and Land records of those areas came under the jurisdiction of State Government by virtue of Ordinance 21 of 1948 which was followed by an Act 25 of 1949. It was laid down in Ordinance and the Act that the appointment of patwaris will be done by the Government and the cost in proportion to the income of the Jagirs to be determined by the Government shall be realised from the Jagirdars as arrears of Tanka. The experience of three years in managing the land records and Patwaris establishment in Jagirs by the State officials has to be given its due weight. It may also be mentioned here that under R. 3 of S. 42 of the Jagirdars Manual of Gwalior State, in Jadid-Usul Jagirs 5 per cent. on the gross Nikasi was to be left to the holder for expenses on account of Patwaris and Chowkidars. This amount was found to be insufficient and had to be raised to ten per cent. on 10-3-1945 by a Durbar Order (vide p. 960 of Gwalior Government Gazette 11-8-1945). In my opinion 12½ per cent. deduction on this account in 1951 cannot be challenged.

(113) 'Sub-clause (iv):' The third deduction is that of 15 per cent. of the gross-income, if it exceeds Rs. 2000/-, otherwise an amount equal to 10 per cent. in other cases, on account of Education, Public Health and Roads. This is in fact for "the general welfare of the ryots", the remarks on which made above in Paras. 28 and 29 will be relevant in this connection also. This deduction is based on the Gwalior practice. Under S. 98 of the Manual for Jagirdars of Gwalior State it was incumbent on all Jagirdars having an annual gross income exceeding Rs. 10,000/- and on those Jagirdars, having less income as the Darbar may specify, to submit an Annual Report in the form given in Appendix C to the Darbar every year in September. According to Chap. VI of Appendix C (see p. 73 of the Manual) information was required in the prescribed form on the following points:

32. Small pox. Vaccination arrangements.
33. Number of Schools and students reading in them.
34. Hospital or Dispensary
35. Sanitation.

(114) It was laid down in Darbar Policy Vol. IV, (p. 68, para. 19) that it is not compulsory for the Jagirdars that each one of them should have a separate hospital in his Jagir

"for it depends upon the financial condition of his estate whether he can afford to have one or not, but where the circumstances allow, one should certainly be opened and where the Jagir has not means to do so, it should join its neighbours in maintaining a travelling dispensary."

(115) As regards Schools, it was laid down in R. 2, Chap. IV of the Education Manual of Gwalior State that in Jagirs having gross income of Rs. 50,000/- or more, no school would be opened by the State. They were to be provided with qualified staff by the State if so desired by the Jagirdars who had to pay the salary of such teachers. In other Jagirs, the Jagirdars had to construct the school buildings at their own costs. If the number of students exceeded 100 then the addition and extension was to be done by the State. If the Jagirs paid school cess then the Education Department would provide teachers for Schools and would pay their salaries and contingent expenses. If however the Jagirs maintained their own schools then it was laid down that they would be entitled to remission of School Cess.

(116) Then, the Road Cess was also being levied on the Jagirdars and with the concurrence of the Government of India it was recovered from the guaranteed Estates as well. The order of Gwalior Darbar dated 5-10-1942 (re. repairs of Neori-Bhonrasa Road in File No. 123/32 of 1997 Department Muntazim Jagirdaran Gwalior State) to recover the outstanding amount of the Road Cess from Sardar Angre who had not paid Road cess for ten years is sufficient to show that the Jagirdars were always held liable for its payment. The policy was to encourage the Jagirdars in building roads in their area. If they built roads in Jagirs they were excused from payment of road cess. "In consideration of the Jagirdar Sahib of Pohri having built many roads in his Jagir and his doing other good work in the interest of the Jagir people he was excused from plying road cess in 1917-18" (Darbar Policy, Vol. IV, p. 27). A general order was issued in 1924 laying down that Jagirdars having a gross income above Rs. 5000/- would not have to pay Road and School Cess provided they constructed Roads and maintained Standard Schools, in their Jagirs (vide Gwalior Government Gazette dated 22-11-1924; Notification of Home Department, Jagir Section). By this Notification the cesses which the Jagirdars realised from their tenants were also stopped.

(117) In Civil Miscellaneous Case No. 1 of 1952 it is admitted by the Raja of Raghogarh that in 1924, during his minority, an Abwab (Road and School Cess) of Rs. 1208/- had been imposed on his estates. The Raja states that he had protested, but this is not material here. The practice of imposing Road-School Cess on the Jagirs in Gwalior State is very well proved. The new perpetual sanads given to the 43 guarantee-holders in 1924 also refer to these cesses in the following terms in Marathi:

"१ सडकाना, मदरसा, व इतर लाग जे गांवाचे उत्पन्नावर चालू कायद्याप्रमाणे लागू आहेत त्याचा आकार सदरहू नक्षांत दर्ज केला आहे तो तुम्ही नेमलेल्या मितोवर भरीत जावा."

(Road and School Cesses and other cesses which have been levied, according to the existing rules, on the income of the villages, and which have been specified in Naksha should be deposited within the specified period). (See the sanad of the Raja of Raghogarh)."

It will thus be seen that the Jagirdars in Gwalior State were considered liable to spend portion of their income for Education, Public Health and Roads.

(118) Considering the duty of the Jagirdars (in paras. 4 and 5 of Indore Form of Sanad quoted above) for assisting, according to capacity, in the management and promotion of the institutions of public utility, for maintaining the village in a prosperous condition and for improving it, in my opinion, according to the well-known rule of 'ejusdem generis', a Jagirdar in Indore State was also liable for expenditure in connection with Education, Public Health and Roads. Para 4 definitely says that a Jagirdar should "assist in promotion of institution of public utility (e.g. Village Panchayat, schools etc.)." Then he was to keep ryots pleased and to improve the village and maintain it in a prosperous condition. Unless there is sanitation and eradication of disease from the area where tenants and agriculturists reside and unless there are roads or good pathways to and from the village, it is difficult to conceive how it can be improved or how it could be maintained in a prosperous condition. The capacity of a Jagirdar to spend money for these improvements will, of course, be judged by the State while laying down principles for giving him compensation. It is however to be borne in mind that the State has only prepared a working basis of a general system for payment of compensation after establishing approximate uniformity in essentials. If all Sanads (or old Sanads of all Jagirdars) are to be closely scrutinised the result would be bewildering diversity of terms leading to confusion without serving any useful purpose. In my opinion, we should not allow divergences in Sanads to impair the symmetry of the main fabric. The Ruler's intentions about the duties of the Jagirdars had been expressed in new form of sanads which had been the basis of the administration in Jagirs in Holkar State since 1928. Whatever the State may be doing for the Jagir population can in no way affect the Jagirdar's liability for the welfare of his subjects. Sections 109 and 122 of Gwalior State Jagirdars Manual and Ss. 113 and 125 of the Holkar State Manual also lay down that the departmental chief will arrange, if the Jagirdars so desire, for technical advice being given in matters relating to Public Works, Land Records, and other matters in the interest of the Estate. If the Jagirdars had not felt their loyal duty for making general improvement in their estates these provisions would have been unnecessary.

(119) As I hold the deduction valid, it follows that the School buildings and the Dispensary buildings built by the Jagir money should belong to the Jagir villages (i.e., the State) and not be considered as private property of the Jagirdar. In this view I hold that cl. (g) of S. 4(1) of the Act is also valid.

(120) 'Sub-clause (v):' The last deduction is on account of Police, Revenue and Judicial powers. This affects only those Jagirdars who on 15-5-1948 exercised those powers. There is no provision in the two Manuals for investing a Jagirdar with Police powers. The only relevant provision was to be found in S. 191 of Gwalior State Police Manual of Samvat 1999 which has been repealed by the Police Ordinance (Ordinance 30 of 1948) promulgated on 13-11-1948. This Ordinance was followed on 12-5-1949 by the Police Act (Act 32 of 1949) which in its turn was repealed by the Madhya Bharat Police Act (Act 76 of 1950). The management and control of the Jagir Police passed under the Inspector-General of Police by virtue of Ordinance 19 of 1948 (Madhya Bharat Government Gazette dated 6-11-1948).

(121) Chapters 13, 14, 15, 16 and 21 of the Manual for Jagirdars of Gwalior State contained provisions for investing a Jagirdar with Judicial and Revenue powers. The Gwalior Ordinance No. 18 of Samvat 2004 promulgated on 24-5-1948 deprived the Jagirdars of their Judicial and Revenue powers and repealed the aforesaid chapters of the said Gwalior Manual. This had been followed by the Madhya Bharat Ordinance 19 of 1948 (Madhya Bharat Gazette dated 6-11-1948) and the Madhya Bharat Act 18 of 1949 (Madhya Bharat Government Gazette dated 12-2-1949). Both the Act and the Ordinance had repealed all the provisions in the laws of Covenanted States which related to the investing of Jagirdars with Police, Revenue and Judicial Powers.

(122) It is noteworthy that the provisions repealed do not state anything about the expenditure in connection with Revenue and Police powers. It is conceded that the practice was that the Jagirdars were bearing these charges. A Jagirdar in Gwalior State invested with Police powers had also to submit in his annual administration report an account of the number of Police force in the estate, arms in possession of the above Police force with details, and about expenses on account of the maintenance of the above force (see p. 72 of the Manual). That the Jagirdars were bearing expenses of Revenue and Police staff admits of no doubt. It is contended that the repealing statute should have clarified the matter as to whether the Jagirdars should continue to bear expenses even when they were deprived of their powers. In my opinion, whether the liability is imposed in the repealing statute or in the impugned legislation that should make no difference. As I stated above, the various enactments affecting Jagirs passed one after another in rapid succession from 1948 to 1951 should be viewed as component parts of the same machine; they should have little meaning if each is examined in isolation. It has to be borne in mind that the Jagirdars were permanently deprived of their Judicial, Revenue and Police powers only on 12-2-1949 by Act 18 of 1949. Within few months of the passing of this Act, the Bill for Abolition of Jagirs had been introduced in the State Legislative Assembly. It appears to me that the legislature had at that time made up its mind for resuming the Jagirs and it wanted to keep the liability of Jagirdars for the Police and Revenue powers subsisting only for the purpose of making deduction when laying down principles for payment of compensation to the Jagirdars. The same consideration would apply to the expenditure in connection with Judicial powers. The Jagirdars had lock-ups for prisoners & had to meet expenditure for under-trial prisoners. They had to submit the details of this expenditure in their Administrative Reports (p. 72 of the Gwalior Manual). Sections 66 and 67 of the Manual of Gwalior State do not state anything about this expenditure which the Jagirdars had been meeting from the income of their Jagirs. The presumption is that in laying down the percentage of deduction the State has duly taken into consideration the income, if any, the Jagirdars had been getting from the Judicial and Revenue work. It is not open to us to see whether the deduction is adequate or inadequate. It is difficult to appreciate the argument that the Jagirdars can spend this money for the sake of their 'prestige' but once they have been deprived of their powers they would not be prepared to undertake the expenditure and the liability. This smacks of dictating terms to Suzerain which cannot be allowed. The State has the right to tell the Jagirdars that it was due to their mismanagement that it had to incur expenditure in overhauling the entire system in the Jagir area and also in absorbing the Jagir employees in the service of the State and that the concerned Jagirdars would have to bear proportionate expenses. The intention of the Legislature is clear on this point. I need hardly repeat what

I had observed in the beginning (para 17 above) that the Jagiri system in Madhya Bharat was not based on the notion of contract, but on that of command. There is nothing in these deductions, in my opinion, which may be termed as unrelated to actual facts. I hold these deductions valid.

(123) 'Clause 2, sub-clause (c):' As regards calculation of gross income in cl. 2 Sch. I, it was contended on behalf of the Raja of Raghogarh '(C. M. Case No. 1 of 1952)' that gross income has been reduced deliberately by calculating the Forest Revenue in sub-cl. (c) on the basis of data regarding average yield for 20 years preceding the basic year. It was urged that the price of forest products has only recently gone up, and, that before the war it was very low, so it should be deemed to be a case for reducing artificially the figure of gross-income. It is no doubt true that in case of quarries (sub-cl. d), the average income of ten years is taken as the basis; and in case of forests, the average income of 20 years is taken for the purpose of calculating gross income. The figures speak for themselves; but the petitioner has to overcome the strong presumption which the decision of the Legislature in enacting the Jagir Forests (Prevention of Indiscriminate Cutting) Act (Act 55 of 1950) is calculated to raise against the Jagirdars. The presumption is that the Jagirdars in Madhya Bharat were bent upon frittering away the forest resources of their Jagir by indiscriminate and unplanned cutting of trees. It is possible that what was not done during last twenty years for conserving and developing the resources (S. 118, Gwalior Jagir Manual) was undone during the last two or three years in order to earn as much money as possible. The figures given on behalf of the Raja are to the effect that before 1940, the annual income from the products of his forest was only Rs. 15,299/- but this year it has reached Rs. 2,16,727. Instead of providing a rebuttal, the presumption is re-inforced by the figures, and in these circumstances, the contention must be rejected.

(124) This disposes of all contentions raised.

(125) The result is that, in my judgment, there is no force in any of the contentions and all the petitions must be dismissed. I order accordingly.

(126) I agree that leave to appeal to the Supreme Court be granted to the parties.

ORDER OF THE COURT

(127) BY COURT: The result is that the M. B. Abolition of Jagirs Act 28 of 1951 is declared to be valid except as regards S. 4(1) (g) and sub-cl. (iv) and (v) of cl. 4 of Sch. I which are declared to be illegal and inoperative. A writ of mandamus will issue to the State Government directing not to give effect to the provisions of the impugned Act stated above. Parties to bear their own costs. The order of ad interim injunction is vacated. Permission to file an appeal is granted to both the parties. A/D.R.R. Order accordingly.

Second Appeal No. 13 of 1951, D/- 3-10-1951.

Industrial Tax Rules (Indore) (1927), R. 3 (2) (IX) — Commission paid to Managing Agents — (Income-tax Act (1922), S. 10 (2)).

The Company had agreed to pay 16 p. c. on the net profits of the company to the Managing Agents. The amount of the commission was not to be less than Rs. 25000/- in each year. In the return for 1939 Rs. 27537 were shown as paid for commission. The Special Tax Commissioner did not allow Rs. 2537 on the ground that the commission on profits was not an item of expenditure incurred solely for earning the assessable profits within R. 3 (2) (ix) and there was Huzur Shree Shankar Order No. 173 of 29-6-1933 communicated by a Notification No. 13 of 14-7-1933. On appeal against the order of the Special Tax Commissioner:

Held that Huzur Shree Shankar Order No. 173 of 29-6-1933 was conclusive and hence the company was not entitled to deduct the sum of Rs. 2537 from taxable profits. (Paras 6 and 11)

JUDGMENT: This is a second appeal by the Rajkumar Mills Ltd., Indore against the order of the Special Tax Commissioner dated 30-11-1950 under the amended R. 13 of the Indore Industrial Tax Rules of 1927 (Vide Notification No. 562/VII A/49, published in the Madhya Bharat Government Gazette dated 31-12-1949). The only point raised in this appeal is that the Special Tax Commissioner was wrong in disallowing deduction from the assessable profits, a sum of Rs. 2537/- paid as commission to the managing agents out of profits.

(2) Mr. Samvatsar who appears for the appellant contends that the remuneration paid to the managing agents is an item of expenditure solely incurred for the purpose of earning profits and hence under R. 3, sub-r. (2) (IX) of the Indore Industrial Tax Rules of 1927 profits must be computed for the purposes of assessment of Industrial tax after deducting the amount of remuneration paid to the managing agents. Before proceeding to consider whether the above named sum of Rs. 2537/- paid to the managing agents should be deducted from the profits to be assessed to industrial tax, it is necessary to give a few relevant facts of the case.

(3) The Rajkumar Mills Ltd. was incorporated in 1922 under the Indore Companies Act of 1914. Industrial tax rules were promulgated in 1927. Under the rules return of income was submitted for the year 1939 after the general meeting. The total profit was shown as Rs. 1,44,573-0-0. The assessable profit was shown at Rs. 13,023-5-10 and a sum of Rs. 1220/- was paid as industrial tax. The assessment officer made final assessment on 19-7-1946 and showed Rs. 1,61,263/- as total profits. According to him assessable profits were Rs. 39,893 & demanded Rs. 3739-15-6 as industrial tax. An appeal was preferred to the Commerce Minister. During the pendency of the appeal the rules were amended and hence according to the new rules the appeal was transferred to a Special Tax Commissioner for decision. The Special Tax Commissioner allowed only Rs. 25,000/- out of Rs. 27,537/- paid as commission to the managing agents from the profits. But he refused to allow the deduction of Rs. 2537/-. Hence the Rajkumar Mills Ltd. have filed this appeal.

(4) By Articles of Association of the Rajkumar Mills Ltd., the company entered into an agreement with the firm of Sir Saroopchand Hukumchand and Co. and provided for the appointment of the said firm as the managing agents of the company on the terms contained in the agreement (vide Art. (4) of the Articles of Association of the Rajkumar Mills Ltd.). By the said agreement it was agreed between the company and firm of Sir Saroopchand Hukumchand and Company as follows:

"In consideration of the premises and as remuneration therefor and for the services to be performed by the said firm as such Managing Agents as aforesaid the company shall pay to the said firm the following allowance and commission that is to say:

(a) An allowance of Rs. 1000/- (One thousand) per mensem to commence from the registration of the company until the Mill of the company begins to work and thereafter of Rs. 1500/- (fifteen hundred) per mensem, as office allowance for supervision of, and attention to the Company's business, such allowance to be exclusive of all rents of the office of the company, and salaries, emoluments, and wages payable to the office staff and the clerks, servants and employees of the company, and all other expenses of the office establishment, all of which are to be paid by the company.

(b) A commission at the rate of sixteen per cent. on the net profits made by the company, such profits to be calculated after allowing for all the usual working charges, interest on loans and advances, repairs and outgoings, but without any deduction being made for expenditure on capital account or on account of any sum which may be set aside in each year out of the profits for reserve or any other fund or account, and it is hereby expressly agreed and declared that the amount of such commission payable to the said firm shall not be less than Rs. 25,000/- in each year, and that if in any year no such commission is earned or it falls short of Rs. 25,000/- the company will pay to the said firm a sum sufficient to make up the guaranteed minimum of Rs. 25,000/- on account of such commission.
&c. &c. &c.

(Vide Cl. (6) of the agreement).

(5) The said agreement also provided that it shall be lawful for the said firm to assign this agreement and the rights of the said firm thereunder and the whole or any portion of their remuneration as aforesaid, without thereby in any way affecting or prejudicing their appointment as such Managing Agents as aforesaid

(vide Cl. (19) of the agreement). Clause (23) of the agreement runs as follows:

"23. In the event of the company being wound up at any time for the purpose and with the object of transferring their business to another company, the company i.e. the said The Rajkumar Mills Ltd., shall make it one of the terms and stipulations of their agreement for the transfer of their property and business to such other company as aforesaid, that such other company shall appoint the said firm, of whatever member or members the same may, at the time of such sale and transfer as aforesaid, consist, to be managing agents of such new company, and with the like powers and authorities to the said firm, and on the same terms and conditions as to remuneration, emoluments, and otherwise as are herein contained, and it is hereby expressly agreed and declared that save and except with such conditions and stipulations as one of the terms of the sale and transfer thereof the company, i.e. The Rajkumar Mills Ltd., will not sell and transfer their business to any other company."

Clause (24) of the agreement reads as follows:

"In the event of the company being wound up at any time, either voluntarily or otherwise, with the object of entirely ceasing to carry on its business any longer, and not with the object of transferring its business to any other company, the said firm shall receive from the company or the liquidators thereof, as compensation for the loss of their employment as such managing agents as aforesaid a sum of money equivalent to five times the average annual commission earned by the said firm during the period of 6 years preceding the resolution or order, as the case may be, for the winding up of the company, if the company shall have so long existed, or ten times the average annual commission earned by the said firm during the year preceding such resolution or order, since the date on which the company was entitled to commence business, if the company shall be wound up within the said period of 6 years".

(6) The point for consideration in this case is whether the sum of Rs. 2537/- should be allowed to be deducted from the taxable profits or not. The sum of Rs. 25,000/- has already been allowed by the Special Tax Commissioner presumably on the ground that the payment of this sum is not dependent on the making of profits. Clause (6) of the agreement reproduced above clearly states that the company will pay to the managing agents the sum of Rs. 25,000/- whether it makes any profits or not. Taking this sum to be an item of expenditure incurred solely for the purposes of earning profits the Special Tax Commissioner deducted this amount in computing the profits for the assessment of industrial tax. The sum of Rs. 2537/- paid in excess of Rs. 25,000/- is clearly a share of profits earned by the company. It has, therefore, to be determined whether this share of profits paid as commission to the managing agents should be regarded as an expenditure incurred solely for the purposes of earning profits or not. In — 'Pondicherry Rly. Co. Ltd. v. Commr. of Income-tax, Madras', reported in AIR 1931 P C 165 (A) Lord Macmillan, who delivered the judgment made the following observations:

"The Pondicherry company is taken bound in the convention with the French Minister to 'make over' to the Colonial Government 'one half of the net profits' of the undertaking arrived at in the manner prescribed in the convention. It is claimed for the company that when it makes over to the Colonial Government their half of the net profits it is making an expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning its own profits. The Court below has unanimously negated this contention and in their Lordships' opinion has rightly done so. A payment out of profits and conditional on profits being earned cannot accurately be described as a payment made to earn profits. It assumes that profits have first come into existence. But profits on their coming into existence attract tax at that point and the revenue is not concerned with the subsequent application of the profits."

Rule 3, sub-r. (2) of the Indore Industrial Tax Rules corresponds with S. 10 (2), Indian Income Tax Act of 1922. Acting on the authority of this ruling the Cabinet of Indore State passed a resolution No. 1072 dated 28-8-1931 and ordered that the agent's commission on profits should not be allowed to be deducted from the assessable profits. (Vide Notification No. 1 dated 2nd/3rd February 1932, published in the Holkar Government Gazette dated 8-2-1932). It appears that Mill owner made a representation to His Highness the Maharaja of Indore. His Highness the Maharaja referred the matter to the High Court for opinion, and on receipt of the opinion of the High Court Notification No. 13 dated 14-7-1933 was issued by the Commerce and Industry Department. This Notification reads as follows:

"In continuation of this office Notification No. 1 dated 3-2-1932 it is hereby published for the information of the mills and factories concerned that on submission of the Prime Minister's (Legal Department) report No. 25 dated 11-5-1933 His Highness the Maharaja is pleased to order (Vide Huzur Shree Shankar Order No. 173 dated 29-6-1933) that the opinion of the Full Bench of the High Court being that the managing agent's commission on profits is not an item of expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning the said profit within the meaning of R. 3 (2) (IX) of the said Industrial Tax Rules and this being also the view of the Cabinet as expressed in their resolution No. 1072 dated 28-8-1931 the aforesaid cabinet resolution be given effect to and the industrial tax due on the amount of the managing agent's commission on profits be recovered with effect from the date of the said Cabinet resolution."

This Notification makes it abundantly clear that His Highness the Maharaja ordered that the industrial tax due on the amount of the managing agent's commission on profits be recovered. This being an order of the ruler, who enjoyed sovereign powers, that order is not open to challenge. This is a mandate emanating from a sovereign and as such has the force of law. This Court has, therefore, no power to go behind the order and enquire as to whether the managing agent's commission on profits is an item of expenditure solely incurred for the purpose of earning profits or not. In this view of the matter the point at issue is concluded by Huzur Shree Shankar Order No. 173 dated 29-6-1933.

(7) Conceding, however, for the sake of argument, and only for the sake of argument, the contention of Mr. Samvatsar, the learned counsel for the appellant, that Huzur Shree Shankar Order passed not in the exercise of the ruler's sovereign powers but as a head of the executive to give effect to the opinion of the High Court, which then had no power to decide any matter in respect of industrial tax, I proceed now to examine whether the amount of Rs. 2537/- paid out of the profits to the commission agents is an item of expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning profits or not. We have been referred in the course of argument to — AIR 1931 PC 165, (A); — 'Indian Radio & Cable Communications Co. Ltd. v. Commr. of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency and Aden', AIR 1937 PC 189 (B); — 'Tata Hydro-Electric Agencies Ltd., Bombay v. Commr. of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency and Aden', AIR 1937 P C 139 (C); — 'Commr. of Income-tax, Bombay v. Tata Sons Ltd.', AIR 1939 Bom 283 (D) and — 'Commr. of Income-tax v. Bombay Burma Trading Corporation Ltd.', AIR 1941 Rang 145 (SB) (E). I have already referred to AIR 1931 P C 165 (A). Lord Macmillan laid down in that case that a payment out of profits and conditional on profits being earned cannot accurately be described as a payment made to earn profits, and that the profits on their coming into existence attract tax at that point. This statement he explained in a later case reported in — 'Union Coal Storage Co. Ltd. v. Adamson', (1932) 16 Tax Cas 293 (F). In this case he observed as follows:

"I was dealing with a case in which obligation was first of all to ascertain the profits in a prescribed manner after providing for all outlays incurred in earning them and then to decide them."

In this explanation he makes it clear that an outlay incurred in earning the profits has to be deducted in computing profit for assessing tax. AIR 1937 P C 139 (C) is not applicable to this case. The question in that case was whether Tata Hydro-Electric Agencies Ltd. were entitled to deduct 25 per cent. of their commission payable to F. E. Dinshaw Ltd. and Richard Tilden Smith from their taxable income. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that Tata Hydro-Electric Agencies Ltd. being assignees of the rights and liability of Tata Sons Ltd. were not entitled to deduct the payment made to F. E. Dinshaw Ltd. and Richard Tilden Smith. They however stated that if the question had arisen in respect of Tata Sons Ltd., they would have been entitled to deduct their payment to F. E. Dinshaw Ltd. and Richard Tilden Smith as being expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning their profits. Tata Hydro-Electric Agencies Ltd., they observed, incurred an obligation to make payment in consideration of their acquisition of the right and opportunity to conduct the business. On this ground they disallowed the claim of Tata Hydro-Electric Agencies Ltd. This decision has no bearing on the present case. In 'AIR 1937 P C 189 (B)', the facts were as follows. Indian Radio Cable Communication Co. Ltd. entered into an agreement with the Imperial and International Communications Ltd. By the agreement both the businesses were to be combined and it was to be conducted by Indian Radio and Cable Co. Ltd. which was to pay one half of the net profits of the Radio Co., to the Imperial and International Communications Ltd. The question that came up for consideration was whether one half share of the net profits payable by the Indian Radio and Cable Co. Ltd., is a proper deduction to be allowed for the purpose of arriving at the amount on which Indian Radio and Cable Co. Ltd. should be assessed for the purposes of income-tax and super-tax within the meaning of S. 10(2) (IX). In the course of the judgment Lord Maugham made the following observations:

"Their Lordships have had the advantage of a learned argument on behalf of the appellants; but they have found themselves unable to come to a conclusion different from that of the High Court. It may be admitted that, as Mr. Lister contended it is not universally true to say that a payment the making of which is conditional on profits being earned cannot properly be described as an expenditure incurred for the purpose of earning such profits. The typical exception is that of a payment to a director or a manager of a commission on the profits of a company. It may, however, be worth pointing out that an apparent difficulty here is really caused by using the word 'profits' in more than one sense. If a Company having made an apparent net profit of £10,000 has then to pay £1,000/- to directors or managers as the contractual recompense for their services during the year, it is plain that the real profit is only £9,000. A contract to pay a commission at 10 per cent. on the net profits of the year must necessarily be held to mean on the net profits before the deduction of the commission, that is, in the case supposed, a commission on the £10,000/-."

Their Lordships further observed:

"The sum is in truth made payable as part of the consideration in respect of a number of different advantages which the appellants derive from the agreement and not all of them can be shown to be of a purely temporary character. The agreement as a whole is much more like one for a joint adventure for a term of years between the appellant company and the Communications Company than one for a lease for that period."

His Lordship also made the following observations:

"Their Lordships recognize the difficulty which may often exist in deciding whether expenditure not in the nature of capital expenditure has been incurred solely for the purpose of making or earning income, profits or gains and they agree that it may be impossible to formulate a test which will always suffice to discriminate between the expenditure which is and which is not allowable for the purpose of income-tax."

(8) Holding that the agreement was in the nature of a joint adventure for a term of year their Lordships disallowed the claim of the Indian Radio and Cable Communications Co. Ltd. to deduct the half share of the net profits from the taxable profits.

(9) Next case to which we have been referred is 'AIR 1939 Bom 283 (D)'. In this case the question for consideration was whether Tata Sons Ltd., were entitled to deduct the part of remuneration payable to Mr. Dinshaw from the taxable income. Beaumont C. J. held in that case that the agreement to share their commission with the lender was part of the terms on which they managed to obtain finance and in his opinion, therefore, in commercial sense the payment of this share of the commission was an expenditure solely for the purpose of earning profits or gains, viz., the remainder of the commission

(10) Next case cited at the bar is 'AIR 1941 Rang. 145 (E)'. The facts of this case are to some extent similar to the facts of the present case. A company known as the Burma Trading Company was formed to carry on & develop the business in Burma of one William Wallace. The agreement between Mr. Wallace and the Company was that Messrs. Wallace and Co., of Bombay should be secretaries, treasurers & managers of the company. The Company changed its name to the Bombay Burma Trading Corporation Ltd. Article 77 of the Memorandum of and Articles of Association was as follows:

"The remuneration of the secretaries, treasurers and managers for the time being shall be and consist of a commission of 5 per centum on the gross proceeds of the business of the company."

Later on it was changed as follows:

"The remuneration of the secretaries, treasurers and managers for the time being shall be a share of the net profits of the company during any official year, such net profits to be ascertained after deducting for depreciation, wear and tear of the moveable and immovable properties, leases, livestock and other assets of the company and after deducting also such sums as the directors may carry to the fire insurance fund, under-writing fund, fixed property fund and suspense account to meet contingent depreciations or losses, equal in amount to the aggregate of the sums applied in payment of dividends to the shareholders both ordinary and preferential and of the sum set aside to the general reserve fund in each year; provided always that the sum to be received by them as remuneration in any one year shall not exceed a sum calculated at 5 p.c. on the gross proceeds of the business of the company for that year."

The question that came up for consideration was whether under S. 10 of the Act the assignee corporation was entitled to claim a deduction from its profits and gains to the extent of Rs. 8,48,235/- paid by it to Messrs. Wallace and Company of Bombay as their remuneration. The Special Bench of the Rangoon High Court held that assessee corporation was entitled to claim a deduction from its profits to the extent of the remuneration paid to Messrs. Wallace and Company of Bombay. Roberts C. J. in his judgment made the following observations:

"It is unfortunate that Art. 77 uses the words 'net profits' because when one looks at the clause which states how they are to be ascertained, one finds that the outlay incurred annually (for the purpose of earning the profits) in remunerating the managing agents is omitted. Various deductions are made from the gross profits and the residue is called net; but it is still not the real net profit or taxable profit. One further deduction has yet to be made, and before this is done, the sum arrived at is only the net sum to be halved for the purpose of the deduction. If it is more than 5 per cent., of the gross proceeds, the latter amount is, by virtue of the agreement, to constitute the remuneration of Messrs. Wallace and Co. Once this deduction has been made the real net profits come into existence and attract tax at that point."

This decision proceeds on the basis that the word 'net profits' used in Art. 77 is used in a special sense. The net profits referred to in Art. 77 are profits only for the purpose of computing share of Messrs. Wallace and Co. But it is not the amount of real net profits, which is taxable. Remuneration to Messrs. Wallace and Co., being an item of expenditure solely incurred for the purpose of earning profits, that must be deducted before the amount of taxable profits is ascertained. This authority no doubt lays down the proposition that remuneration to managing agents is an item of expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning profits, but as observed by Lord Maugham in 'AIR 1937 P C 189 (B)' it is impossible to formulate a test which will always suffice to discriminate between the expenditure which is and which is not allowable for the purpose of income-tax. Similar observations were made by Lord Macmillan in 'AIR 1937 P C 139 (C)'. He observed as follows:

"Their Lordships recognize and the decided cases show how difficult it is to discriminate between expenditure which is, and expenditure which is not, incurred solely for the purpose of earning profits or gains."

Each case, therefore, has to be decided on its own facts.

(11) In the present case as the agreement and articles of association show, the firm of Sir Saroopchand Hukumchand and Co. are not ordinary managing agents. They are also promoters of Rajkumar Mills Ltd. The agreement also shows that if the Company is wound up within six years, the managing agents are to be paid ten times the average annual commission earned during the preceding year as compensation and if the company were wound up later the managing agents were to be paid a sum equivalent to five times the average annual commission during the period of six years preceding the resolution. The agreement also lays down that the managing agents were to receive Rs. 1500/- per mensem as office allowance. This allowance although termed as office allowance is only another form of payment. Because all the office expenses were to be paid by the company. Besides the commission agents were entitled to a commission of Rs. 25,000/- per year even if the company did not earn any profits. These facts go to show that the remuneration of the managing agents was Rs. 18,000/- as office allowance and Rs. 25,000/- as commission. The commission was fixed at the rate of 16 per cent. on the net profits. If the share of profits calculated at 16 p.c. exceeded Rs. 25,000/- the managing agents were entitled to the excess amount. Taking into consideration the fact that the managing agents were also promoters of the company and had secured most beneficial terms in the contract of agreement, there is no doubt in my mind that it was a joint adventure between the company and the managing agents in which profits were to be shared in accordance with the scheme laid down in the agreement. The amount paid in excess of Rs. 25,000/- therefore, is a payment out of profits and conditional on profits being earned, and hence it cannot be described as an item of expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning profits. I am, therefore, of opinion that the sum of Rs. 2537/- paid to the managing agents is not an item of expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning profits, and hence the company is not entitled to deduct this amount from taxable profits.

(12) For the reasons given above this appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

Section 5 (1) (c), Prevention of Corruption Act, does not create any new offence. Read with sub-s. (2) of S. 5, it only makes an act already punishable under S. 409, I. P. C., punishable as a criminal misconduct under the Act.

The difference in the punishment, the requirement as to sanction and the special rules of evidence cannot make it a new offence. (Para 4)

Section 5 (1) (c), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, as it stood prior to the Prevention of Corruption (Second Amendment) Act, 1952, did not pro tanto repeal S. 409, Penal Code, so far as it relates to offences by public servants. Therefore, a public servant could be prosecuted under S. 409, Penal Code, notwithstanding S. 5 (2) of that Act. This is now expressly made clear by S. 5 (4) of that Act. Where, a new offence is created under any enactment, the accused must be dealt with in accordance with the provisions of that enactment, where on the other hand, a statute makes an act already punishable under some former law, punishable and there is nothing in the later enactment to exclude the operation of the former one, then the accused person can be proceeded against under either of the enactments. ORDER: This is a petition to quash the proceedings and the charge in the trial of the applicant in respect of offences under Ss. 409, 466 and 477-A, I. P. C. The applicant Madho Prasad was formerly a clerk and accountant in Food Department, Basoda. The prosecution case against him is that on 6-5-1952 and 17-5-1952 the applicant in his capacity as an accountant and clerk received a total amount of Rs. 250/- from two persons in respect of licences and a deposit, but that he subsequently failed to deposit the amount in the treasury & gave false receipts to the payers showing that amounts paid by them had been credited in the treasury. During the course of the trial, the applicant raised an objection that as he was a public servant, he could be prosecuted for his alleged act of dishonestly misappropriating the amounts paid to him by Bihari Lal and Babu Lal only under S. 5(2), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, and not under S. 409, I. P. C., and further that as the required sanction under S. 6 of the Act for his prosecution under S. 5(2) had not been obtained, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the case. The trial Magistrate rejected the objection and proceeded to frame charges against the applicant for the offences under Ss. 409, 466, 477-A, I.P.C. The applicant then preferred a revision petition to the Sessions Judge of Guna, which was rejected. He has now come up in revision to this Court.

(2) Mr. Dey learned Counsel for the applicant contended that after the coming into force in Madhya Bharat of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, and so long as it remained in force, S. 409, Penal Code, in so far as it related to offences by public servants stood repealed and that if a public servant was alleged to have committed an offence of criminal breach of trust, he could only be prosecuted for an offence under S. 5(2), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, after obtaining the requisite sanction under S. 6 of the Act. In support of this contention, Mr. Dey relied on a decision of the Punjab High Court in — ‘State v. Gurucharan Singh’, AIR 1952 Punj 89 (A). It was said that no such sanction had been obtained for the applicant’s prosecution under S. 5(2) of the Act. The argument of the learned Deputy Government Advocate in reply is that there is nothing in the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, to suggest that the provisions of S. 409, I. P. C., have been repealed impliedly by S. 5(1)(c) of the Act & that if a public servant is alleged to have committed an offence which falls either under S. 5(1)(c) of the Act or under S. 409, Penal Code, he is under S. 26, General Clauses Act, liable to be prosecuted and punished under either of these enactments.

It is further argued by the learned Government Advocate that the matter has been now set at rest by the Prevention of Corruption (Second Amendment) Act, 1952, by which sub-s. (4) of S. 5 of the principal Act was amended so as to make it clear that the provisions of S. 5 are in addition to, and not in derogation of, any other law for the time being in force and nothing contained therein exempts any public servant from any proceeding which might, apart from S. 5 be instituted against him. Mr. Shiv Dayal learned Deputy Government further submitted that the view taken by the Punjab High Court that as long as S. 5, Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, remained in force, the provisions of S. 409, I. P. C., so far as they concern offences by public servants are pro tanto repealed by S. 5(1)(c) of the Act is not correct and commended to me for acceptance of the contrary view taken by the Allahabad High Court in — ‘Bhupnarayan Saxena v. State’, AIR 1952 All 35 (B).

(3) I am unable to accept the contention of the learned Counsel for the applicant and, in my opinion, this petition must be dismissed.

For the purposes of this revision petition it seems to me unnecessary to examine at length and in detail all the provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947. It is sufficient to say that the chief object of the Act, which was passed in 1947, is to make more effective provision for the prevention of bribery and corruption by public servants. The Act was amended twice in 1952. By the Amendment Act, II of 1952 (Act No. II of 1952), the duration of the Act was extended to a period of ten years from the commencement of the Act. By the Second Amendment Act No. LIX of 1952 Ss. 3 to 6 of the principal Act were amended in some respects. Section 3 of the Act makes offences under Ss. 161, 165, 165A, Penal Code cognizable offences. Section 4 permits the Court to draw certain presumption against the accused person in any trial of an offence punishable under S. 161 or S. 165 or S. 165A. Section 5 defines the offence of criminal misconduct by a public servant in the discharge of his duties. Section 5A deals with investigation into cases under the Act. Section 6 provides that the previous sanction of the competent authority mentioned therein shall be necessary for the prosecution of a public servant under S. 161, S. 165, Penal Code, or under S. 5(2) of the Act. Section 7 of the Act permits an accused person to give evidence on oath on his own behalf and says that no presumption shall be drawn if the accused declines to go into the witness-box. The provision of the Act, which is very material here, is S. 5. It is as follows:

“5 (1) A public servant is said to commit the offence of criminal misconduct in the discharge of his duty:

(a) if he habitually accepts or obtains or agrees to accept or attempts to obtain from any person for himself or for any other person, any gratification (other than legal remuneration) as a motive or reward such as is mentioned in S. 161, Penal Code, or

(b) if he habitually accepts or obtains or agrees to accept or attempts to obtain for himself or for any other person, any valuable thing without consideration or for a consideration which he knows to be inadequate, from any person whom he knows to have been, or to be, or to be likely to be concerned in any proceeding or business transacted or about to be transacted by him, or having any connection with the official functions of himself or of any public servant to whom he is subordinate, or from any person whom he knows to be interested in or related to the person so concerned, or

(c) if he dishonestly or fraudulently misappropriates or otherwise converts for his own use any property entrusted to him or under his control as a public servant or allows any other person so to do, or

(d) if he, by corrupt or illegal means or by otherwise abusing his position as a public servant obtains for himself or for any other person any valuable thing or pecuniary advantage.”

“(2). Any public servant who commits criminal misconduct in the discharge of his duty shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years or with fine or with both.”

“(3) In any trial of an offence punishable under sub-s. (2) the fact that the accused person or any other person on his behalf is in possession, for which the accused person cannot satisfactorily account of pecuniary resources or property disproportionate to his known sources of income may be proved, and on such proof the Court shall presume, unless the contrary is proved, that the accused person is guilty of criminal misconduct in the discharge of his official duty and his conviction therefor shall not be invalid by reason only that it is based solely on such presumption.

(4) The provisions of this section shall be in addition to, and not in derogation of any other law for the time being in force, and nothing contained herein shall exempt any public servant from any proceeding which might, apart from this section, be instituted against him."

(4) It will be seen from the above provisions of S. 5 of the Act that cls. (a) and (b) of sub-s. (1) have as their basis Ss. 161 and 165, Penal Code, but they cover cases which do not fall under any provision of the Penal Code. These clauses create new offences. So also cl. (d) of S. 5(1) creates a new offence of obtaining any valuable thing or pecuniary advantages by a public servant by corrupt or illegal means or by otherwise abusing his position. Clause (c) of S. 5(1) which makes the act of a public servant of dishonestly or fraudulently misappropriating or otherwise converting for his own use any property entrusted to him or under his control as a public servant or allowing any other person so to do, a criminal misconduct is not different from S. 409, Penal Code, in so far as it relates to an offence by a public servant. This clause does not create any new offence. Read with sub-s. (2) of S. 5, it only makes an act already punishable under S. 409, I. P. C., punishable as a criminal misconduct under the Act with imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years or with fine or with both. The difference between the offence under S. 5(1)(c) of the Act and the offence under S. 409, I. P. C., so far as it relates to an offence by a public servant lies in the different punishments. The offence under S. 5(2), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, as also the offence under S. 409, Penal Code, are both tried in accordance with the Criminal Procedure Code and there is no special procedure prescribed for an offence under S. 5(2) of the Act. It is true that no public servant can be prosecuted for an offence under S. 5(2) of the Act without the previous sanction of the competent authority and in a trial for that offence, the Court is empowered to draw a presumption against the accused under S. 5(3) and further the accused is also at liberty to give evidence on oath. But these special rules of sanction and evidence do not make the act of a public servant described in S. 5(1)(c) of the Act already punishable under S. 409, Penal Code, a new offence.

(5) The question whether S. 5(1)(c) of the Act virtually repeals S. 409, Penal Code in relation to public servants is now concluded by the new sub-s. (4) of S. 5 of the Act which says that the provisions of that section are in addition to, and not in derogation of, any law for the time being in force and that nothing in that section shall exempt any public servant from any proceeding which might be instituted against him. This sub-section makes it amply clear that S. 5(1)(c) in no way prevents the prosecution of any public servant for an offence under S. 409, I. P. C. Even apart from S. 5(4) and on the language of S. 5, as it stood before it was amended by the Prevention of Corruption (Second Amendment) Act 1952, I do not think it could have been held that S. 409, Penal Code, so far as it related to offences by public servants stood pro tanto repealed by S. 5(1)(c) of the Act. On this point S. 26, General Clauses Act, 1897, is quite express. It says:

"Where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more enactments, then the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those enactments but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence."

(6) In accordance with this rule where an act is punishable under a special law and also under a general statute, the offender can be proceeded with under either law but cannot be punished twice for the same act. The rule embodied in S. 26 is analogous to the rule contained in S. 36, Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 and 53 Vict C 63) and is in conformity with the principle laid down in Hawkins Pleas of the Crown and in numerous English decisions that where the offence was punishable before the enactment of a statute prescribing a particular method of punishing it, then such particular remedy is cumulative and does not take away the former remedy. In — 'Lowe v. Dorling', (1906) 2 K B 772 (C), Farwell L. J., observed:

"Now, the distinction between a statute creating a new offence with a particular penalty and a statute enlarging the ambit of an existing offence by including new acts within it with a particular penalty is well settled. In the former case the new offence is punishable by the new penalty only; in the latter it is punishable also by all such penalties as were applicable before the act to the offence in which it is included. The rule was recognised by Lord Mansfield in — 'Rex v. Wright', (1758) 1 Burr 543 (D) and in a note to 2 Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown (1824 ed.), page 239, is thus stated: "The true rule seems to be this: where the offence was punishable before the statute prescribing a particular method of punishing it, then such particular remedy is cumulative, and does not take away the former remedy; but where the statute only enacts 'that the doing an act not punishable before, shall for the future be punishable in such a particular manner' there it is necessary to pursue such particular method, and not the common law method of indictment."

(7) Where, therefore, a new offence is created under any enactment, the accused must be dealt with in accordance with the provisions of that enactment. Where on the other hand, a statute makes an act already punishable under some former law, punishable and there is nothing in the later enactment to exclude the operation of the former one, then the accused person can be proceeded against under either of the enactments. The enquiry to which we have to address ourselves is, therefore, whether S. 5(1)(c) makes the act described therein an offence for the first time. Here, the act of a public servant in dishonestly or fraudulently misappropriating or otherwise converting to his own use any property entrusted to him or under his control as a public servant or of allowing any person so to do, is already punishable under S. 409, Penal Code. Even if the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, did not exist, a public servant would still be liable to punishment under S. 409, I. P. C., for dishonest or fraudulent misappropriation. No doubt, the punishment prescribed for an offence under S. 5(2) of the Act is different from that prescribed under S. 409, I. P. C. But this difference in the punishment and the special rules of evidence and sanction for prosecution under S. 5(2) of the Act do not make S. 5(1)(c) and S. 409, Penal Code, in relation to public servants so repugnant to each other that effect cannot be given to both the provisions at the same time. It is evident from S. 6 of the Act that a prosecution under S. 5(2) of the Act depends on the previous sanction of the competent authority. Where on the circumstances of a particular case the sanctioning authority has in its discretion refused to sanction the prosecution, the liability of the public servant to punishment under S. 409, I. P. C., still remains. It cannot, therefore, be held that the provisions of S. 5(1)(c) and S. 409, Penal Code, so far as they concern public servants, cannot stand consistently one with the other and, therefore, the provisions of S. 409, I. P. C., so far as they relate to public servants are impliedly repealed.

(8) With great respect to the learned Judges of the Punjab High Court, I do not find myself in agreement with their decision in 'AIR 1952 Punj 89 (A)'. In that case Falshaw J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, regarded the provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, as to previous sanction of the appropriate authority, the right of the accused to give evidence as a witness and the sentence for an offence under S. 5(2) of the Act as indicating that S. 5(1)(c) was intended to supersede S. 409, Penal Code, so far as it relates to offences by public servants. He recognised the fact that if S. 26, General Clauses Act, is taken by itself, then a public servant who has committed an offence falling either under S. 409, Penal Code, or S. 5(1)(c) of the Act can be tried on a charge under either of these sections. But he observed that the provisions in the Act regarding sanction, the right of the accused to give evidence on oath and the sentence complicated the question.

It has not been made clear in that decision how these factors render inoperative the rule laid down in S. 26, General Clauses Act, which expressly provides that where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more enactments then the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those enactments but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence. I do not see how when there is no provision in the Prevention of Corruption Act expressly repealing S. 409 as regards public servants and when there is nothing in that Act to suggest that the continuance of S. 409 in so far as it concerns public servants is inconsistent with S. 5(1)(c) of the Act, it can be inferred that S. 5(1)(c) was intended to supersede S. 409, Penal Code, as regards offences committed by public servants. The fact that the trial of a public servant for an offence under S. 5(2), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, the object of which is to prevent effectively bribery and corruption on the part of public servants, can only be with the sanction of the appropriate authority and the sanctioning authority is required to exercise its discretion in giving sanction on the facts and circumstances of each case and the fact that in a trial for that offence the stringent rule laid down in S. 5(3) as to presumption against the accused is to be applied, far from indicating an implied repeal of S. 409, Penal Code, only emphasises the fact that the operation of the general criminal law is not excluded.

Section 5, Penal Code, also makes it clear that an act which is an offence within its definition does not become unpunishable under the Code if it is also punishable by some special law. In these circumstances, I think it is wrong to infer that an intention should be ascribed to S. 5(1)(c) to repeal the provisions of S. 409, Penal Code, in so far as they affect public servants. The one provision has not the effect of repealing the other. The two co-exist without conflict. I do not think that the passages from Maxwell and Craies relied on in the Punjab decision, contain the whole of the law on the subject. These passages must be read along with what has been said by the learned authors at other places in their books. For instance, with regard to S. 33, Interpretation Act, 1889, which is similar to S. 26, General Clauses Act, it is stated in Craies' "Statute Law" (Fifth Edition at page 343 that

"the intention of the section of the Interpretation Act was by laying down a general rule, to avoid the necessity of inserting a particular provision to take effect in each new statute dealing with offences.....In accordance with this rule penalties imposed by statute for offences already punishable under a prior statute are regarded as cumulative or alternative and not as repealing the penalty to which the offender was previously liable."

Again at page 214, it is observed that by the contrary intention excluding the operation of this rule is meant "some repugnancy between the two or more laws or express repeal of the prior law". In Maxwell's "Interpretation of Statutes" (9th edition) it is stated at page 193 "that an Act which (without altering the nature of the offence, as by making it felony instead of a misdemeanour) imposes a new kind of punishment, or provides a new course of procedure for that which was already an offence, at least at common law, is usually regarded as cumulative and as not superseding the pre-existing law."

From what Craies and Maxwell have said at various places in their publications, it appears to me that in dealing with an enactment imposing penalty for an act already punishable under an earlier statute, the rule laid down in S. 33, Interpretation Act, or S. 26, General Clauses Act, is to be applied unless the intention to repeal the prior law is clear by express provision to that effect or by implication arising out of contrariety and incompatibility between the statutes. There is no express provision in the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, abrogating S. 409, Penal Code, as regards public servants and as I have pointed out before S. 5(1)(c) is not such as to make the continuance of S. 409, Penal Code, so far as it relates to public servants inconsistent with it.

(9) The view that S. 5(1)(c), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, does not pro tanto repeal S. 409, Penal Code, so far as it relates to offences by public servants is supported by a decision of the Allahabad High Court in 'AIR 1952 All 35 (B)' and of the Madras High Court in the case of — 'Satyanarayan Murti In re', AIR 1953 Mad 137 (E) and the cases referred to in those decisions.

(10) For these reasons, I am disposed to think that there is no substance in the contention of the applicant that he is not liable to punishment under S. 409, Penal Code, and that the present prosecution against him for that offence is not maintainable. As the applicant has not been charged under S. 5(2), Prevention of Corruption Act, his prayer that he should be examined as a witness on his own behalf must be rejected.

(11) In the result this revision petition is dismissed and the learned Magistrate is directed to proceed with the trial of the applicant for offences under Ss. 409, 466 and 477-A, Penal Code.

DIXIT J. : This is an appeal by the plaintiff in the suit, from the decision of the Additional District Judge, Ujjain, whereby he substantially affirmed the judgment and decree of the City Sub-Judge, Ujjain dismissing the appellant's suit for pre-emption.

(2) It was alleged by the plaintiff that the respondent Javar Chand who was the owner of a house No. 2689 situated in Mohalla Budhwaria, Ujjain, mortgaged the house on 27-10-32 with one Vithal Das for Rs. 800/-; that on 17-7-43 an account of the amount due on this mortgage was taken and Rs. 1394/- were found due from Javar Chand; that as both Vithal Das and Javar Chand were in need of money, Vithal Das sold on 17-7-43 his rights in the mortgage to Mohan Lal for Rs. 900/- and on the same date Javar Chand executed a registered deed in favour of Mohan Lal purporting to borrow Rs. 400/- from Mohan Lal and to mortgage the house in suit with Mohan Lal for this sum of Rs. 400/- and Rs. 1394/- said to be amount due on the mortgage purchased by Mohan Lal from Vithal Das. The plaintiff claimed that the transaction evidenced by the deed of 17-7-1943 executed by Javar Chand in favour of Mohan Lal was one of sale of the property to Mohan Lal for Rs. 1300/- and that he was entitled to pre-empt the property for that amount. In his written statement, Javar Chand admitted the plaintiff's claim. Mohan Lal contested the suit mainly on the ground that the deed of 17-7-43 was on the face of it and in reality a deed of mortgage and that with regard to this mortgage transaction, no pre-emption suit could lie.

The Court of first instance held that the transaction entered into by Javar Chand with Mohan Lal on 17-7-43 was a mortgage for Rs. 1300/- and dismissed the plaintiff's claim. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge of Ujjain agreed with the conclusion of the Sub-Judge that the transaction was a mortgage but found that the consideration for the mortgage was Rs. 1794/- and not Rs. 1300/-. The learned District Judge, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's appeal and allowed the defendant Mohan Lal's cross-objections in regard to the amount of consideration for the mortgage. It is from this decision of the Additional District Judge Ujjain that the plaintiff has preferred this appeal.

(3) On behalf of the appellant, Mr. Sanghi argues that the Courts below have not given due weight to the fact that in this case it was open to the plaintiff to show from circumstantial or oral evidence that the transaction of 17-7-43 was one of a sale and not a mortgage and accordingly considered the evidence on the record. Learned Counsel for the appellant pointed out that the evidence shows that prior to 17-7-43 the defendant Javar Chand had actually approached the plaintiff and other persons for the sale of the house; that the value of the property did not exceed Rs. 1500/- and that it appears incredible that Mohan Lal agreed to take a mortgage for Rs. 1794/- on a house the value of which did not exceed Rs. 1500/- and in which the mortgage Vithal Das's rights were purchased by Mohan Lal for Rs. 900/- only. Counsel for the appellant stressed the point that the sale by Vithal Das of his rights to Mohan Lal and the alleged mortgage by Javar Chand to Mohan Lal were effected on the same date and that Vithal Das sold his rights to Mohan Lal with the consent of Javar Chand. It was argued that having regard to all these circumstances the Courts below should have held that the transaction of 17-7-43 between Javar Chand and Mohan Lal was one of a sale of the house for Rs. 1300/- being the amount which Mohan Lal himself had paid to Vithal Das for the purchase of his rights as a mortgagee and the sum of Rs. 400/- borrowed by Javar Chand from Mohan Lal.

(4) Mr. Hirway for the respondent Mohan Lal did not dispute that it was open to the pre-emptor to show from circumstantial and oral evidence that the transaction was one of a sale and not a mortgage. He, however, contended that the Courts below did consider the evidence led by the plaintiff as to the nature of the transaction and then came to the conclusion which was justified on that evidence, that the appellant had failed to prove that the transaction was in reality a sale. Having considered the arguments of the learned Counsel for the parties, I have come to the conclusion that this appeal must be dismissed. That a pre-emptor is not precluded from showing that the deed on which he bases his right to pre-empt and which on the face of it purports to be a mortgage is in reality a sale, is clear enough from the provisions of S. 99, Evidence Act, and of S. 3 of the Gwalior State Pre-emption Act of Samvat 1992. But, in my opinion, this rule of law only permits a pre-emptor to give evidence of any fact to prove a contemporaneous agreement between the parties to the document to the effect that the parties agreed that though the document showed one thing actually, the real transaction between them was to be quite different. I do not think, it enables a pre-emptor to suggest without proving a contemporaneous oral agreement that though a deed is 'ex facie' a mortgage and though according to its plain terms, it must be construed as such between the parties, nevertheless it should be treated as the sale because the intention of the parties was to defeat the right of pre-emption. Learned Counsel for the appellant relied on — 'Lalji Misir v. Jaggu Tewari', 33 All 104 (A); — 'Bajinath Singh v. Hajee Vally Mahomed', AIR 1925 PC 75 (B); and — 'Usan v. Mohammad Shafi Khan', AIR 1927 All 204 (C) and said that a pre-emptor is entitled to ask the Court to treat a deed of mortgage as a deed of sale, if it was executed for the purpose of avoiding the exercise of a right of pre-emption and had the same result as a sale. It seems to me that the none of the cases relied upon by the learned Counsel for the appellant lays down any such proposition.

In 33 All 104 (A), the question that was decided was whether the word "Intiqual" used in the pre-emptive clause of a "Wajibularj" was wide enough to include a perpetual lease. In the Privy Council decision reported in AIR 1925 PC 75 (B), their Lordships of the Privy Council considered the question whether a term in a deed of a transfer of certain shares in a company should be construed in the light of all the circumstances attending the execution of the deed, as a transfer of the shares by way of a security or as a sale with a clause for re-purchase. The decision in AIR 1927 All 204 (C) held a deed purporting to be a mortgage-deed to be a sale deed on the construction of its terms with the help of extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances. In all these cases, the question was one of construction of the terms of a deed and not of altering the legal effect of the plain words of an instrument according to the surmised or alleged intention of the parties.

To my mind, the correct rule is as stated in — 'Sarfaraz Singh v. Baleswar Prasad', AIR 1928 Oudh 103 (D), that cases of this kind should be decided by the construction of the document, and if it is, on the face of it, a mortgage, it cannot be regarded as a sale merely because, its terms are onerous so as to render the chance of redemption of the mortgage remote or because the mortgage was executed for defeating the right of pre-emption.

(5) The question for determination in this case is therefore, purely one of fact, namely, whether the deed executed on 17-7-43 by Javar Chand in favour of Mohan Lal was one of mortgage or of sale. In the determination of this question, on the construction of the deed, very little assistance can be derived from the construction put on different documents by the Courts in decided cases. By the deed executed on 17-7-1943, Javar Chand mortgaged with possession the house in suit with Mohan Lal for Rs. 1794/- and undertook to redeem the mortgage within 5 years. The mortgage debt carried no interest and in lieu of it Mohan Lal was given the right to appropriate the profits of the property. There is no term in the deed in regard to which it could be said that it is so onerous and unconscionable in its nature that it makes the exercise of the right of redemption impracticable or impossible. 'Ex facie' the deed of 17-7-43 on which the plaintiff has sued, is a mortgage. The onus, therefore, lies heavily on the appellant to show that the transaction is in reality a sale. He attempted to discharge this burden by showing certain circumstances, in which, according to him, the document was executed. These circumstances on which the learned counsel for the appellant relied have already been stated above. I do not regard any of these circumstances taken individually or together as conclusive to show that the parties agreed that the transaction should be treated as a sale. It is quite true that it was not necessary for Vithal Das to obtain the consent of Javar Chand for the sale of his rights as mortgagee to Mohan Lal. But if Mohan Lal did obtain the consent of Javar Chand for reasons best known to him, it cannot be said that having given that consent, Javar Chand is debarred from redeeming the mortgage, which he made in favour of Mohan Lal. Again, from the fact that Javar Chand was at one time thinking of selling the property, it does not follow that thereby he precluded himself from mortgaging the property, to any one. The contention that the transaction should be treated as a sale because as a mortgage for Rs. 1794/- of a property of the value of about Rs. 1500/-, it was an unprofitable bargain to Mohan Lal, is equally without any substance. From the evidence of the plaintiff's own witnesses, it appears to me that the value of the house in suit was much above Rs. 1500/- and that in purchasing the mortgagee's rights for Rs. 900/- from Vithal Das and then in taking a mortgage of the house for Rs. 1794/- after advancing Rs. 400/- to Javar Chand, Mohan Lal made for himself a profit of Rs. 494/-. There is, therefore, no ground for suggesting that Mohan Lal could not have entered into such a transaction except as a sale. Learned Counsel for the appellant laid some stress on the fact that in his written statement Javar Chand admitted the claim of the plaintiff saying that he had in fact sold the house to Mohan Lal. Quite apart from the fact that in the deposition given as a witness of the plaintiff, Javar Chand has not adhered to the position he took in his written statement, I think very little value can be attached to this admission of Javar Chand for the simple reason that Javar Chand being a party to the deed, he cannot be heard to say vis-a-vis Mohan Lal that the deed is a sale and not a mortgage.

(6) For the above reasons, I think the Courts below were right in arriving at the finding that the transaction was one of a mortgage and not of a sale and as such not subject to pre-emption. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Shrikrishna Shaligram Gupte and others,
Petitioners v. Municipal Committee, Ujjain, Opponent.

Civil Misc. Case No. 27 of 1951, D/-
27-10-1951.

(a) Municipalities — Gwalior Municipalities Act (Sm. 1993), S. 52 (J) — Entertainment tax and performance tax — (Constitution of India, Arts. 372 and 276 (2) and Sch. VII, List II, Entries 60 and 62).

Gwalior Municipalities Act (1993 Smt.) continued in force under M. B. Regulation of the Government Ordinance (1 of 1950) by S. 4, M. B. Regulation of Government Act. Subsequently it continued in force in territories to which it applied by virtue of Art. 372, Constitution of India.

(Para 7)

Under Entries 60 and 62 of List II of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution a state Government is authorised to legislate with regard to "taxes on professions, trades, callings and employments and on luxuries including entertainment and amusement" entertainment tax and performance tax in connection with cinema business levied by the Ujjain Municipality fall within these entries.

(Para 8)

According to Art. 276 (1) such a tax would not be invalid on the ground that it related to a tax on income, provided that under cl. (2) the total amount payable in respect of any one person did not exceed Rs. 250/- per annum.

(Para 10)

Consequently the notification of the Ujjain Municipality of 3-1-1950 imposing a performance tax at Rs. 5/- per show was invalid as it exceeded the limits imposed by Art. 276 (2).

(Para 11)

But enhancement of rate of entertainment tax was valid and was not open to any objection. Since Municipal Committee Ujjain could enforce the tax under S. 52, Gwalior Municipal Act, at certain rate before 25-1-1950 there was no valid ground for holding that it could not impose the same tax at a higher rate since the Constitution.

(Para 12)

(b) Municipalities — Gwalior Municipalities Act (1993 Smt.), S. 52(J) — 'Performance.'

Definition of "performance" in M. B. Public Amusement and Entertainment Act does not include cinematograph exhibition and does not affect provisions of S. 52 (j) — (M. B. Public Amusements and Entertainments Act).

KAUL C. J.: This is an application made under Art. 226 of the Constitution by six persons three of whom are the proprietors and the remaining three partners in six different firms which carry on business of showing cinematograph films for profit within the limits of Ujjain Municipality. It is averred that two taxes imposed recently by Ujjain Municipality are ultra vires of the powers of the Municipal Committee, Ujjain, and the applicants pray that the Committee be restrained by a writ of mandamus from enforcing the orders relating to these taxes.

1953 M. B. 19 &amp; 20

(2) The material facts which are not disputed are as follows:

Under the law in force in Gwalior State (whereof Ujjain formed part) prior to its integration with Madhya Bharat the Nagar Sabha (Municipal Committee) Ujjain had the power to impose an entertainment tax. This tax could be imposed "on all those public entertainments which are displayed for a fee or on receipt of a payment." Under S. 52, Gwalior Municipalities Act, such a tax could be imposed on "Cinemas". An entertainment tax was levied on all cinema houses under the said Law at the following rates:

(i) For every ticket upto 0.4-0	0 0.6
(ii) " " " from 0.4-0 upto 0.8-0	0 1.0
(iii) " " " from 0.8-0 upto 1.0-0	0 2.0
(iv) " " " above 1.0-0	0 4.0

(3) By an order dated 30-6-1951 issued under the signature of Executive Officer of the Municipality Ujjain purporting to act under an order of the Government conveyed by letter No. 319 of 26-5-1951 the entertainment tax above referred to was enhanced as follows:

1. For every ticket upto 0 4-0	0 0.9
2. " " " from 0.4-0 upto 0.8-0	0 1.6
4. " " " above 1.0-0	0 6.0

(4) On 4-5-1951 the six firms who are the applicants before us were served with notices by the Nagar Sabha Ujjain intimating the imposition of a performance tax at the rate of Rs. 5/- for each show.

(5) It is contended on behalf of the applicants that both these taxes were ultra vires of the powers of the Municipal Committee. A rule nisi was issued to the Municipal Committee, Ujjain to show cause against the application. By a written reply filed on behalf of the Ujjain Municipality in response to the rule, it was contended "that the enhanced entertainment tax was imposed after full compliance with the formalities of the Law prescribed under the Gwalior Municipalities Act". With regard to the "performance tax", it was urged "that the imposition of a performance tax is also permitted by the provisions of the Constitution. This tax was also imposed in compliance with the formalities of the Law prescribed under the Gwalior Act. The Ujjain Municipality is, however, now advised that the performance tax cannot exceed the limit laid down by Art. 276, Cl. (2) and to that extent the opponent Municipality is ready and willing to grant redress to the petitioners".

(6) I will take up the question relating to what has been referred to in para. (3) of the application as a "performance tax". On 3-1-1950 a notification was issued by the Ujjain Municipal Committee which ran as follows:—

"Ujjain nagar ki sima men pradarshit hone wale khelon per panch rupayya fi khel tax lagayya hai".

(7) Under S. 52, Gwalior Municipalities Act, any Municipal Committee established in the Gwalior

State could with the previous sanction of the Government impose any of the taxes mentioned in that section for the purposes of the said Act. Clause (J) of the Section authorises an imposition of an entertainment tax. This tax could under the Section be imposed on all public entertainments given on receipt of any fee or payment. Among the entertainments mentioned in that clause by way of illustrations we find that there is specific mention of cinemas. It cannot be disputed that the Gwalior Municipalities Act, Samvat 1993, continued in force under the provisions of the Regulation of the Government Ordinance No. 1 promulgated by the Raj Pramukh of Madhya Bharat and later till 25-1-1950 by S. 4 of the Regulation of Government Act. Subsequent to that date it continues in force in the territories to which it applies under the provisions of Art. 372 of the Constitution. It was admitted before us that the previous sanction of the Government had been obtained by the Ujjain Municipal Committee for levying this tax. Thus on the face of it there is nothing which would show that the tax was illegally imposed.

(8) It was contended, however, by the learned counsel for the petitioners that it was not a tax on a "profession" nor one on 'a trade' but a tax on income which could be imposed only by the Parliament and hence it was illegal. I am clear that the argument is without substance. Under entry 60 of List II of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution of India a State Government is authorised to legislate with regard to "Taxes on professions, trades, callings and employments". Under Entry 62 it can legislate with regard to "Taxes on luxuries, including taxes on entertainments, amusements, betting and gambling". Even though the tax in question be not a tax on profession or trade it is a tax on a calling. "Calling" according to Oxford Dictionary signifies persons 'following a particular business'. This is a tax payable by a person who follows the business of showing cinematograph films for profits. As such it was permissible for the State to legislate with regard to such a tax. This was done by the Gwalior Municipalities Act under which (see S. 52 (j)) such a tax could be imposed on all public entertainments displayed for a fee or on receipt of some payment. The argument that it was a tax on income is met by Art. 276 of the Constitution which lays down that:

"Notwithstanding anything in Art. 246, no Law of the Legislature of the State relating to taxes for the benefit of the State or of a Municipality, District Board, Local Board or other local authority therein in respect of professions, trades, callings or employments shall be invalid on the ground that it relates to tax on income."

(9) Reference was made in the course of argument to the definition of the expression 'performance' found in the Madhya Bharat Public Amusements and Entertainments Act. According to that definition, the expression 'performance' as used in the said Act does not include cinematograph exhibition. It is difficult to follow the relevancy of the definition given in the said Act to the matter before us. The definition of the expression 'performance' as given in that Act is as expressly stated therein for the purposes of that Act and cannot legitimately be referred to in determining the question of the validity of a tax imposed by the Ujjain Municipality levying a sum by way of performance tax on every show within the limits of the said Municipality. That a tax on a cinema show can be imposed under the provisions of S. 52 (j) Gwalior Municipalities Act, can on the language of the section admit of no doubt. Any reference to the definition of the term 'performance' in any other Act is irrelevant.

(10) Reference has been made earlier to Art. 276 of the Constitution. Clause (2) of the said Article runs as follows:—

"The total amount payable in respect of any one person to the State or to any one Municipality, district Board, local board or other local authority in the State by way of taxes on professions, trades, callings and employments shall not exceed two hundred and fifty rupees per annum..."

(11) It is clear, therefore, that though Art. 276 lays down a tax imposed by a State for the purpose of a Municipality on a calling shall not be invalid on the ground that it relates to a tax on income, every Legislation relating to such a tax cannot ignore the provisions of Cl. (2) of the said Article. There must be something either in the language of such Legislation or in the circumstances or manner of the imposition of the tax which makes it clear that the liability of one person to pay taxes on professions, trades and callings to any one Municipality shall not exceed the sum of rupees two hundred and fifty per annum. It was frankly conceded by the learned Advocate General who appeared for the Ujjain Municipality that the imposition of the said performance tax under consideration was open to this criticism. In the absence of any such restriction as is contemplated by Art. 276, Cl. (2), the Notification under which the tax in question has been imposed makes a person liable to pay sums far exceeding Rs. 250/- per annum. To take a concrete illustration, if any one of the applicants before us displays in his cinema house one or more shows for one hundred days in a year he will be liable to pay Rs. 500/- under the said Notification. That the tax in question was open to this criticism was further admitted in the return filed on behalf of the Ujjain Municipality. I hold therefore that the Notification by which the performance tax in question was imposed invalid.

(12) I will next turn to the other tax the validity of which was challenged by the present petitioners. It was admitted that under the Law in force in Gwalior State prior to its integration with Madhya Bharat the Municipal Committee of Ujjain was authorised to impose a tax on entertainments and that it had imposed a tax on entertainments given in cinema houses at the rates mentioned in para 3 of this judgment. By an order dated 30-6-1951 issued over the signature of the Executive officer of Ujjain Municipality the said entertainment tax was enhanced as stated in para 4 of this judgment. It is contended that the enhancement was illegal. I have found it somewhat difficult to follow the argument advanced on this part of the case. It is not disputed that the Ujjain Municipality had the authority to impose a tax on entertainments under S. 52, Gwalior Municipalities Act. On 25-1-1950 this was an existing Law as defined in Art. 366(10) of the Constitution. All existing Laws have as already stated been continued in force under Art. 372 of the Constitution. Clearly therefore if the Municipal Committee could impose a tax at the rate mentioned in para 3 of this judgment before 25-1-1950. If this was so, there appears to be no valid ground for holding that it could not impose the same tax at a higher rate since the Constitution came into force.

(13) It was faintly argued that the Act (Gwalior Municipalities Act) "could not apply to future taxation after the Constitution came into force". I frankly confess that I am unable to appreciate the force of this contention. If the said Act was an existing Law on 25-1-1950 and has continued to be in force since, it cannot be contended with any show of reason that though it could validly impose a tax before 26-1-1950 it cannot do so under the same provisions since that date.

(14) Another argument advanced before us in connection with these taxes was that the scheme of S. 52, Gwalior Municipalities Act contemplates delegated Legislation which is not permitted under the Constitution. I am clear that s. 52, Gwalior Municipalities Act, is not an instance of delegated Legislation. It lays down clearly that with the previous sanction of the Government a Municipal Committee can impose an entertainment tax. Thus the legislation to impose a tax was enacted by the proper law making authority. What was left to the Municipality was only the determination of the conditions and the circumstances in which the tax could be imposed. Even this was made subject to the previous approval of the Government. This may be an instance of "conditional legislation" but is not one of delegated legislation. Apart from that it would appear that this was an existing law which has continued in force by virtue of Art. 372 of the Constitution, and its validity cannot be challenged on such a ground as put forward by the learned counsel. I am of opinion, therefore, that the enhancement of the rate of the tax referred to in paras. 2 and 4 of the application is valid and its legality is not open to any objection.

(15) With regard to the performance tax as already stated this tax is not valid inasmuch as it ignores the provisions of Art. 276(2) of the Constitution and I would accordingly direct the Municipal Committee to refrain from levying the said performance tax.

(a) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 354, 342 — Essentials under S. 354.

It is not the act of outraging the modesty that is made an offence under S. 354, Penal Code. In order to constitute an offence under S. 354, Penal Code there must be an assault or use of criminal force to any woman with the intention or knowledge that the woman's modesty will be outraged. The offence under S. 354, Penal Code can therefore be committed by any man or a woman with the necessary intent or knowledge.

(Para 2)

The act of an accused in confining a girl of 9 years in a room, in making her lie on a bed and then sitting on her and becoming naked is clearly one amounting to use of criminal force with the intention or knowledge that the girl's modesty will be outraged and the accused is rightly convicted under Ss. 354 and 342, Penal Code.

†(b) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 354, 8 — S. 354 does not offend against Art. 14 of the Constitution — (Constitution of India, Art. 14).

The pronoun "he" used in the expression "that he will thereby outrage her modesty" must be taken under S. 8, Penal Code as importing a male or a female. It is thus clear that under S. 354, Penal Code a man as well as a woman can be held guilty of the offence and be punished for it. The section, therefore, operates equally upon all persons whether males or females and as women are not exempt from any punishment under the section, it does not offend against the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution. (Para 2)

That the Penal Code gives no protection to man against "assault or criminal force with intent to outrage his modesty" is really an objection as to the policy of law in not creating a particular offence. It is not an objection as to the infringement of Art. 14 of the Constitution.

(c) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Classification under — (Penal Code (1860), S. 354).

Article 14 in effect means that every law that the State makes shall operate alike upon all persons and property under the same conditions and circumstances. It does not mean that all persons, property or occupation must be treated alike by the State. Further, a reasonable classification of groups for purposes of legislation is permissible and what is prohibited is discrimination between persons who are included in the group to which the law applies. AIR 1952 SC 123, Rel. on.

If, therefore, the Legislature has in its wisdom thought it fit to treat men differently from women in regard to modesty and to make an assault or use of criminal force with intent to outrage the modesty punishable under S. 354 when committed only with respect to women, the provisions contained in S. 354, Penal Code cannot be condemned as repugnant to Art. 14 of the Constitution. †(d) Penal Code (1860), S. 354 — Does not violate Art. 15 of the Constitution — (Constitution of India, Art. 15(1)).

The word 'only' in Art. 15(1) emphasises the fact that the discrimination that is prohibited under the Article is a discrimination based on the ground of sex, or race, etc. alone. If the discrimination is based not merely on any of the grounds stated in Art. 15(1) but also on considerations of propriety, public morals, decency, decorum and rectitude, the Legislation containing such discrimination would not be hit by the provisions of the Article.

ORDER: In this case the petitioner Gir-dhar Gopal has been convicted by the City Magistrate, Lashker for offences under Ss. 342 and 354, Penal Code and sentenced to six months and one year rigorous imprisonment respectively for each of the offences. The sentences were directed to run concurrently. The Sessions Judge of Gwalior rejected an appeal preferred by the accused against the convictions and sentences. The applicant has now come up in revision to this Court.

(2) Before me, Mr. Bhagwandas Gupta learned counsel for the applicant did not challenge the conviction and sentence of the applicant under S. 342, Penal Code. His contention was that S. 354, Penal Code offended against the provisions of Arts. 14 and 15 of the Constitution of India and that therefore, S. 354 being void, the conviction of the applicant under that section was illegal. The argument of Mr. Gupta is that as the Penal Code does not make the act of assault or use of criminal force to any man with intent "to outrage his modesty" an offence, S. 354, Penal Code contravenes Art. 14 of the Constitution and that in enacting S. 354, Penal Code, the legislature has discriminated in favour of women only on the ground of sex and that therefore, S. 354 offends against Art. 15(1). In my view this argument is unsound and must be rejected. The offence under S. 354 is committed only when a person assaults or uses a criminal force to a woman, intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby outrage her modesty. It is not the act of outraging the modesty that is made an offence under this section. In order to constitute an offence under S. 354, Penal Code there must be an assault or use of criminal force to any woman with the intention or knowledge that the woman's modesty will be outraged. The offence under S. 354, Penal Code can be committed by any man or a woman with the necessary intent or knowledge. For, a woman can assault or use criminal force to any other woman as equally and effectively as any man; and the intention or knowledge that the modesty of the woman assaulted or against whom criminal force has been used will be outraged, is not of a kind which a woman on account of inherent differences from man is incapable of having. The pronoun "he" used in the expression "that he will thereby outrage her modesty" must therefore be taken under S. 8, Penal Code as importing a male or a female. It is thus clear that under S. 354, Penal Code a man as well as a woman can be held guilty of the offence of assaulting or using criminal force to any woman with the intention or knowledge that the woman's modesty will be outraged, and be punished for the offence. Section 354, therefore, operates equally upon all persons whether males or females and it cannot be maintained that as women are exempt from any punishment under this section, it offends against the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution.

(3) It is true that the act of assault or use of criminal force to any man with the intention or knowledge of "outraging his modesty" is not made an offence under the Penal Code. Learned counsel for the applicant was, however, unable to say what according to him was the meaning of the expression "outraging the modesty of a man" or whether the expression meant "offending the impudence of man" or dishonouring him. It would however, appear from S. 353 that an assault or use of criminal force to any man by a woman intending thereby to dishonour him otherwise than on grave provocation is punishable. Be that as it may, the objection of the learned counsel for the applicant that the Penal Code gives no protection to man against assault or criminal force with intent to "outrage his modesty" is really an objection as to the policy of law in not creating a particular offence. It is not an objection as to the infringement of Art. 14 of the Constitution. This Article provides that the State shall not deny to any person equality before the law or the equal protection of laws within the territories of India. Article 14 has been construed by the Supreme Court in several cases (See — Raning Rawat v. State of Saurashtra, AIR 1952 SC 123 (A); — Charanjitlal v. Union of India, AIR 1951 SC 41 (B) and by this Court also in — Miss Sumitra Devi v. State of Madhya Bharat, 1952 Madh B LR 385 (C) and in effect it means that every law that the State makes shall operate alike upon all persons, and property under the same conditions and circumstances. It does not mean that all persons, property or occupation must be treated alike by the State. As pointed out by His Lordship Das J., in — 'AIR 1952 SC 123' (A) :

"While Art. 14 forbids class legislation it does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation. In order, however, to pass the test of permissible classification, two conditions must be fulfilled, namely, (1) that the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others left out of the group and (2) that that differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the Act. What is necessary is that there must be a nexus between the basis of classification and the object of the Act."

(4) From these observations it is clear that a reasonable classification of groups for purposes of legislation is permissible and what is prohibited is discrimination between persons who are included in the group to which the law applies. If, therefore, the Legislature has in its wisdom thought it fit to treat men differently from women in regard to modesty and to make an assault or use of criminal force with intent to outrage the modesty punishable under S. 354 when committed only with respect to women, the provisions contained in S. 354, Penal Code cannot be condemned as repugnant to Art. 14 of the Constitution.

(5) The contention of the learned counsel for the applicant that S. 354 violates the provisions of Art. 15(1) of the Constitution is equally untenable. This Article says that the State shall not discriminate on grounds only of religion, race, caste, sex, place of birth or any of them. The word "only" is important and deserves to be noted. It emphasises the fact that the discrimination that is prohibited under Art. 15(1) is a discrimination based on the ground of sex, or race, etc. alone. If the discrimination is based not merely on any of the grounds stated in Art. 15(1) but also on considerations of propriety, public morals, decency, decorum and rectitude, the legislation containing such discrimination would not be hit by the provisions of Art. 15(1). It cannot be denied that an assault or criminal force to a woman with intent to outrage her modesty is made punishable under S. 354 not merely because women are women, but because of the factors enumerated above. Our country is not peculiar in making the acts described in S. 354 punishable as an offence. Such acts constitute a penal offence in all other civilised countries. After all civilisation depends on morality. In any country claiming or aspiring to be a civilised country morality and all the incidents of morality are as essential as justice to the citizen and personal liberty. No civilised country whose action is directed towards securing "the greatest good of the greatest number" can allow assaults or criminal force to women with intent to outrage their modesty to go unpunished and permit the position of women to be injuriously affected by chartered libertines. In my opinion, the contention advanced on behalf of the applicant that S. 354 offends Art. 15(1) must be rejected.

(6) As to the facts of the case, I see no reason to differ from these concurrent conclusions arrived at by the Courts below. On the evidence on record it is conclusively established that on the afternoon of 10-2-1951 at about 4-30 p.m., the applicant who is a Pujari of a Mandir caught hold of a young girl named Saroj of about 9 years of age, took her to his house on the pretext of giving "Parshad" to her and then when she was inside he closed the door of the room, made her lie on a bed, put a covering on her and then sat upon her for some time. Later on the applicant became naked and asked Saroj, to remove all her clothes. When the girl shouted and called her brother, who happened to come near the house in search of Saroj, the applicant forcibly closed her mouth. Saroj was then rescued by the neighbours who forcibly opened the door and entered the room. On her return home, Saroj then complained to her mother. Mr. Bhagwandas Gupta urged that as Saroj was a little girl of nine years of age, she could not have developed the sense of modesty of a woman as contemplated by S. 354, Penal Code and further as her mother was not examined, to support her statement that she complained to her mother, it was doubtful whether the applicant had committed any offence at all under S. 354, Penal Code. Learned counsel relied on — 'Soko v. Emperor', AIR 1933 Cal 142 (D). In that case Jack J., felt some doubt as to whether the act of a man putting a finger into the private parts of a girl of five and half years of age, constituted an offence under S. 354, Penal Code. The learned Judge was inclined to think that when the girl had no hesitation in telling her mother exactly what had happened and having regard to her age, it could not be said that she had developed a sense of modesty, Ghose J., who was the other member of the Bench which decided that case did not agree with the view taken by his learned brother that the case did not fall under S. 354, Penal Code. In the Calcutta case, the accused was ultimately convicted under S. 323, Penal Code and the sentence of six months rigorous imprisonment which had been awarded to him by the trial Magistrate under S. 354, Penal Code was maintained. Having regard to the circumstance that the sentence was maintained, Bose J., did not wish to differ with the conclusion arrived at by Jack J. With all respect to Jack J., I am unable to find myself in agreement with his reasoning. It is unnecessary to consider here whether a little girl of five years of age can be said to have developed a sense of modesty contemplated by S. 354, Penal Code. So far as the present case is concerned, it is clear that when the applicant asked Saroj to remove her clothes, she refused to do so and shouted. It cannot, therefore, be said that she had not developed any sense of modesty. To my mind, the act of the applicant in confining Saroj in a room, in making her lie on a bed and then sitting on her and becoming naked is clearly one amounting to use of criminal force with the intention or knowledge that the girl's modesty will be outraged. The applicant has been rightly convicted under Ss. 354 and 342, Penal Code. The appropriateness of the sentences awarded to him is amply made out.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 520 — Scope. AIR 1918 Bom 186 and AIR 1924 All 675 (2), Dissented.

Section 520 means that any Court which has powers of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision in respect of the trial Court can make any substantive order it thinks fit under the section. There is nothing in the section to justify the view that the Court of appeal or revision means a Court to which an appeal or revision lies in a particular case or that the Court of revision means the High Court. AIR 1932 Bom 534 (FB), Foll. (Para 3) Anno: Cr.P.C., S. 520 N. 1, 2a, 3.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 520 — Concurrent jurisdiction of Courts.

The jurisdiction of one of the Courts specified in the section to deal with an application under that section is not taken away by the mere fact of the earlier presentation of a petition under the section to another of such Courts. It is only when an application is entertained and decided by either of the Courts that the jurisdiction of the other of them to deal with the matter is lost. AIR 1931 Mad 772(2), Rel. on. (Para 4) Anno: Cr.P.C., S. 520 N. 1 Pt. 13.

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 438 — Power of Sessions Judge or District Magistrate to refer.

There is no provision in the Code which gives power to the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge to make a reference to the High Court for obtaining its opinion on a question arising in a case pending before him. The District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge is bound to dispose of all questions of law or fact arising before him and decide the case or appeal himself.

ORDER: This is a reference by the District Magistrate of Shivpuri seeking orders of this Court with regard to the disposal of an application under section 520, Cr. P. C. pending before the District Magistrate. The facts are that the non-applicant Jabar Chand was tried by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Shivpuri for an offence of theft of ten bags of Jeera. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate while acquitting Jabar Chand ordered the confiscation to the State of the property. The complainant Chiranjil Lal then filed a revision petition under S. 520, Cr. P. C., before the District Magistrate for the delivery of the bags of Jeera to him. While this revision petition was pending before the District Magistrate, Jabar Chand presented a petition under section 520 of the Code to the Sessions Judge of Gwalior for the return of the property to him. The learned Sessions Judge after hearing Jabar Chand and the Public Prosecutor allowed the petition and passed an order directing the return of the bags of Jeera to Jabar Chand or in the alternative the payment to him of the proceeds of the sale if the property had already been sold. The District Magistrate now wants to know the effect the order of the Sessions Judge has on the application under section 520 of the Code pending before the District Magistrate.

(2) Mr. Mungre on behalf of the State contends that in view of the provisions of section 435 (4), the learned Sessions Judge having entertained and decided the application presented to him by Jabar Chand, the District Magistrate has now no jurisdiction to deal with the application filed before him by the complainant Chiranjilal, Mr. Bhagwandas Gupta, learned counsel for Chiranjilal, on the other hand, contended that under section 407 (1) an appeal lies to the District Magistrate from a sentence passed by Second Class Magistrate and that therefore in the present case the District Magistrate's Court being the "Court of Appeal" for the purposes of S. 520 of the Code, he alone had the power to modify, alter or annul the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of the Second Class under S. 517 of the Code with regard to the confiscation of the Jeera to the State.

(3) In my opinion, the contention of the learned Government Advocate is well-founded and must be accepted. For the purposes of this reference I do not propose to examine the conflicting decisions of the various High Courts as to the forum to which an application under S. 520 of the Code is to be made or as to the nature of the jurisdiction exercised by a superior Court under this section. It is, however, sufficient to state that, to me the view taken by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in — 'Wal Chand v. Hari Anant', AIR 1932 Bom 534 (A) as to the meaning and scope of section 520 of the Code appears to be correct. In that case it has been held that section 520 means that any Court which has powers of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision in respect of the trial Court, that being the Court subordinate thereto referred to in the section, can make any substantive order it thinks fit in respect of property dealt with by the trial Court under S. 517, 518 or 519 of the Code. It has been further held in that case that if an application is made to the Sessions Court as the Court having powers of revision in respect of the trial Court in regard to orders relating to property made under S. 517, 518 or 519, then the Sessions Court can itself make a proper order and need not refer the matter to the High Court. It seems to me that the narrow interpretation put on S. 520 in the earlier decision of the Bombay High Court, namely — 'In re Khima Rukhad', AIR 1918 Bom 186 (B) and also in—'Debi Ram v. Emperor', AIR 1924 All 675 (2) (C) is not justified by the wording of S. 520 and the existence of sections 423 and 439 in the Code which define the powers of the appellate Court and of the High Court as a Court of revision. I do not see anything in section 520 of the Code to justify the view that the words "Court of appeal", in that section refer only to a Court to which either of the parties to the case could appeal and the Court of revision means the High Court. If the intention of the Legislature had been that the Court to which an appeal or revision lies in the particular case alone should modify, alter or annul the order of the trial Court under S. 517, 518 or 519 then it was unnecessary for the Legislature to insert the provisions of S. 520 in the Code. For, without that section when a party to a criminal case has appealed the appellate Court would have ample power under S. 423 of the Code to pass an appropriate order in respect of property dealt with by the trial Court under S. 517, 518 or 519 and likewise the High Court would have the power under S. 439 of the Code to pass order as to the disposal of property in cases that come up before it in revision. The provisions of S. 520 would thus be rendered superfluous if they are interpreted in a narrow sense.

(4) On the view I have taken of S. 520 it is clear that in the present case, both the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate as a Court of revision had power under S. 520 to interfere with the orders of the trial Court under section 517 with regard to the confiscation of the Jeera. The question, then, arises whether the learned Sessions Judge was justified in entertaining an application under S. 520 of the Code by the accused, when the complainant had already sought redress under that section from the District Magistrate. I do not think that in the face of the clear provisions of cl. (4) of S. 435, there can be any doubt on the point. Under S. 435, an applicant may go for redress either to the District Magistrate or to the Sessions Judge, but under cl. (4) of the section when an application has been made either to the Sessions Judge or to the District Magistrate, no further application can be entertained by the other of them. It must, however, be noted that on general principle, the jurisdiction of one of the Courts of concurrent jurisdiction to deal with the matter exists so long as the other Court of co-ordinate power has not actually exercised jurisdiction in the matter and dealt with it. Therefore, the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge to deal with an application under S. 520 is not taken away by the mere fact of the earlier presentation of a petition under S. 520 of the Code to the District Magistrate. It is only when an application is entertained and decided either by the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge that the jurisdiction of the other of them to deal with the matter is lost. This view is supported by the decision of the Madras High Court in — 'Appachi Goundan v. Emperor', AIR 1931 Mad 772 (2) (D). I am, therefore, inclined to think that the learned District Magistrate can now only reject the petition filed before him by the complainant. The question whether the order passed by the Sessions Judge is correct on merits does not arise for consideration in this reference. If the complainant and the State are in any way aggrieved by that order, they are at liberty to move this Court by way of appropriate proceedings.

(5) Before concluding I must observe that the reference made by the learned District Magistrate is really not warranted by any provision of the Code. No section in the Code gives power to the District Magistrate to make a reference to this Court for obtaining its opinion on a question arising in a case pending before the District Magistrate. The District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge is bound to dispose of all questions of law or fact arising before him and decide the case or appeal himself. I have no doubt, expressed an opinion on the question of the power and jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge to dispose of the application presented to him under S. 520 of the Code by the accused. But this I have done because of the special circumstances of the case and not because the District Magistrate is entitled to obtain an opinion of this Court in a case pending before him. With these observations this reference is returned to the District Magistrate without any orders from this Court as to what he should do in the petition pending before him.

KAUL C. J.: A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this appeal which raises the question what is the proper court-fees payable on the memorandum of grounds of appeal in this case. The facts in so far as they are material for this purpose are as follows:

(2) A suit for partition was brought by Keshav and his son Malhar against Keshav's brother Sadashiv, his son Dattatraya and Keshav's mother Laxmibai for partition and separate possession of his share in the joint family property. Subsequently, Ramchandra and Anant sons of Vishwanath and Mahadeo and Rangnath sons of Ganpat Rao who were first cousins of Keshav and Sadashiv applied that they were also members of a joint family with Keshav & Sadashiv were entitled to a definite share in the joint family property. These applications were not opposed by Keshav. They were however contested by Sadashiv and the other defendants. Ultimately the applications were allowed and the four applicants above named were impleaded as defendants. Sadashiv admitted that he and Keshav formed a joint family. It was however pleaded on his behalf that Ramchandra, Anant, Mahadeo and Rangnath were not joint with them and had no interest in the joint family property. The learned District Judge of Garoth held on the evidence led before him that Ramchandra and Anant were joint with Keshav and Sadashiv but that Mahadeo and Rangnath were separate. He passed a preliminary decree for partition. Two appeals were preferred against his decision one by Mahadeo and Rangnath and the other by Sadashiv, Dattatraya and Laxmibai defendants Nos. 1 to 3. Ramchandra filed cross-objections challenging the correctness of the finding as regards the extent of his share. These matters came up for hearing before Rege J. and the question was raised before him what was the proper court-fee payable on their memorandums of grounds of appeal by Mahadeo and Rangnath. They had paid a court-fee of Rs. 15/- only under Article 11 of the Indore Court-fees Act. The learned Judge took the view that these appellants were liable to pay 'ad valorem' court-fee on the value of their share. They were called upon to fix a value on the share claimed by them and pay court-fee according to the figure at which the share was valued. The appellants valued their share at Rs. 6000/- and paid the requisite court-fee. Having heard the parties Mr. Justice Rege was of opinion that proper issues had not been framed in the trial court and all the questions that should have been considered were not decided. He accordingly framed fresh issues and remanded the case to the trial Court for decision in the light of the observations made by him.

The learned District Judge thereupon heard the case afresh. He held on the evidence which was before him that Ganpat father of Mahadeo and Rangnath was separate from his brother Khanderao father of Keshav and Sadashiv and accordingly had no interest in the joint family property. As regards Ramchandra and Anant, his finding was that though they formed a joint family with Keshav and Sadashiv all the property in suit was self-acquired property of Khanderao in which Ramchandra and Anant could not claim a share. He however held that Keshav was entitled to a third share in the property in suit and passed a preliminary decree for partition. Dissatisfied with this decision Mahadeo and Rangnath, and Ramchandra and Anant have preferred these two appeals.

(3) An objection was raised by Mr. Bharucha learned counsel for Sadashiv and Mr. Kulkarni who appears for Laxmibai that Mahadeo and Rangnath were liable to pay 'ad valorem' court-fee on the memorandum of their grounds of appeal. It may be mentioned that though in compliance with the order of Rege J. Mahadeo and Rangnath had paid 'ad valorem' court-fee in their appeal before the case was remanded the present appeal was filed by them on a stamped paper of Rs. 15/- only. Mr. Newaskar learned counsel for the appellants challenges the correctness of the view taken by Rege J. and contends that irrespective of whether the case is covered by Art. 11 of the Indore Court-fees Act or S. 4 of that Act he is liable to pay a court-fee of Rs. 15/- only. The two learned counsel Mr. Bharucha and Mr. Kulkarni who raised the preliminary objection put forward different grounds in support of their contention. Mr. Bharucha contended that the appellants having accepted the decision of Rege J. and having failed to challenge it when he filed his first appeal after remand was bound by that decision. He argued that the matter was 'res judicata'. Mr. Kulkarni, on the other hand, contended that inasmuch as the appellants were not in possession of any part of the joint family property and their claim was in effect one not only for a declaration of their right but also for possession of a share in the joint family property they must pay 'ad valorem' court-fee according to the figure at which they put their share. We will deal with each of these contentions in order.

(4) Reference was made by Mr. Bharucha to S. 105, Civil P. C. He argued that having failed to challenge the decision of Rege J. on the question of court-fee by incorporating a ground to that effect in the memorandum of their grounds of appeal when they challenged the decision of the trial court after remand they could not challenge it in this appeal which is filed against the decision of a single Judge of this Court. It may be mentioned incidentally that after the decision of the case by the trial Judge subsequent to remand the appeal came up before Mehta J. who affirmed the decision of the trial court. According to Mr. Bharucha's contention it was open to Mehta J. to set aside the decision of Rege J. on the question of court-fee. No satisfactory answer was however forthcoming when I put it to the learned counsel whether if the appeal which was heard by Mehta J. had come up for hearing before Rege J. he himself could be free to set aside his previous decision given before remand. I am clear that no question of 'res judicata' arises in the present case nor has S. 105, Civil P. C. has any application to it. Apart from other grounds section 105 is inapplicable because it applies only to cases where there is any error or irregularity "affecting the decision of the case". A question relating to court-fees is, we are clear, not an error or irregularity of this description.

(5) Turning now to the ground urged by Mr. Kulkarni we may point out that under Art. 11 of the Indore Court-fees Act the amount of court-fee payable by a defendant who is a party to the suit for partition and files an appeal against the decision given against him, would depend entirely on the amount of the court-fee that was paid by the plaintiff. Article 11 opens with these words:

"Plaint or memorandum of appeal in each of the following suits."

It is cl. VI of this Article which according to Mr. Newaskar applies to this case. It runs:

"Every other suit where it is not possible to estimate at a money-value(?) the subject-matter in dispute and which is not otherwise provided for by this Act."

As observed by Chitaley and Rao in their Commentary on the Court-fees Act 1944, Edition page 128 (Notes on section 7(IV) (b) note (2), it is now generally settled in most of the High Courts that this clause (clause 7 (IV)(b) does not apply to a suit for partition by a co-owner who has not been excluded from the enjoyment of the common property. This view, the commentators add is based on the ground that the words in the clause "to enforce the right to share in the property" imply that the plaintiff has been excluded from the enjoyment of such property and are inapplicable to a case in which he has not been so excluded. Reference in support of this view is made to a number of cases including — 'Kameshwar Singh v. Rajbansi Singh', AIR 1943 Pat 433(438) (A); — 'In re Nandlal', AIR 1932 Cal 353 (355) (B); — 'Asa Ram v. Jagan Nath', AIR 1934 Lah 563 (573) (FB) (C) and — 'Bhagwan Appa Wani v. Shivalla Wani', AIR 1927 Nag 248 (249) (D). See also in — 'Ma Ma Nyun v. Maung Mva', AIR 1938 Rang 76 (78) (E). It has been held by Madras and Allahabad High Courts as well as in Sind that such a suit comes under cl. (VI) of Art. 17 of the II schedule which is the same as article 11(VI) of the Indore Court-fees Act. See — 'Mallayya v. Jagannadhamma', AIR 1942 Mad 103 (1) (F); — 'Narain Mohan Dev v. Mt. Krishna Ballabhi Devi', AIR 1935 All 292-293 (G) and — 'Haji Yusuf v. Ghulam Hussain Kassim', 16 Ind Cas 771 (772) (Sind) (H). We respectfully agree with the view taken in these decisions as to the applicability of Art. 17 of II schedule to such cases. In the case before us admittedly Keshav was in joint possession of the family property with Sadashiv. In any case, he had not been excluded from joint possession and accordingly the suit was rightly filed on a plaint whereon a court-fee of Rs. 15/- was paid.

(6) A reference to the opening words of Art. 11 of Indore Court-fees Act will show that the article draws no distinction between an appeal filed by a plaintiff or that filed by a defendant when it arises out of a suit covered by that article. The Indore Court-fees Act is a fiscal statute and must be construed strictly in favour of the citizen. In the present case, the plaintiff was admittedly in possession of the joint family property with another coparcener. Mahadeo and Rangnath were impleaded as defendants. Even though they were not in possession of any portion of the family property an appeal filed by them would be clearly covered by this article. We hold therefore that the court-fee of Rs. 15/- paid on their memorandum of grounds of appeal by Mahadeo and Rangnath is sufficient. The preliminary objection is overruled.

(7) B. K. CHATURVEDI J.: I agree.
B/R.G.D. Preliminary objection overruled.

ORDER: This is an application by one Prakash Sarkar under S. 491, Criminal P. C. Prakash was arrested by Indore Police and detained for two months from 16-2-51 under the orders of the District Magistrate District Indore. He has been detained under S. 3 (1)(a), sub-clause (ii) of the Preventive Detention Act No. IV of 1950. On 26-2-1951 the grounds were supplied to the detenu as required by S. 7 of the said Act. The detenu contended that he is a peaceful citizen and that none of his activities was such as to endanger public tranquillity of the City of Indore. The allegations contained in the grounds are false, vague and extraneous for the purposes of the Act. The grounds did not satisfy the requirements of S. 7, Preventive Detention Act, and hence the applicant's detention is illegal.

(2) It will be necessary to examine minutely the grounds under S. 7, Preventive Detention Act, under which the detenu is kept in detention. In my opinion, the ground No. 5 that the detenu eloped with a girl named Kamala daughter of Chunnilal Koshi, in 1950 and created sensation is absolutely outside the scope of the Preventive Detention Act. The mere fact that the detenu took away Kamala and then married her as stated by the detenu in his affidavit would not endanger public tranquillity of the City of Indore.

So also ground No. 9 that on 6-2-1951 the detenu with Lagu and others and the Socialist Flag in hand staged a demonstration against 25 per cent. cut in ration with a view to create disaffection amongst the labourers, is not at all a ground under S. 7 which could induce the authority to detain a person. In — 'Rajdhar Kalu Patil In re', AIR 1948 Bom 334 (FB) (A), it was held that if a reason is given for the detention of a person which is not within the scope and ambit of the Act conferring power upon the Government to detain then the whole order is vitiated notwithstanding the fact that the other reasons given are good because something may have operated upon the mind of the detaining authority which is foreign and extraneous for the purpose of the Act. This ruling is based on the ruling of the Federal Court reported in — 'Keshav Talpade v. Emperor', AIR 1943 FC 1 (B), wherein Sir Morris Gwyer observed

"if a detaining authority gives four reasons for detaining a man without distinguishing them and any of the 2 or 3 reasons are held to be bad, it can never be certain to what extent the bad reasons operated on the mind of the authority and whether the detention order would have been made at all if only 1 or 2 good reasons had been before him."

(3) Ground No. 2 states that the detenu is a member of the Communist Party which is an illegal body. It further states that the activities of the detenu have all along been subversive and because of such prejudicial and illegal activities, the peace of Indore City is in danger and to prevent the detenu from indulging in any of the activities prejudicial to the public tranquillity it is necessary to detain him under the Preventive Detention Act. Now it will appear from the grounds quoted above that no particulars have been given against the petitioner except the bare statement that he is a member of the Communist Party which is an illegal body. There is absolutely no reference to the nature of activities indulged in by the petitioner apart from the membership of the Communist Party. There is no specification as to what activities have been undertaken by the detenu in pursuance of his being a member of the Communist Party. No particulars have been given of the nature of the activities above indicated. Mere vague and general statement to the effect that the activities are prejudicial and illegal is not enough. The nature of the activities must be indicated in the grounds furnished and some particulars should be given. There is nothing to show that the detenu indulged in activities which were subversive of the public safety and the maintenance of public order after the Communist Party was declared illegal.

(4) In my opinion, the crucial point is that the nature of the activities for which the person has been detained must be specified in the grounds under S. 7 to enable the detenu to make an effective representation. The Provincial Government or the District Magistrate must indicate the nature of the activities and give particulars thereof. In the absence of any indication of the nature of the activities and particulars thereof, the grounds must be held to be no grounds at all. In my opinion, to carry on a propaganda for the removal of 25 per cent. cut in the ration would not amount to such prejudicial or subversive activity as would endanger public tranquillity of the City of Indore. There is no objection to criticise or even to demonstrate against the food policy of the Government and no man can be detained merely because he carries on a propaganda against 25 per cent. cut in the ration. On the whole I am satisfied that some of the grounds supplied to the detenu for his detention in this case are outside the scope and ambit of the Preventive Detention Act and some grounds are vague and indefinite generalisations.

(5) I, therefore, direct that the detenu be released forthwith and set at liberty.

ORDER: This is a petition by the defendant in the suit to revise the order of the Additional District Judge Gwalior refusing to grant the temporary injunction prayed for to the applicant.

(2) The facts of the case are that the plaintiff-non-applicant has instituted a suit in the Court of District Judge Gwalior against the applicant for a partition of joint family property. The defendant is said to be in possession of a joint family Hosiery Factory known as the Trilok Hosiery. Some time after the institution of the suit the defendant made a report to the Police that the plaintiff had stolen yarn belonging to the factory. Criminal proceedings were then instituted in respect of the alleged theft. They resulted in the discharge of the plaintiff who was the accused in those proceedings. During the investigation, the police seized some yarn from Ram Prasad, the plaintiff. As regards this yarn, it was ultimately ordered on 11-5-51 by this Court in Criminal Revision No. 43 of 1951 that the yarn be returned to Ram Prasad from whose possession it was taken. On 12-5-1951, the applicant Ram Swarup presented an application to the lower Court praying that the Court should issue an order of injunction under S. 151 of the Civil P. C. prohibiting the plaintiff Ram Prasad from taking possession of the yarn which was in the custody of the City Magistrate Lashkar and also prayed that the yarn be made over to the applicant. The learned District Judge rejected the application for the grant of injunction holding that the Court had no power under S. 151 to grant injunction and that, therefore, the petitioner's application for the grant of injunction was incompetent.

(3) Mr. Bhagwandas Gupta for the applicant urged before me that even if O. 39 Rr. 1 and 2 do not apply to the facts of this case, there is an inherent power in the Court to issue an injunction if it is satisfied that the applicant has no other remedy and that if injunction prayed for is not issued, the applicant would suffer an irreparable injury.

(4) I am unable to accede to the arguments of the learned counsel for the petitioner. The application for the issue of an interim injunction was made under S. 151, Civil P. C. Obviously, O. 39 Rr. 1 and 2 have no application to the facts of the case, nor was it contended before me that it had any application. In my opinion, the power of subordinate Courts to issue injunctions has been expressly stated in O. 39 and S. 151 of the Code, cannot be invoked to add to the powers conferred by O. 39. It is true that it has been ruled in some decisions that apart from the powers under O. 39 Rr. 1 and 2, the Court has power to issue an injunction under S. 151. — 'Kanshi Ram v. Sharaf Din', AIR 1923 Lah 144 (2) (A); — 'Adaikkala Thevan v. Imperial Bank, Madura Branch', AIR 1926 Mad 574 (B). A different view was taken in — 'Nasarvanji Cawasji v. Shahajadi Begam', AIR 1922 Bom 385 (2) (C). In regard to the cases which hold that O. 39 is not exhaustive of the Court powers to grant to a temporary injunction, it was observed by Varadachariar J. in — 'Murugesu Mudali v. Angamuthu Mudaliar', AIR 1938 Mad 190 (D), that those cases do not give due weight to the words "if it is so prescribed" occurring in the opening paragraph of

S. 94 of the Code. With due respect I find myself in complete accord with Varadachariar J. The word "prescribed" in S. 94 means 'prescribed by the rules contained in 1st Schedule of the Code'. This is clear from the definition of the words "prescribed" and "Rules" given in S. 2 of the Code. Reading, therefore S. 94 and O. 39 together, it follows that the power of a Court to grant a temporary injunction is limited to one prescribed by Rr. 1 and 2 of O. 39. I think it is impossible to hold that in a matter which is specifically dealt with by O. 39, there can be implied in the Court outside the limits of O. 39 Rr. 1 and 2 a general and wider discretion to grant temporary injunctions under Ss. 94 and 151 of the Code in circumstances not covered by O. 39. I do not, however, propose to discuss the question further, because even assuming for the sake of arguments that the Court has power under S. 151 to grant temporary injunctions, there is no justification in this case to exercise that power. The yarn of which the plaintiff is entitled to retain possession under the order of this Court in criminal Petition No. 43 of 1951 was in the plaintiff's possession on 18-1-48 when the criminal proceedings were instituted against him in respect of the theft of yarn. On 27-4-48, the learned District Judge passed an order prohibiting either party from interfering with the possession of the properties held by the other party; the applicant is, therefore, clearly not entitled to say that the yarn which was not proved to be in his possession prior to 27-4-48 and 18-1-48 but which was in possession of the plaintiff-non-applicant, should now be made over to him. No authority has been cited to me to show that the retention by the plaintiff of the yarn under the orders of this Court and consistent with the order dated 27-4-48 of the trial Court would amount to committing an irreparable injury to the petitioner. Learned counsel for the petitioner suggested that if the order of injunction is not given, the plaintiff would be encouraged to disturb the possession of the applicant as regards other property and that the petitioner would not be able to get yarn for the factory from the Controller. I am not impressed with this argument which is hardly relevant to the question of the grant of an injunction in respect of the possession of the yarn. If the plaintiff disturbs the applicant's possession of other property, he is at liberty to complain to the Court that the plaintiff be punished for disobedience of the order made on 27-4-48.

(5) For the above reasons, I think the learned Additional District Judge was right in refusing to grant the temporary injunction prayed for to the applicant.

(6) In the result this revision petition is dismissed with costs.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 236, 237 and 238 — Principal offence and abetment thereof.

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 107 — Abetment, what constitutes.

Under S. 107, I. P. C. it is the instigation to the commission of the act itself which constitutes the offence that is regarded as abetment. To ask a person as a mere threat to fire a gun without intending that he should really fire it, is not to instigate him to fire the gun. The threat would become instigation only if it is found that in the event of the threat having no effect, the gun should in fact be fired. (Para 5) Anno: Penal Code, S. 107 N. 1, 2.

DIXIT J.: The appellant Shri Lal was tried by the Sessions Judge of Morena for offences under Ss. 114, 380, 457 and 302, I. P. C. At the end of the trial, the learned Sessions Judge found him guilty under S. 302 read with S. 109, I. P. C. and sentenced him to six years rigorous imprisonment. The accused has now preferred this appeal from Jail against the conviction and sentence. Mr. J. P. Gupta volunteered to appear on behalf of the appellant and we are indebted to him for helping us in the disposal of this appeal.

(2) The prosecution story, briefly stated, was that on the evening of 22-12-47 at about 7 p.m. the appellant Shrilal, one Hukum Singh & some other seven or eight persons with a view to abduct one Mst. Patha, came to a garden in Morena known as 'Madho Prashad ka garden' where Mst. Patha and the complainant Shriya were staying. It was alleged by the prosecution that Mst. Patha was living with Shriya as his mistress and that Hukum Singh wanted her to live with him. On seeing Shri Lal, Hukum Singh and his companion and hearing their commotion, Mst. Patha closed the door of her room. Thereupon, it is alleged that Hukum Singh asked Mst. Patha to open the door and come out; and that when she did not come out the appellant Shri Lal asked Hukum Singh to fire a gun at her. Accordingly Hukum Singh fired the gun he was carrying through a window of the room and injured Mst. Patha. She died immediately afterwards. In the first information report, which was lodged by Shriya soon after the occurrence, Shri Lal, Lal and Hukum Singh were named as the persons responsible for the crime. According to the prosecution, the appellant was absconding for a long time after the alleged occurrence and the other accused persons Lal and Hukum Singh are still in hiding. The appellant denied his complicity in the crime. He pleaded alibi and also said that he had been falsely implicated on account of enmity.

(3) After hearing the learned counsel for the appellant and the learned Government Advocate, I think the conviction of the appellant must be quashed on the short ground that the learned Sessions Judge was not justified in convicting the appellant of abetment of the offence of murder, on a charge of committing the offence of murder itself. It has already been pointed out by a Division Bench of this Court in — 'State v. Gauri Shanker', Cri. Appl. No. 11 of 1951 (Madh-B) (A), that it is not permissible for a Court to find the accused person guilty of abetment of an offence, when he is charged only with substantive offence. In that case, the Division Bench approving the decision of a Single Bench in — 'Narvir Chand v. the State', AIR 1952 Madh B 17 (B), observed that:

"The ingredients that must be proved for the abetment of an offence are quite different from those required to establish the substantive offence. A charge for the substantive offence as such gives no intimation of a trial to be held for abetment. When a person is accused of a substantive offence, he may not be conscious that he will have to meet an imputation of collateral circumstances constituting the abetment of the substantive offence itself. Again having regard to the omission of any reference to an abetment of an offence in S. 238 (2) (A), Criminal P. C., it cannot be held that an abetment of an offence is a minor offence within the meaning of S. 237, Criminal P. C."

(4) The learned Govt. Advocate sought to distinguish the above case by saying that in the present case the charge framed against the accused distinctly mentioned the fact that he had instigated Hukm Singh to fire the gun by saying 'Kya dekhata hai lage salee ke banduk' and that the accused was also asked to explain in his examination under S. 342 whether he did or did not utter these words. The distinction drawn by the learned Government Advocate is, in my view, not tenable. From what has been said in the cases referred to above of Narvir Chandra and Gauri Shankar, it is clear that the charge framed on the accused must give him an intimation of the fact that on the allegations stated therein he has to meet a charge of the abetment of the offence and not of the substantive offence itself. The accused clearly does not get any notice of the fact that he has to meet a charge of abetment when the facts alleged against him are said to be constituting the substantive offence itself and when the accused is examined as regards those facts in relation to substantive offence, the important point to note is that unless the accused knows precisely the charge he has to meet, he cannot lead his defence properly. It is obvious that if in the present case the appellant had been charged with the abetment of the offence of murder, the whole trend of the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses would have been different and the accused would have concentrated all his efforts in establishing the fact that he did not utter the words attributed to him. As it is, in the mass of the details of the main occurrence deposed to by the various prosecution witnesses, the essential fact of the appellant having instigated Hukm Singh to fire a gun by uttering some words has not been brought out with clarity or precision either by the prosecution or by the defence. It cannot, therefore, be denied that in finding the appellant guilty of the abetment of murder on a charge of the substantive offence itself he has not been prejudiced. The conviction of the appellant must therefore be quashed.

(5) There appears to me no sufficient ground for ordering a retrial of the appellant. He has been in custody for over two years. The evidence on record as to whether the appellant Shri Lal said anything before the gun was fired, and if he did, as to what exactly he said and with what intention, is by no means clear and unassailable. Again, the learned Sessions Judge himself has observed at one place in his judgment that it is possible that when the appellant asked Hukm Singh to fire the gun, he really intended to give a threat to Mst. Patha so that on hearing his words she should open the door, and that it was not his intention that Hukm Singh should actually fire the gun. If this is the conclusion to which the learned Sessions Judge has arrived, it is difficult to understand how he has found the appellant guilty of the offence of abetment by instigation. Under S. 107, I. P. C., it is the instigation to the commission of the act itself which constitutes the offence, that is regarded as abetment. To ask a person as a mere threat to fire a gun without intending that he should really fire it, is not to instigate him to fire the gun. The threat would become instigation only if it is found that in the event of the threat having no effect the gun should in fact be fired. But this is not the conclusion of the learned Sessions Judge.

(6) For all these reasons, I would quash the conviction and the sentence imposed on the appellant and discharge him. He be set at liberty forthwith.

(7) CHATURVEDI J.: I agree.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 435 and 436 — Which Court can revise — Offence committed in railway area.

ORDER: These two revision applications have been filed by Abdul Rahim. He does not know to which Court he is to go to seek redress. He has gone to two Courts — the Sessions Judge Court, Ujjain and the Sessions Judge Court, Indore — and both of them have held that the matter agitated by Abdul Rahim could not be taken cognizance of by them hence the petitioner comes to this Court. He has filed an application in revision against the order of each Sessions Judge. Application No. 122 of 1950 is against the order of the learned Sessions Judge of Ujjain and Application No. 123 of 1950 is against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Indore.

(2) The material facts are shortly stated: Abdul Rahim who lives within the precincts of Ujjain Railway Station filed a complaint against his alleged wife Jumrath and Abdul Rahiman for offences under Ss. 497 and 498, I. P. C. in the Court of the Railway Magistrate Mhow. There are two Railway Magistrates for the whole of Madhya Bharat. One of them has his head quarters at Mhow and the other at Lashkar. All the Railway areas within the State are divided into two circles. The Railway Magistrate at Mhow exercising jurisdiction over one circle and the Railway Magistrate, Lashkar over the other. The Railway area Ujjain is within the circle of Railway Magistrate Mhow. The learned Magistrate discharged the accused under S. 253 (1), Criminal P. C. Dissatisfied with this order the complainant filed a revision application before the Sessions Judge of Ujjain. The learned Judge took the view that inasmuch as the head quarters of the Railway Magistrate Mhow was within the Sessions Division Indore an application for revision of an order passed by that Court can be entertained only by the Sessions Judge Indore. He accordingly refused to entertain the application. When Abdul Rahim approached the Sessions Judge, Indore with a similar application the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Indore took a different view of S. 435, Criminal P. C. For reasons which are not clear the learned Additional Sessions Judge took the view that inasmuch as the offence complained of was committed outside his local jurisdiction an application for revision of an order passed by the Railway Magistrate with respect to such an offence could not be entertained by him.

(3) I have considered the judgment of the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Indore and am of opinion that he is in error in the view taken by him. An application for revision before a Sessions Judge lies under S. 436, Criminal P. C. The relevant portion of that section reads as follows:

"The High Court or any Sessions Judge..... may call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court situate within the local limits of its or his jurisdiction for the purpose of satisfying itself or himself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed.....of such inferior Court....."

(4) It is clear therefore that the power to entertain a revision application against an order passed by an inferior Criminal Court is given to the Sessions Judge exercising jurisdiction over the area where such inferior Criminal Court is situate. The jurisdiction to entertain a revision application is determined by reference to the situation of the Court by which the order sought to be revised was passed. It is determined not with reference to the place where the offence was committed. Accordingly in the instance before us even though the offence was alleged to have been committed in the Railway area at Ujjain the order sought to be revised was passed by the Railway Magistrate Mhow. In view of the provisions of S. 435, Criminal P. C. it is the Sessions Judge of Indore and not the Sessions Judge at Ujjain who has the authority to entertain a revision application against that order. Apart from other grounds the reasons stated above show that the view taken by the Additional Sessions Judge Indore is not correct.

(5) I accordingly accept Revision Application No. 123 of 1950 and set aside the order passed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge Indore. The case shall go back to him with the direction that he should entertain the revision application and dispose it of in accordance with the law.

(6) Criminal Revision Application No. 122 of 1950 filed against the order of the learned Sessions Judge of Ujjain is dismissed.

ORDER : The only point for consideration in this case is whether evidence of any oral agreement can be admitted for the purpose of varying the terms of a contract which has been reduced to writing. Deviprasad petitioner filed a suit against Manohara and Motiram in the Small Causes Court, Gwalior on the basis of a bond for the recovery of Rs. 210/-. The defendants pleaded discharge of the debt by putting in one year's service at the rate of Rs. 10/- a month. The trial Court dismissed the suit of the plaintiff on the ground of discharge. Hence this revision.

(2) The learned counsel for the applicant contends that the bond being in writing its terms cannot be varied by an oral agreement. The bond, no doubt, states that Rs. 24/- will be paid at the rate of Rs. 2/- a month within a year, and Rs. 100/- will also be paid within a year. But the defendants pleaded that subsequently there was an oral agreement by which it was agreed between the parties that Rs. 120/- borrowed under the bond would be paid by defendant 1 serving with the plaintiff for a year as gardener on Rs. 10/- a month. The learned counsel for the applicant contends that oral agreement cannot be proved to vary the terms of a written agreement. Section 92 of the Evidence Act reads as follows:

"When the terms of any such contract, grant or other disposition of property, or any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, have been proved according to the last section, no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted, as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives in interest, for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from, its terms .....

Proviso 4: The existence of any distinct subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify any such contract, grant or disposition of property, may be proved, except in cases in which such contract, grant or disposition of property is by law required to be in writing, or has been registered according to the law in force for the time being as to the registration of document."

Section 92 Evidence Act no doubt lays down that evidence of any oral agreement shall not be admitted as between the parties to any such instrument for the purpose of contradicting, varying or subtracting from its terms. But there are several exceptions to this general rule. Proviso 4 allows oral agreement to be proved to modify the terms of a written contract provided written contract is not required by law to be in writing. The law does not require that a contract of the debt in dispute must be in writing. Therefore, an oral agreement can be proved to modify the terms of a written contract. Vide — 'Durga Datt v. R. J. Wood & Co., Delhi', AIR 1933 Lah 453 (A) and — 'Subba Row v. Narasimham', 27 Mad 368 (B). The contention of the applicant, therefore, has no force.

(3) No other point has been raised in this revision. The revision, therefore, fails. Accordingly the application in revision is dismissed with costs.

Small Cause Revn. No. 32 of 1950, D/- 12-3-1951.

(a) Stamp Act (1899), S. 2 (5) — "Bond" — Definition is not exhaustive — Bond which might require for purposes of Act to be attested, may not require to be attested by law for all purposes — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 68).

A bond which fell under S. 2 (5) (b) held was not a document required by law to be attested as contemplated by S. 68, Evidence Act, and its execution did not require to be proved by producing an attesting witness. AIR 1940 Nag 240 and AIR 1948 Oudh 258, Rel. on. (Para 2)

(b) Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), S. 25 — Interference with findings of fact.

If a finding of fact is perverse the High Court has power to interfere. Interference in regard to appreciation of evidence should, in general, only be exercised when there appears to the Court to be very clear case of misappreciation which has resulted in injustice to a party and makes the decree one that cannot be regarded by a revisional Court as 'according to law'. ORDER: This is a petition in revision by the plaintiff against the decree of the small cause Court Lashkar. The plaintiff alleges that on 9-3-48 the defendant pledged 300 Tolas of imitation silver and borrowed Rs. 300/- on condition of repaying Rs. 303/- after a fortnight. As the defendant failed to repay the money the suit is filed to recover the amount. The trial Court dismissed the suit of the plaintiff. Consequently he has filed this revision.

(2) The learned counsel for the applicant contends that the bond in dispute not being a document required by law to be attested it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove its execution by producing the attesting witness, and as the execution of the document has been proved by other evidence on record the trial Court has erred in law in dismissing the suit of the plaintiff. The bond in dispute is no doubt attested by a witness. The learned counsel for the applicant argues that as the attesting witness was dead he could not be produced. There is, however, no evidence on record to show that it was proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the attesting witness Govind Sunar was dead. We have, therefore, to consider whether it is necessary to produce the attesting witness in order to prove the execution of the bond.

Section 2 (5) of the Stamp Act reads as follows:

" 'Bond' includes:

- any instrument whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another, on condition that the obligation shall be void if a specified act is performed, or is not performed, as the case may be;
- any instrument attested by a witness and not payable to order or bearer, whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another; and
- any instrument so attested, whereby a person obliges himself to deliver grain or other agricultural produce to another:

The bond in dispute no doubt appears to fall within the definition of 'Bond' given in Cl. (b). Therefore, it would appear that it is necessary that a bond must be attested. For one thing, the definition of the 'bond' does not appear to be exhaustive as is clear from the word 'includes'. Besides although for the purpose of Stamp Act it may be necessary for a bond to be attested, it does not follow that a bond is required by law to be attested for all purposes. In — 'Ram Chandra v. Jhibal', AIR 1940 Nag 240 (A), Gruer J. observed as follows:

"The definition, it is to be noted, is not exhaustive, nor is it proper to infer from this definition of 'bond' in the Stamp Act which deals with stamp matters only, that it means that such a document is required by law to be attested. In the case of mortgages and gifts it is clearly so stated in the Transfer of Property Act and in the case of wills in the Succession Act, but a bond as such is not an instrument required by law to be attested. Therefore, it is S. 72, Evidence Act, which applies and not S. 68."

Similar observations were made in — 'Ramdat Ram v. Lalta Prasad', AIR 1948 Oudh 258 (B) by Kaul J. The learned Judge observed:

"Reference was made by the learned counsel for the appellant to the definition of that term as contained in the Stamp Act and the Limitation Act. As pointed out by the learned Judge in the Court below, none of these definitions are exhaustive. The definitions of these Acts are meant only for the purposes of those Acts and cannot be taken to apply generally to the term 'bond'."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that a bond is not a document required by law to be attested as contemplated by S. 68, Evidence Act, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to prove its execution by producing an attesting witness.

(3) In this case the plaintiff has produced Gappa and Nathulal in support of his claim and has also examined himself. Gappa and Nathulal both clearly depose that the defendant pledged certain imitation ornaments and borrowed Rs. 300/- and put his thumb impression on the bond. The learned Judge thought there was a discrepancy in their statements. Gappa has stated that the bond was written in the plaintiff's shop. While Nathulal has stated that it was written in his house. But the learned Judge appears to have over-looked the fact that the shop and the house are not two separate buildings. The front of the building is used for shop and the back of the shop is apparently used for residential purposes. This is clear from the re-examination of Nathulal. The plaintiff also has supported his claim by his statement. In his defence the defendant has examined himself and produced no other evidence. The defendant denies the execution of the bond. From the statements of Gappa, Nathulal and Motiram it is clear that the bond Ex. P/1 was signed by the defendant in their presence. In these circumstances, there is no reason to disbelieve the execution of the document. The learned Judge was prejudiced by the fact that Govind Sunar, the attesting witness, was not produced. But as stated above it is not necessary to prove the execution of the bond by producing an attesting witness. In these circumstances the claim of the plaintiff must be held to be proved.

(4) The learned counsel for the non-applicant argues that this Court cannot interfere with the finding of fact in revision. Section 25, Small Cause Courts Act, gives power to this Court to interfere in the decision of the lower Court if the decision is not according to law. If therefore, a finding of fact is perverse this Court has power to interfere in the decision of the lower Court. In — 'Nathuram Shivnarayan v. Dhularam Hariram', AIR 1921 Bom 407 (C), their Lordships of the Bombay High Court held that although High Court would be averse to interfering under S. 25 on pure questions of facts, it cannot be said that the High Court has no power whatever of interfering with decisions on questions of fact. They further held that interference in regard to appreciation of evidence should, in general, only be exercised when there appears to the Court to be very clear case of misappreciation which has resulted in injustice to a party and makes the decree one that cannot be regarded by a revisional Court as 'according to law'. In — 'Bhagwati Prasad v. Abdul Latif', AIR 1933 All 373 (D) Kendall J. held that the High Court will not interfere in revision with the decision of the lower Court on a pure question of fact unless the judgment of the lower Court is perverse. As pointed above the trial Court was of the opinion that the attesting witness was necessary to prove the execution of the document. But for that impression there is no doubt that the Court would have come to the conclusion that the execution of the document is proved that the claim of the plaintiff is true. As the judgment of the lower Court is perverse I have no hesitation in holding that this Court can interfere in revision.

(5) In the result I allow the revision and decree the suit of the plaintiff for Rs. 307-8-0 with interest at the rate of 3 P. C. P. A. from the date of the decree to the date of the payment. Applicant to get his costs of both the Courts from the non-applicant.

DIXIT J.: This appeal by the defendant arises out of the plaintiff-respondent's suit for a declaration of title and possession of a certain house originally belonging to one Nathu, who died leaving a widow Mahila Gumano. The plaintiff's case is that he and his uncle Nathu were the joint owners of an ancestral house and each of them had half share in the house; that on the death of Nathu, his wife Mahila Gumano contracted a second marriage with one Kunji, and that, therefore, Mahila Gumano forfeited her husband's estate on her remarriage and the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the property as the nearest collateral of Nathu. Mahila Gumano in her defence claimed that she was the exclusive owner of the house having inherited it from her ancestors, and denied the remarriage alleged by the plaintiff. The learned Munsif of Bhind found the remarriage not proved. He also held that the plaintiff had not proved that the house in dispute was the joint property of Nathu and himself. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

On an appeal by the plaintiff, the learned District Judge of Bhind allowed the plaintiff's claim. The District Judge came to the conclusion that the remarriage was established by the evidence on the record and that, therefore, Mahila Gumano forfeited her husband's estate on her remarriage under S. 3, Gwalior Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act of Samvat 1992 and that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the property. In this appeal, learned Counsel for the appellant assails the finding of the District Judge that Mahila Gumano contracted a second marriage with Kunji by saying that the finding is not supported by the evidence on record. It was also argued that the parties are Telis by caste and belong to a community in which remarriage is, by custom, permissible without entailing forfeiture of the widow's estate and that S. 3, Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act does not apply to the case of those widows who are entitled, under the custom of their caste, to remarry. In support of his contention, learned Counsel for the appellant referred us to — 'Bhola Umar v. Mt. Kausilla', AIR 1932 All 617 (FB) (A) and — 'Narain v. Mohan Singh', AIR 1937 All 343 (B).

(2) On behalf of the respondent, it was contended by Mr. Anand Bihari Mishra that the finding of the learned District Judge that Mahila Gumano remarried Kunji was correct; that S. 3, Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act applies not only to widows who could not remarry before the passing of the Act but also to those who were not so precluded from remarrying by the custom of their caste. Counsel for the respondent relied on — 'Gajapathi Naidu v. Jeevammal', AIR 1929 Mad 765 (C); — 'Mahomed Umar v. Mt. Man Koer', AIR 1918 Cal 609 (D); — 'Vithu v. Govinda', 22 Bom 321 (FB) (E) and — 'Suraj Pal v. Uttim Pardey', AIR 1922 Pat 378 (F). It was further said that the defendant was not entitled to say in this court that the remarriage, if any, was under the custom of her caste as she had not pleaded or proved any such custom.

(3) On a consideration of the arguments of the learned Counsel for parties and the evidence on record, I think the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed as, in my opinion, the plaintiff has failed to establish that Mahila Gumano contracted a second marriage with Kunji. The plaintiff sought to prove the remarriage by the evidence of his witnesses Kalyan and Mathuri. (After discussing the evidence of these witnesses the judgment proceeds as follows:) In these circumstances, the bare statement of Kalyan that Mahila Gumano remarried Kunji, can have very little evidentiary value to prove the fact of remarriage.

(4) It is noteworthy that the plaintiff-respondent's claim to the property in suit is based mainly on the provisions of the Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act of Gwalior State. Section 8 of this Act is to the effect that whatever words spoken, ceremonies performed or engagements made on the marriage of a Hindu female, who has not been previously married, are sufficient to constitute a valid marriage shall have the same effect if spoken, performed or made on the marriage of a Hindu widow. It is perfectly clear from this provision that in order to establish the fact of remarriage of Mahila Gumano the plaintiff should have shown that in the case of Gumano's remarriage, the same ceremonies and rites were observed which are necessary to constitute the marriage of a maiden in the Teli community. Section 8, Gwalior Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act is analogous to S. 6, Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act of 1856 in force in Part A States. With reference to S. 6 of the Act of 1856 it has been held in — 'Ram Pearey v. Mt. Kailasha', AIR 1930 Oudh 426 (G) that to prove the remarriage of a Hindu widow the same religious rites and ceremonies that are necessary to constitute her first marriage valid should be shown to have been observed in her remarriage. In the present case there is no evidence, whatsoever, of any such ceremonies or rites. The plaintiff's claim, therefore, based on the alleged remarriage must fail.

(5) In this view of the matter, it is unnecessary to consider the question whether S. 3, Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act applies to the case of those widows who are entitled under the custom of their caste to remarry. In deed, even if it had been held in this case that the remarriage was established, the question of the applicability of S. 3, Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act Gwalior to communities in which remarriage is, by custom, permissible, would not have arisen for consideration. For, the defendant denies altogether the fact of remarriage. She did not plead that the remarriage, if any, was under a custom of her community quite independent of the Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act. Unless such a custom is specifically pleaded and proved, the plaintiff cannot be called upon to prove a custom in rebuttal involving forfeiture of the widow's estate and the question, whether a custom permitting a widow to retain her first husband's property after remarriage can be allowed to prevail and override the provisions of S. 3, Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act, cannot arise. In the absence of any pleading or proof of the custom, any remarriage if proved, must be held to be one under the statutory provisions of the Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act. See 'Bhola Umar v. Mt. Kausilla', AIR 1937 All 230 (H). As the plaintiff has not succeeded in proving the remarriage of Mahila Gumano and as she herself has not pleaded or proved any custom of remarriage in her community, I do not think I would be justified in expressing any opinion on the very controversial question as to the applicability of S. 3 of the Act to widows of the community in which remarriage is permissible. Any such expression of opinion would, in the circumstances and facts of the case, be obiter.

(6) For the above reasons, I would set aside the decision of the learned District Judge of Bhind and restore the judgment and decree of the learned Munsif Bhind dismissing the plaintiff's claim. The defendant's appeal must, therefore, be allowed with costs throughout.

(7) SHINDE J.: I agree.

JUDGMENT: This second appeal arises out of the plaintiff-appellant's suit for the recovery of Rs. 600/- as her share of the profits of certain lands situated in Mouja Bagera for the years Samvat 2000, 2001 and 2002. The plaintiff sought to recover this amount, also in the alternative, as damages for the use and occupation of the lands by the defendants. The plaintiff-appellant sued on the allegations that the land in Mouja Bagera was the ancestral property of a joint family consisting of her deceased husband and the defendants; that she was a recorded co-tenant of the land and had one-third share in it & that since the year Samvat 1997, the defendants were in possession of her share of the land with her permission and that they had not paid to her, her share of the profits of the land for the year Samvat 2000 2001 and 2002 at the rate of Rs. 200/- per annum. It was further stated by the plaintiff that previous to the institution of the present suit, she had instituted a suit for the recovery of the amount of profits for the years Samvat 1997, 1998, 1999 and that the suit was decreed in her favour. The plaintiff pleaded in the alternative that if the defendants be held to be in possession of her share in the land without her permission, then her claim be decreed as damages for the use & occupation of the land by the defendants. The defendant-respondents admitted that the appellant Gangabai was a recorded co-tenant of the land but denied that the land in question was a joint family property or that Gangabai had any share in it. They resisted the suit also on the ground that it was barred by O. 2 R. 2 inasmuch as in the previous suit for mesne profits, the plaintiff Gangabai did not seek the relief of possession of the land, she was not now entitled to claim the possession of the land, and that therefore he could not claim any mesne profits.

(2) The learned Munsiff of Tarana who tried the suit, found that Gangabai was a recorded co-tenant of the land and had one-third share in the profits thereof and was, therefore, entitled to recover Rs. 600/- as her share for the three years from Samvat 2000 to 2002. He also held that the land was the property of the joint family constituted by the defendants and Gangabai's deceased husband. But he dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that Gangabai having failed to sue for possession of the land in the previous suit, her present suit for mesne profits was barred under O. 2 R. 2. In coming to this conclusion, the learned Munsiff followed — 'Saghir Hassan v. Tayab Hasan', AIR 1940 All 524 (A); — 'Mahomed Yunas v. Mt. Jahan Sultan', AIR 1942 Pesh 9 (B) and — 'Tayyab Hasan v. Saghir Hasan', AIR 1939 All 52 (C). The plaintiff, thereupon, appealed to the court of District Judge Shajapur. The learned District

Judge only considered the question of the applicability of O. 2 R. 2 and agreeing with the decision of the trial court on the point, upheld the decree of the trial court dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff has now appealed to this court from the decision of the District Judge Shajapur.

(3) Before me Mr. Samvatsar the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the appellant argued that the decisions relied on by the courts below which related to the recovery of possession and mesne profits of the property from a person in wrongful possession of the property, were not applicable in the present case as the plaintiff Gangabai's suit was not a suit for the recovery of mesne profits from a person in wrongful possession of the land in suit. It was maintained that Gangabai's present suit, as her previous suit, was for the recovery of her share of profits from a co-sharer whose sole possession of the land was the possession of all the co-tenants and who had received the profits of the joint property and who had not paid to the plaintiff her share. Learned counsel for the appellant further argued that Gangabai's previous suit and the present suit were based on different causes of actions; that in the previous suit, the cause of action was Gangabai's title as a co-sharer and the realisation by the defendants of her share of the profits for the years Samvat 1997, 1998 and 1999 and that in the present suit, the cause of action consisted of Gangabai's title and the receipt by the defendants of her share of the profits for the years Samvat 2000 to 2002. In support of this argument, learned counsel placed reliance on — 'Dunichand v. Jagdev', AIR 1949 EP 243 (D). It was also said on the authority of — 'Ram Karan Singh v. Nakchhad Ahir', AIR 1931 All 429 (SB) (E) — 'Tadepalli Ramiah v. Madala Thathiah', AIR 1937 Mad 849 (F) and — 'Venugopal Pillai v. Thirugnanavilli Pillai', AIR 1940 Mad 934 (G) that a claim for possession and a claim for mesne profits were based on different causes of action and that, therefore, even if Gangabai's claim was regarded as one for the recovery of mesne profits from a person in wrongful possession of the land, O. 2, R. 2 could not be a bar to her present claim.

(4) The argument of Mr. Chitale, learned counsel for the respondent, was that in the courts below it was not the case of the appellant that the respondents being her co-sharers, the possession and the receipt of profits by them could not in law be wrongful and that therefore, her right to such profits was not as mesne profits received by a person in wrongful possession but as appurtenant to her right in the share of the property and that, therefore, she was entitled to sue for the recovery of those profits for any period whenever the defendant co-sharers realised her share of profits and withheld them from her. Learned counsel for the respondent drew my attention to the decision of the Indore High Court in an appeal arising out of the previous suit of the appellant Gangabai & said that by that decision Gangabai's claim for the profits of the years Samvat 1997 to 1999 was regarded as a claim for mesne profits and decreed on the admitted fact that the respondents had ousted Gangabai from her rights and denied her claim to a share. It was further said that as the present suit of the plaintiff was framed to fit in with the decision of the Indore High Court in the previous suit, it could not but be regarded as one for the recovery of mesne profits from persons in possession without title. Referring to the tests laid down by the Privy Council in — 'Mahomed Khalil Khan v. Mahoub Ali Mian', AIR 1949 P. C. 78 (H) to determine whether the causes of action in two claims are different or the same, learned counsel argued that the causes of action in Gangabai's former suit and the present suit were the same, namely, the plaintiff's being kept out of possession and that as Gangabai failed to sue for possession in the previous suit, she was not entitled to file a second suit claiming mesne profits for the period subsequent to the previous suit during which she was kept out of possession by the defendant. Learned counsel for the respondents proceeded to say that there was no doubt a conflict of opinion as to whether a suit for the mesne profits bars a subsequent suit for possession or for mesne profits, and commended for acceptance the view that a second suit for mesne profits or possession is barred by O. 2, R. 2 by saying that the contrary view which regarded a claim for possession and a claim for mesne profits as founded on two different causes of action was difficult to reconcile with the opinion of the Privy Council in — 'Naba Kumar Hazra v. Radhashayam Mahish', AIR 1931 P. C. 299 (I) to the effect that a claim for mesne profits rested on the same foundation of facts and law as the right to seek possession of the property. In support of this submission, Mr. Chitale further relied on — 'Channappa Girimalappa v. Bagalkot Bank', AIR 1942 Bom 338 (J) where it is observed that the provision in O. 2 R. 4 C. P. C., that no cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the court be joined with a suit for the recovery of immovable property, except claims for mesne profits or arrears of rent, is a provision "inserted ex abundanti cautela without intending to lay down that the causes of action for possession and for mesne profits or arrears of rent accruing were distinct."

(5) On a prolonged and careful consideration of the arguments of learned counsel for the parties, I have formed the opinion that this appeal must be dismissed.

(6) The identity of the cause of action being the Sine Qua Non to the application of O. 2, R. 2, the main question that arises for determination in this appeal is whether the cause of action in the appellant Gangabai's previous suit for the recovery of profits for the years Samvat 1997, 1998 and 1999 was different from the cause of action in the subsequent suit out of which this appeal arises. If the causes of action in the two suits are the same, then, undoubtedly the plaintiff appellant's present suit must be held to be barred under O. 2, R. 2. The principles governing the applicability of O. 2, R. 2 have been authoritatively laid down in a number of Privy Council and English cases which have been reviewed in 'AIR 1949 P. C. 78 (H)'. Briefly summarised the principles are that

"(1) the correct test in cases falling under O. 2, R. 2 is whether the claim in a new suit is in fact founded upon a cause of action distinct from that which was the foundation for the former suit; (2) the cause of action means every fact which will be necessary for the plaintiff to prove if traversed in order to support his right to the judgment; (3) if the evidence to support the two claims is different, then the causes of action also are different; (4) the causes of action in the two suits may be considered to be the same, if in substance they are identical and (5) the cause of action has no relation whatever to the defence that may be set up by the defendant. Nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour".

(7) Before proceeding to find out on an application of these principles whether the causes of action in Gangabai's previous suit & in the present suit are the same or distinct, it is necessary to bear in mind the distinction between a suit for the recovery of profits of a property from a person who has been in wrongful possession thereof and a suit for the recovery of profits from a person who has realised the profits and who is under an obligation to account and hand over the profits to the plaintiff. Wrongful possession by the defendant is the very essence of a claim in the first type of suit which is a suit for the recovery of mesne profits as defined in S. 2, Cl. 12, Civil P. C., such profits being really in the nature of damages. In the second type of cases, the possession or the receipt of the profits by the defendant is not wrongful and the plaintiff's claim rests on his right to the profits, the realisation of the profits by the defendant and the defendant's obligation to account and pay the profits to the plaintiff. Now when one co-sharer seeks to recover profits from another co-sharer in sole occupation of the common property, the suit may be of either type. He may claim mesne profits because the defendant co-sharer has excluded or ousted him from possession or has challenged his title to joint possession of the property of which they are tenants-in-common. In such a case, in the absence of ouster, the plaintiff co-sharer would not be entitled to any decree for mesne profits. Or, he may, when there is no ouster or exclusion, claim profits from the co-sharer in sole possession on the ground that the defendant co-sharer by reason of his exclusive possession of the property is bound to account to the plaintiff for the profits received by him in excess of his share. Learned counsel for the appellant sought to argue on the authority of — 'Hardit Singh v. Gurumukh Singh', AIR 1918 P C 1 (K); — 'Kimappa v. Manjaya', AIR 1923 Bom 440 (L) and AIR 1949 EP 243 (D) that where co-sharers are entitled to joint possession of immoveable property as tenants-in-common each of such co-sharer is entitled to be in possession of each and every part of the common land and that the exclusive possession of the property by a tenant-in-common is not adverse to his co-tenant and enures for the benefit of all and that, therefore, it is always open to a tenant-in-common to sue a co-sharer who is in the exclusive possession of the common property for the recovery of profits as the right to an account and payment of profits is one implicit in the right to a share in the property. I do not think that any of the cases cited by the learned counsel for the appellant lay down the proposition that even when a co-sharer has been dispossessed or ousted, he 'can' instead of suing for mesne profits, maintain a suit against the co-sharer in wrongful possession for his share of profits and for an account of the profits. The remedy of the co-sharer who is dispossessed must be to sue the other for joint possession and he can claim along with it mesne profits. It is true that the principle of possession between the co-owner is that every co-owner is a tenant-in-common and that the possession of a tenant-in-common is not adverse to his co-tenant and as a general proposition the entry of one co-tenant in the absence of clear proof to the contrary enures for the benefit of all. But it is clear from the observations made in the very cases relied on by the learned counsel for the appellant that where a co-sharer enters into possession of the share of other co-sharer not in his right as a co-tenant but in denial of such right of the co-tenant cannot be said that this possession would enure for the benefit of the other co-sharers whom he has excluded from the enjoyment of the property. A person cannot be a tenant-in-common with a person who has never recognised him as a co-tenant, and claim that the sole possession of such a person is not wrongful.

(8) Turning now to the nature of the two suits of Gangabai it appears to me that in the previous suit which was filed in 1945 Gangabai alleged that she was a co-tenant of the land with the defendants, that the defendants were in the sole possession of the property and had been receiving the profits and had not paid her share to her, and on that basis asked for mesne profits for the years Samvat 1997, 1998 and 1999. The defendant in that suit admitted that she was a recorded co-tenant but claimed exclusive right of possession and title by adverse possession as against Gangabai. The learned Judge in that suit passed a decree in favour of Gangabai for Rs. 200/- as damages for the use and occupation of the land by the defendant. The defendants then appealed to the Indore High Court and took the objection that the suit as framed did not lie as there could be no suit for damages for the use & occupation as between co-tenants. In rejecting this objection and in affirming the decree of the trial court, Rege J., of the Indore High Court said in his judgment:—

"The plaint, it is true, is artistically drafted but it is a common ground that the defendant has ousted the plaintiff from her rights and denied her claim to a share. The formal defect in the plaint, therefore, has not caused any prejudice".

The precise form in which the objection to the plaint in that suit was taken is not clear from the judgment in appeal of the Indore High Court in that suit. But I understand from the observations of the learned Judge reproduced above that the defect in the plaint consisted in Gangabai's omission to state that she had been ousted. The learned Judge however found that as a fact that she has been dispossessed and then decreed her claim as mesne profits. It is thus clear that the foundation of Gangabai's first suit was the wrongful possession of the defendants and her suit was for the recovery of mesne profits. Gangabai may have described in the plaint her claim as one for the recovery of her share of profits, not as mesne profits but as appurtenant to her right in the share of the property. But the true juridical nature of the relationship between her and the defendants was that she was a co-tenant who had been ousted by the defendants. That being so, it was the admitted fact of ouster which furnished a cause of action for her claim to mesne profits.

(9) In the suit out of which this appeal arises, Gangabai seeks to recover Rs. 600/- as profits from the defendants alleging in the first instance that the defendants are in sole occupation of the land with her permission and that, therefore, they are under an obligation to account and pay the profits of her share of the land. In the alternative she pleads that if the defendant's possession be regarded as wrongful since Samvat 1997, her claim may be decreed as damages for the use and occupation of the land by the defendants. It is strenuously contended on behalf of the appellant that on these statements in the plaint, there can be no doubt that Gangabai's present suit is not for the recovery of mesne profits from a person in wrongful possession of the property but is one for the recovery of her share of profits from a tenant-in-common whose sole possession of the land is the possession of all and who has realised the profits of the common property. In my view, having regard to the nature of the previous suit of Gangabai and to the basis on which she secured a decree for mesne profits in that suit, the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant is untenable. Gangabai's first suit being based on the fact of the ouster and the decree for mesne profits in her favour in that suit being made to rest on the finding of ouster, the possession of the defendant-respondent at the institution of the present suit must also be regarded as wrongful. If a co-tenant is in wrongful possession of the property and the court makes a declaration showing that his possession is wrongful then as pointed out by the Privy Council in — 'Subbaiya Pandaram v. Mohamad Mustafa', AIR 1929 P. C. 175 (M), that does not affect the quality of his possession but merely advertises the fact that it is adverse. The appellant Gangabai is bound by the plea she took in her suit of 1943 and by the decision in that suit, and she cannot now say that although she did not pray for the relief of possession in that suit and obtain joint possession of the property, the effect of the decree in her previous suit was to break possession of the defendants so far as it was adverse to her. If as I think and has been found by the courts below the defendant respondent's possession of the land was wrongful at the institution of the suit then Gangabai's claim to the profits she seeks to recover can only be as mesne profits and her present suit cannot on her pleadings be regarded as any other than one for the recovery of mesne profits from persons in wrongful possession of the property.

(10) It is clear from what has been stated above that the facts relied on by Gangabai in her first suit are in substance the same as those on which she seeks to rely in the action with which we are now concerned. The media or the grounds of the suit of 1943 and of the present suit are the same, namely, the plaintiff's title to the land and her dispossession by the defendants which commenced in Samvat 1997. The cause of action therefore, in the present suit is the same as the cause of action in the first. The fact that the previous suit was for the recovery of mesne profits for the years Samvat 1997 to 1999 and the present suit is for the recovery of the profits for the subsequent years makes no difference. To say that because of this fact the cause of action in the two suits is not the same, is to confuse the cause of action with the relief claimed which as stressed by the Privy Council in 'AIR 1949 P. C. 78' (H) is a common error. The period during which the defendant's wrongful possession continued is material only for fixing the extent of his liability for the amount of mesne profits. But the plaintiff's right to recover mesne profits arises out of her title to the property and her right to immediate possession of the property. If the cause of action in the appellant's two suits were not the same the result would be that even if she had failed to establish her right to mesne profits in the first suit, she would have been entitled to file a fresh suit to recover the land or the mesne profits. But this she could not have clearly done for her second suit would have been barred by the plea of res judicata as to her title. The causes of action in Gangabai's two suits being the same, the further point that arises for decision is whether she could have in the first suit claimed in substance any relief which she is seeking in the present suit. It is quite true that as Gangabai's first suit was not for the recovery of possession of the property she could not have under O. 20, R. 12 claimed in that suit future mesne profits. But she could have sued for possession of the land in her first suit. She, however, omitted to do so though she was entitled to joint possession of the land. As the relief of the recovery of possession could have been claimed in the first suit, the relief cannot be granted in a subsequent suit founded on the same cause of action. Again a person is not entitled to a decree for mesne profits, unless he shows that he is entitled to immediate possession of the property. It follows, therefore, that Gangabai having omitted without the leave of the court to sue in the first suit for the recovery of possession in the land, she is now debarred from doing so under O. 2, R. 4(3) and if she cannot now sue for possession, she can have no claim for mesne profits. The view that a claim for mesne profits rests on the same foundation of facts and law as the right to seek possession of the property seems to me supported by the judgment of the Privy Council in 'AIR 1931 P. C. 229 (I)'. It is also supported by the decisions reported in 'AIR 1939 All 52 (C)'; 'AIR 1940 All 524 (A)'; AIR 1942 Pesh 9 (B)' and — 'Hiromal v. Faridkhan', AIR 1915 Sind 35 (N). In these four cases, it has been held that where the plaintiff on being dispossessed of land files a suit for mesne profits only which is decreed in his favour, he cannot subsequently file a suit for recovery of possession of the land and if he is not entitled to possession, he is not entitled to mesne profits also. A contrary view has, no doubt, been taken in — 'Monohur Lall v. Gouri Sunkur', 9 Cal 283 (O) is distinguishable on the ground that in that case it was held on the facts of the case that there were two different causes of action, one arising upon the death of one person and the second cause of action arising upon the death of that person's widow. The decision in — 'Tirupati v. Narasimha', 11 Mad 210 (P) proceeded on the basis that a claim for possession and a claim for mesne profits were separate causes of action. It seems to me difficult to reconcile the view taken in 11 Mad 210 (P) with the observations of the Privy Council in 'AIR 1931 P. C. 229 (I)' to the effect that the right to the rents and profits of a property rests on the same foundation of facts and law as the right to have the possession of the property. With reference to this Privy Council decision it has been observed in 'AIR 1937 Mad 849 (F)' and 'AIR 1940 Mad 934 (G)' that the Privy Council case did not deal with a claim for mesne profits and there is nothing in that decision contrary to the principle laid down in — 'Ponnamal v. Ramamirda Aiyar', AIR 1915 Mad 912 (FB) (Q) that a claim for possession and a claim for mesne profits are distinct causes of action. It is difficult for me to see how the fact that in the Privy Council case there was no question of wrongful possession by the purchaser, affects the general principle indicated in that case that the right to the profits of a property rests exactly on the same facts and law as the claim to the corpus of the property. I am, therefore, not inclined to agree with the view taken in '11 Mad 210 (P)' that a claim for possession and a claim for mesne profits are separate causes of action and that a suit for mesne profits only is no bar to a subsequent suit for possession or mesne profits.

(11) I do not think it necessary to consider in this case the decisions reported in 'AIR 1931 All 429 (S.B.) (E)' and 'AIR 1937 Mad 849 (F)'. These and other cases relied by the appellant are all cases in which a suit for possession had been brought in the first instance and a claim for mesne profits was made in a subsequent suit. These cases are not in point here. I may however, observe that all these cases treat a claim for possession and a claim for mesne profits as distinct causes of action mainly on the wording of O. 2 R. 4, Civil P. C., which provides that no cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immovable property, except claims for mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed or any property thereof. It seems to have been thought that this rule itself recognises a claim for mesne profits and a claim for possession as separate and distinct causes of action. I do not, however, think that the words of O. 2, R. 4 imply this conclusion. I agree if I may say so, with what has been said by Beaumont C. J. in — 'Chanappa v. Bagalkot Bank', AIR 1942 Bom 338 (J) with reference to the wording of O. 2, R. 4. He said that "it may well be that the expression "cause of action" in O. 2, R. 2, has a wider meaning than the expression in O. 2, R. 4. Moreover, the provision in the latter rule may have been inserted ex abundanti cautela without intending to lay down that the causes of action for possession and mesne profits or arrears of rent accruing were distinct." It may also be noted that in AIR 1915 Sind 35 (N) Pratt J.C., after comparing O. 2, R. 4 with the analogous rule of the Supreme Court of England observed:

"There the use of word claim as synonymous with cause of action is probably due to the fact that in the phraseology of the English Law, a plaint is called a statement of claim. The word claim therefore, denotes, not only the demand for relief but the basis on which that demand is made. In the Sind case Fawcett, A. J. C., was inclined to think that O. 2, R. 4 must be read with the provisions of Rr. 1 and 2, and so read, R. 4 only meant that "no claim shall, unless with the leave of the court, be joined with a claim for the recovery of immovable property except ...."

(12) In my opinion, cl. (a) of O. 2, R. 4 means nothing more than that the joinder of claims for mesne profits or rent, being on the same cause of action is not forbidden by the rule. The rule cannot be taken to mean that in all cases a suit for the recovery of immovable property must necessarily be based upon a cause of action different from that in a suit for arrears of rent or mesne profits of the property.

(13) For the above reasons, I am of the opinion that the appellant Gangabai having omitted without the leave of the Court to sue in the first suit for the recovery of possession is precluded from suing for the relief of possession in the present suit, and that as she is not entitled to possession, she cannot also claim mesne profits. The courts below were, therefore, right in holding that the appellant's present suit was barred by the provisions of O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C.

(14) In the result, this appeal must, and is, accordingly, dismissed with costs.

Dineshcharan Muzumdar, Applicant v. The State of Madhya Bharat and another, Opponents.

Civil Misc. Petn. No. 22 of 1952, D/- 18-2-53.

(a) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Writ of mandamus, when issued.

There is no doubt that where a party, who has a legal right to the performance of a legal duty by another party, has no other specific remedy, the High Court will assist him by issuing under Art. 226 an order in the nature of mandamus in order to his obtaining such right. But the Court will not assist him unless he first shows that he has a clear and undisputable right and that justice cannot be done to him without a writ of mandamus being issued. (Para 8)

The object of Art. 226 being the enforcement of fundamental rights and other statutory rights and not the establishment of a legal right, the right of a petitioner to the performance of a statutable duty must be clear and complete. (Para 8)

If the High Court finds itself unable to decide on the rights of the parties and thinks they could be investigated more properly in a civil suit, no direction under Art. 226 can be issued. AIR 1952 SC 12, Foll. (Para 8)

The power under Art. 226 would not be exercised if the petitioner's right depended on facts which were disputed and on the legal effect of facts to be proved. AIR 1952 Madh B 105, Rel. on. (Para 8)

(b) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Other remedy — Burden of proof.

The remedy under Art. 226 is intended to supply defects of justice and to the end that justice may be done and is not intended to supersede the ordinary remedies of law. Ordinarily, therefore, the power under Art. 226 should not be exercised by the High Court if the petitioner has other convenient or adequate remedy. AIR 1952 S C 12 and AIR 1952 Madh B 105, Rel. on. (Para 8)

The burden lies on the applicant asking the High Court to exercise the jurisdiction under Art. 226 to show that he had no other specific and adequate legal remedy or that the remedy of a suit is not convenient, beneficial or effectual and one by which justice could be satisfactorily obtained by him. AIR 1952 Madh B 105, Rel. on. (Paras 8, 12)

The question whether an alternative specific remedy is or is not equally convenient, beneficial and effective has to be considered on the facts and circumstances of each case. AIR 1952 All 753 (FB) and AIR 1952 All 836, Disting. (Para 12)

(c) Gwalior State Civil Service Rules, Smt. 1991 — Right to pension not enforceable right.

The Civil Service Rules are issued neither under a statute, nor by the Ruler of the former Gwalior State and cannot be regarded as having the force of a statute. The fact that the rules used the words 'Haq' (right) and 'isthaqaq' (rights) in relation to pension is not sufficient to constitute the rules a statute or the claim of a public servant to receive a pension an enforceable right. 1927 AC 674 and 1898 AC 782, Disting. (Para 8)

If the Civil Service Rules do not confer on the applicant a statutory right in the matter of pension the payment of pension would be an ex gratia act on the part of the Government, depending entirely on the bounty of the Crown i.e. the head of the State. AIR 1948 PC 121, Rel. on. (Para 8)

(d) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Grounds for urgency of remedy.

The fact that the petitioner is an old man, of itself, is not a decisive reason for exercising the jurisdiction under Art. 226 when the petitioner does not allege that an early payment of the pension due to him is so vital to him that without it he cannot live and maintain his family. (Para 12)

Similarly though the question whether the Gwalior Civil Service Rules confer a statutory right in respect of pension is of some importance to public servants who have earned pensions under the Rules and to whom pension has been denied, it does not make a speedy decision on that question a matter of urgency. (Para 12)

(e) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Issue of writ of mandamus — (Gwalior State Civil Service Rules, Smt. 1991).

Where the right which the applicant is seeking to enforce in the petition does not depend merely on an interpretation and construction of certain Civil Service Rules but substantially rests upon certain doubtful facts which are under adjudication in a civil suit and on a controversial legal effect of the facts which may be held to be proved in that suit, there can be no question of issuing an order or a writ to compel the Government of the State to pass a pension payment order, particularly when the Government is willing to perform the act, but which has for the time being become difficult of performance by reason of the applicant's civil suit. (Para 11)

Moreover, to issue an order in the nature of mandamus directing the Government to pass a pension payment order in such circumstances would be "to create a defect of justice" and "not to supply a defect of justice" as it would amount to a determination of matters which are in substantial litigation in the applicant's suit. (1884) 12 QBD 461, Ref. (Para 11)

(f) Covenants creating United State of Madhya Bharat (1948), Art. 16 (i) — Right of Civil Servants to pension.

Article 16, taken by itself is not enforceable by an individual in the Courts for the reason that the Covenant has not been made a part of law of the State by any enactment. It does not therefore, confer on the Civil Servants retiring after the formation of Madhya Bharat an enforceable right to pension. (Para 13)

(g) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Application.

Article 14 as enacted applies to laws and not to administrative acts, or omissions said to be contrary to any law. AIR 1951 Bom 132, Foll. (Para 13)

(h) Gwalior State Civil Service Rules, Smt. 1991 — Right to pension-contributions by employer.

Pension-contributions made by an employer on behalf of a servant whose services have been borrowed by him, are not a part of the salary and therefore, on retirement, a public servant is not entitled to receive the amount so contributed by his employer. (Para 13)

ORDER: By this application under Art. 226, Constitution of India, the petitioner seeks from this Court an order or a writ in the nature of a writ of Mandamus directing the State of Madhya Bharat to pass a pension payment order in his favour.

(2) The facts as stated in the petition, the return filed on behalf of the Government and the applicant's rejoinder thereto, and which give rise to the present proceedings are as follows:

(3) The petitioner entered the service of the former Gwalior State in 1910 as a ceramic engineer and worked in an institution known as Gwalior Potteries until 1919. In that year the management of the Gwalior Potteries was handed over to the Gwalior Trust Ltd., and the services of the petitioner were lent by the Gwalior Durbar to the Trust. The petitioner continued to work in the Potteries and on 17-9-1920, an agreement was executed between the Gwalior Trust Ltd., and the applicant as regards his employment as the General Manager of the Gwalior Potteries Ltd. — a Joint Stock Company subsidiary to the Trust. The agreement inter alia proved that the petitioner would be employed as the General Manager of the Potteries for a period of ten years beginning from 1-1-1920; that during the continuance of his employment he would get a salary of Rs. 600/- P.M. for the first year and with an annual increment of Rs. 50/-; that he would draw for the fifth and every succeeding year, a maximum salary of Rs. 800/- per month; that he would also be entitled to a commission at the rate of 25 per cent. of the net profits in any year arrived at after deducting the dividend amount and the usual depreciation; that during the continuance of the agreement the Trust would pay to the Gwalior State pension contribution on behalf of the applicant; and that the rules and regulations of Gwalior State Civil Service relating to furlough, leave of absence, sick leave, sick pay and termination of employment due to ill health would be binding on the parties to the agreement.

In 1928 the Gwalior Trust Ltd. was liquidated and the Gwalior Potteries Ltd., was taken over by the State and managed by the State as a separate entity under the name of Gwalior Potteries Ltd. By a resolution dated 26-3-1928 the Board of Directors of the Gwalior Potteries Ltd., continued the agreement of the petitioner's employment with some modifications, which are not material here. In pursuance of an order dated 6-8-1929 of the Council of Regency the Gwalior Potteries Ltd., continued to pay to the State Pension Fund pension contribution on behalf of the applicant. On 1-7-1943 the petitioner's salary was raised to Rs. 900/- P.M. and in the subsequent years it was raised to Rs. 1500/- P.M. In 1945 by a Durbar order dated 26-10-1945 the Gwalior Potteries Ltd., ceased to function as a limited liability concern and was placed on the footing of a State Commercial Concern. The petitioner continued to work in Gwalior Potteries, now a State Commercial Concern, as the General Manager until 1-9-1949, when he was retired.

Thereafter the applicant made a claim on the State for the payment of pension due to him and also for the payment of his share in the profits under the agreement dated 17-9-1920. In reply to his representation with regard to these two claims, the Under Secretary Industries and Commerce Department wrote a letter on 26-1-1950 to the petitioner telling him that his claims for a share in the profits and for a pension were inconsistent and that the pension claim would be considered only if he withdrew his claim with regard to the profits. The petitioner was also told that the contract dated 17-9-1920 did not subsist as he had accepted a salary higher than that provided in the contract; that the petitioner's refusal to hand over to his successor the processes and formulae evolved and used in the Gwalior Potteries constituted "an obstacle to the consideration of his pension case." By that letter the petitioner was also asked to clarify certain matters. On 16-9-1950 the petitioner acknowledged the letter dated 26-8-1950 of the Under Secretary and wrote back explaining at length how the two claims were consistent, and protesting against the delay in the consideration of his claims. In his reply the petitioner also threatened legal action to enforce his claims.

On 14-5-1951 the petitioner served on the Government a notice under S. 80, Civil P. C., as regards his claim for profits on the basis of the agreement dated 17-9-1920. On 16-7-1951 the applicant filed a suit in the Court of Additional District Judge Gwalior against the State of Madhya Bharat claiming his share of profits in respect of the years 1944 to 1949 to the extent of Rs. 2,07,513-9-0. The claim in the suit which is still pending in the Court of the Additional District Judge Gwalior, is based on the agreement dated 17-9-1920. On 10-4-1952 the petitioner served a notice on the Government in regard to his claim for a pension. Therein he mentioned that if the Government failed to pass a pension payment order and pay him the pension amount due to him since the date of his retirement within 15 days of the receipt of the notice, he would move this Court for an appropriate writ. In reply to this notice the Deputy Secretary to Government by a letter dated 7-7-1952 drew the applicant's attention to the letter addressed to him on 26-8-1950 and informed him that his claim for pension was inconsistent with his claim for a share in the profits on the basis of the contract dated 17-9-1920; that he could not simultaneously claim a pension as a Government servant as well as profits as a co-sharer; and that it would be possible for the Government to consider his claim for a pension if he withdrew the suit in respect of a share in the profits.

This reply having been received, the applicant presented this application on 15-7-1952. He says that by reason of his length of service and the amounts contributed on his behalf from time to time to the pension fund he is entitled under the Gwalior State Civil Service Rules Samvat 1991 to a monthly pension of Rs. 618-5-4. He asks for an order or a writ in the nature of a writ of mandamus directing the opponents to issue an order with regard to the payment of pension to him.

(4) Mr. Sinha learned counsel for the petitioner contended that the Gwalior Civil Service Rules Samvat 1991 by which the petitioner's case was governed was a statute; that under Rr. 3 and 119 of the Civil Service Rules a civil servant of the former Gwalior State after thirty years' service could claim as of right a pension; that the applicant who was retired after a service extending over thirty years had thus acquired a statutory right to pension which could be enforced in a Civil Court of Justice. While conceding that the applicant held his office until the formation of Madhya Bharat during the pleasure of the Ruler of the Gwalior State and thereafter during the pleasure of the Rajpramukh, learned counsel for the petitioner said that this fact did not affect his right to pension and that as the matter of pension was covered by the statute, namely the Gwalior Civil Service Rules enacted by the Ruler of the former Gwalior State, it could not be said that the applicant's claim for pension was on the bounty of the sovereign power or that no pension could be claimed except as a matter of grace or that the applicant had no legally enforceable right in regard to pension. In support of this contention learned counsel relied on — 'Attorney General v. De. Keyser's Royal Hotel', 1920 A. C. 508 (A) — 'Wigg v. Attorney General for the Irish Free State', 1927 A. C. 674 (B); — 'Smyth v. The Queen', 1898 A. C. 782 (C). It was further said that the provision regarding payment of pension on retirement in the Gwalior State Civil Service Rules was manifestly intended for the protection and benefit of the retired officers and it imposed a public duty of a purely ministerial character on the State and that the State was under an obligation to discharge the duty by passing a pension payment order for the benefit of the applicant, and could not evade it. A reference was made in this connection to the observations of Lord Cairns in — 'Julius v. Lord Bishop of Oxford', (1880) 5 A. C. 214 (D). Learned counsel proceeded to argue that the petitioner's claim for a share in the profits, which is now the subject matter of a suit, has no relation to the claim for pension; that whereas the right to pension is a statutory right arising under the Gwalior State Civil Service Rules, the claim for a share in the profits is based on a contract, which is binding on the State as the successor in business of Gwalior Potteries Ltd., and that the opponent State is, therefore, not justified in withholding the payment of pension of the petitioner by saying that the two claims are incompatible with each other or that the pension amount cannot be determined unless and until the applicant's suit for a share in the profits is decided or withdrawn.

It was further submitted that the refusal of the State to pass a pension payment order on the ground that the petitioner did not hand over to his successor certain formulae and processes and on the ground that the petitioner during the period of his service with the Government worked as a Managing Director of the Gwalior Potteries Ltd., Delhi and received remuneration from that concern, was mala fide; that the formulae and processes were the property of the petitioner and the demand that they should be handed over to the successor had no basis in law and that the petitioner's association with the Gwalior Potteries Ltd., Delhi was under an order of Gwalior Durbar which the Madhya Bharat Government at no time during the petitioner's service cancelled. Learned counsel also urged that the withholding of the pension payment and of the amount contributed from time to time by the petitioner to the pension fund was an infringement of the petitioner's fundamental right to property granted by the Constitution and was an act of confiscatory nature. Relying on — 'Yick Wo v. Hopkins', (1886) 118 U. S. 356 (E) learned counsel argued that it was also discriminatory. Lastly it was said that the petitioner was an old man of 70 years of age and if he were to file a suit to enforce his right to pension, it was doubtful whether in his life-time it would be finally decided; that, therefore the remedy of a suit was not a convenient, effectual and beneficial remedy in the present case and it was in the interest of justice that the petitioner's right to pension, which was a question of considerable public importance should be decided by this Court in these proceedings.

(5) On behalf of the State the learned Advocate General did not dispute that the petitioner was entitled to a pension as a public servant. He, however, contended that the applicant had no right in law enabling him to bring this petition for enforcing his pension claim. It was said that the applicant like all other public servants of the State held his position during the pleasure of the head of the State and that consequently payment of pension to a public servant was not a matter of legal right vesting in a public servant but was an act of grace of State policy on the part of the ruling power. This right of the State to pay pension at pleasure could not be derogated from by any rules framed by the Government as to the circumstances in which a pension could be earned by a Civil Servant; that the only manner in which this overriding right of the head of the State could be limited or modified was by a statute.

It was further urged that the Gwalior Civil Service Rules had no statutory force; they were not rules framed under any statute; nor were they rules framed by the Ruler of the former Gwalior State. The rules were merely administrative rules for the guidance of the officers of the Government laying down the conditions, the circumstances, the manner and the method in which a pension could be earned, computed and paid to a Civil Servant. The learned Advocate-General proceeded to say that the Civil Service Rules did not confer any statutory right on a civil servant in regard to pension, that they were based on the principle of pension being a ex gratia payment made to a public servant for maintaining the dignity of his office or to assure the due discharge of his duties. It was pointed out by the learned Advocate-General that under Rr. 2 and 3 of the Gwalior Civil Service Rules the Government reserved to itself the right of changing the rules from time to time, at its discretion and of interpreting their meaning in case of a dispute and that a Government servant's claim to pension was regulated by the Rules in force at the time of his retirement and not by the rules in force at the time of his entry in the service; that under R. 92 future good conduct was made an implied condition to every grant of a pension and the Government reserved to itself the right of withholding or withdrawing pension or any part of it, if the pensioner was convicted of serious crime or found guilty of grave misconduct; that under R. 139 pensions were exempted from attachment. It was said that these provisions showed that the payment of pension to a civil servant was entirely within the discretion of the Government and that a claim in regard to pension was not a claim in respect of a contractual debt which could be asserted in the law Courts; that the Civil Service Rules gave to the applicant no more than a right to put forward his claim before the Government in respect of a pension and to receive such pension as the Government might award to him and that if the applicant thought that his pension was being withheld unjustly & contrary to the Civil Service Rules, he was not entitled to come to this Court; his remedy was by an appeal of a financial or political kind to the Administrative Authorities. For this purpose reference was made to the cases of — 'Rangachari v. Secretary of State', AIR 1937 P. C. 27 (F); — 'Venkata Rao v. Secretary of State', AIR 1937 P. C. 31 (G); — 'High Commissioner for India v. I. M. Lall', AIR 1948 P. C. 121 (H) and — 'Lilawati Mutatkar v. State of Madhya Bharat', AIR 1952 Madh B 105 (I). Learned Advocate-General sought to distinguish the cases reported in — '1927 A. C. 674 (B)' and — '1898 A. C. 782 (C)' relied upon by the petitioner by saying that those cases dealt with statutes conferring a right of pension and laid down that where there was a statutory right to pension, an aggrieved public servant to whom no pension has been paid could enforce his right in a Court of law; that those cases were not authorities for the proposition that apart from a statutory right an action would lie.

(6) In reply to the contention advanced on behalf of the petitioner that the withholding of pension and of the pension contribution amount from him was an act of confiscation and discriminatory nature the learned Advocate-General said that the pension contribution amount was not in any sense a part of the remuneration paid to a public servant, that the petitioner could not claim the refund of the amount; that as there was no refusal on the part of Government to pay a pension to the petitioner but only delayed action there was no confiscation or infringement of the petitioner's right to pension; that as the petitioner was not challenging the validity of any law but only complaining against Government's inaction in passing a pension payment order under the Civil Service Rules, the petitioner could not seek protection under Art. 14 of the Constitution, which applied to laws and not to administrative acts or omissions alleged to be contrary to any law. As to the case of — '(1886) 118 U. S. 356 (E)' cited by the learned counsel for the applicant, the learned Advocate-General stated that it did not support the contention of the applicant that a specific mala fide action of an officer could be challenged by a petition in support of the fundamental right guaranteed under Art. 14, that it only illustrated the case of a statute, which may be valid on its face and yet in its actual administration be so arbitrary, unequal and unfair as to be unconstitutional.

(7) The relief asked for by the petitioner was stoutly opposed by the learned Advocate-General also on the ground that in the present case there was no refusal on the part of Government to grant a pension to the applicant but only a delay in passing an appropriate order; that the delay had been occasioned by the petitioner himself who put forward inconsistent claims as regards pension as well as a share in the profits; and that the delay was now inevitable because the petitioner had filed a suit for enforcing his claim as regards a share in the profits. It is further submitted by the Advocate-General that in the Civil Suit the applicant has claimed on the basis of the contract dated 17-9-1920 which was to be in force for a period of ten years a share in the profits earned by the concern right upto the date of his retirement and that if in that suit it is held that the contract subsisted even after the expiry of the ten years and when the Gwalior Potteries became a purely government concern, and was binding on the Government and that the petitioner's employment right upto the date of his retirement was governed by that contract, then the question would arise whether in view of the provisions of R. 4 of the Civil Service Rules, which excludes from the purview of the rules a civil servant with whom there was a covenant as regards salary, leave, pension, allowance, the applicant is at all entitled to any pension under the Civil Service Rules; and that even assuming that the petitioner would be entitled to a pension in addition to profits, a further question that would arise for consideration would be whether the pension should be computed on the basis of the salary permissible under the contract or on the basis of the higher salary actually drawn by the petitioner. It was said that in these circumstances if we were to ignore the contract which is now the subject-matter of a suit, take the view that the petitioner was entitled to pension and to mandamus, the State to pass a pension payment order, and if the Civil Court were to take the view referred to above as to the operation of the contract, there would be a conflict of decisions. It was urged that an order in the nature of mandamus should not be issued when there is a willingness on the part of the Government to pay a pension to the applicant, and when the petitioner's act of filing a suit claiming a share in the profits has rendered a prompt performance of the duty sought to be enforced difficult of performance for the time being, and when this Court's command is likely to be rendered nugatory by a decision of the Civil Court in the applicant's suit. It was finally urged on behalf of the State that even assuming that the petitioner has a legally enforceable right as regards pension yet according to the rule which has always been acted upon in this Court an order or writ in the nature of mandamus should not be made in respect of the claim because the applicant has another convenient and sufficient remedy. It was said that except stating that he was an old man and that the question whether under the Gwalior Civil Service Rules a public servant has statutory right to pension was a question of public importance, the petitioner had made no attempt whatsoever to show how the remedy of a suit was not equally specific, effectual and convenient.

(8) On giving the matter my anxious and careful consideration, I have formed the view that this is not a case in which an order or a writ in the nature of mandamus ought to be issued from this Court. There is no doubt that where a party, who has a legal right to the performance of a legal duty by another party, has no other specific remedy, this Court will assist him by issuing under Art. 226 an order in the nature of mandamus in order to his obtaining such right. But the Court will not assist him unless he first shows that he has a clear and undisputable right and that justice cannot be done to him without a writ of mandamus being issued. The object of Art. 226 being the enforcement of fundamental rights and other statutory rights and not the establishment of a legal right, the right of a petitioner to the performance of a statutable duty must be clear and complete. In the case of — 'State of Orissa v. Madan Gopal Rungta', AIR 1952 S. C. 12 (J), their Lordships of the Supreme Court stressed the point that the existence of a legal right was the foundation of the exercise of the jurisdiction under Art. 226 and observed that if the High Court found itself unable to decide on the rights of the parties and thought they could be investigated more properly in a Civil suit, no direction under that Art. 226 of the Constitution could be issued. It was also pointed out in that case that ordinarily the power under Art. 226 should not be exercised by the High Court if the petitioner has other convenient or adequate remedy. Following that decision it was held by this Court in — 'AIR 1952 Madh. B. 105 (I)' that the burden lay on the applicant asking this Court to exercise the jurisdiction under Art. 226 to show that he had no other specific and adequate legal remedy and that the power under Art. 226 would not be exercised if the petitioner's right depended on facts which were disputed & on the legal effect of facts to be proved.

In the earlier case of — 'Harendranath Sharma v. The State', AIR 1950 Madh B 46 (K) which was affirmed in — 'Dayabhai v. Regional Transport Authority', AIR 1951 Madh. B. 121 (L) by making the observation that the object of Art. 226 in giving to the High Court the discretionary jurisdiction to issue certain directions or writs or orders was to secure the protection of the rights of the public and to ampliate justice and redress grievances in any matter which the ordinary course of law was defective to reach, I attempted to make it amply clear that the remedy under Art. 226 was intended to supply defects of justice and to the end that justice may be done and was not intended to supersede the ordinary remedies of law.

The rule governing the discretion of the Court in the matter of an issue of writ of mandamus has been stated clearly by Brett, M. R.
in — 'The Queen v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue', (1884) 12 Q. B. D 461 (M). Explaining the observation of Lord Mansfield in —
'Rex v. Bank of England', (1790) 2 Douglas 524
(N) that "when there is no specific remedy the Court will grant a mandamus that justice may be done", he said that the construction of that sentence was that where there was no specific remedy and by reason of the want of that specific remedy justice could not be done unless a mandamus was to go, then a mandamus would go. The principle that it is incumbent upon the party applying for a writ of mandamus to show that he has a clear legal right has also been laid down in a number of American decisions. In Corpus Juris Vol. 38 (1925 Edition) it is stated at page 582 that:

"Since the purpose of a writ of mandamus is not to establish a legal right but to enforce one which has already been established, the legal right of plaintiff or relator to the performance of the particular act of which performance is sought to be completed must be clear and complete. Indeed it has been said, and with good reason, that the right to its performance must be so clear as not to admit of reasonable doubt of controversy".

Again at page 585 of the same volume it has been observed that:

"Mandamus will not issue to enforce a right which is in substantial dispute, or which is inchoate or prospective, or as to which a substantial doubt exists although objections raising mere technical questions will be disregarded if the right is clear and the case meritorious. Likewise mandamus will not issue to enforce a right which is contingent upon the further act of a third person or tribunal. However, it has been held that the rule that mandamus will not lie to enforce a doubtful right does not apply where the doubt is one arising upon the mere construction of a Statute or judicial order, or a legal doubt as to the effect or meaning of a record".

On these well settled principles, the question which arises and which we have to determine first is whether the petitioner has succeeded in showing that he has a clear and indisputable right to pension. The petitioner founds his claim mainly on the Gwalior State Civil Service Rules Samvat 1991 and says that these rules, which have a statutory force, confer on him a statutory right to get a pension and impose a statutory duty on the opponent to pay him pension. In the absence of any attempt on the part of the learned counsel for the petitioner to show by reference to the law and custom of the former Gwalior State that the right in the Gwalior Government to make these rules was given by a law enacted by the Ruler of the Gwalior State or existed without the necessity of any such enactment, it is difficult to see how the Civil Service Rules issued neither under a statute, nor by the Ruler of the former Gwalior State and having the characteristics pointed out by the learned Advocate-General, can be regarded as having the force of a statute. The fact that the rules use these words 'Haq' (right) and 'isthaqaq' (rights) in relation to pension is not, I think, sufficient to constitute the rules a statute or the claim of a public servant to receive a pension an enforceable right. The cases reported in '(1927) A. C.

p. 674 (B)' and '(1898) A. C. page 782 (C)' and cited by the learned counsel for the applicant would apply only when it is held that the Civil Service Rules confer on the applicant a statutory right in the matter of pension. Otherwise the payment of pension to the applicant would be an ex gratia act on the part of the Government and would fall within the rule laid down in the case of — 'A. I. R. 1948 P. C.
121 (H)' in which following the observations of Lord Blackburn in — 'Mulvenna v. Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty', 1926 S. C.
842 (O) the Privy Council held that the payment of arrears of salary to a public servant was entirely on the bounty of the Crown i. e. the head of the State. The same rule applies to pensions. I say so much upon this point and no more because of the objection, which has been raised by the learned Advocate-General and which I think must prevail, that if the petitioner thinks that he has a statutory right to pension enforceable against the State in a Court of law, he has the remedy of a suit and that the Government though willing to pass an appropriate order as regards the pension due to the applicant, is now unable to do so till the applicant's suit for profits is decided.

(9) It is not disputed that the petitioner entered the service of Gwalior State in 1909; that in 1920 his services were lent to the Gwalior Trust Ltd., and an agreement was executed between him and the Trust as regards the terms of his employment. It is also clear that on the dissolution of the Trust the Gwalior Potteries though functioning as a limited liability concern was practically a State concern and that in any case it was so after 26-10-45
when the limited liability concern went in liquidation under a Durbar order, and during all these years the applicant continued to work with the Potteries. It is also not in dispute that on the basis of the agreement dated 17-9-1920 which provided that it was to be operative for a period of ten years and which governed the terms of the petitioner's lent services with the trust, the applicant has filed a suit claiming a share in the profits of the concern from 1944 to the date of his retirement in 1949. The foundation of the petitioner's claim in the civil suit is that the agreement dated 17-9-1920 between him and the Gwalior Trust Limited remained in force right upto the time of his retirement in 1949; that on the dissolution of the Trust it became binding on the Gwalior Potteries Ltd., and that on the Gwalior Potteries Ltd., becoming a purely State Concern, in 1946 the Gwalior Government became bound by that agreement; and that, therefore, the Madhya Bharat Government as the successor Government was liable to pay his share of profits under the agreement. From the record of the civil suit it appears that the fact of the applicant's retirement on 1-9-1949 is not in dispute. But an issue has been framed as to whether on this date the applicant retired from the service of the Gwalior Potteries and from the post of the General Manager of the concern. The question as to whether the agreement dated 17-9-1920 remained in force after the expiry of the period of ten years stipulated in the contract is also in issue. There is also a general issue as to the liability of the State to pay to the applicant any profits. The question whether the applicant having accepted a salary higher than that provided in the contract and having worked for another concern during his employment with the Gwalior Potteries contrary to the contract is entitled to the benefit of the contract is also the subject-matter of an issue in the suit. In the written statement the Government have taken the plea that the applicant's claim for profits is inconsistent with his claim for pension. But no issue seems to have been framed as regards this plea.

(10) The capacity in which and the service from which the petitioner retired is itself thus in dispute in the suit. If it is held in the civil suit that the agreement dated 17-9-1920 after the expiry of its term was not binding on the Gwalior Potteries Ltd., and on the Gwalior Government when the Potteries became a State concern, then the nature, terms and conditions of the petitioner's service from 1909 to 1949 and his claim for pension would be easy of determination. If, on the other hand, the civil Court accepts the applicant's case in the suit and in effect holds that the petitioner's employment with the Potteries even when it became a purely State concern and right up to the date of his retirement was covered by the agreement, then I think, it could with considerable degree of force be contended, as the learned Advocate-General did, that by reason of R. 4 of the Civil Service Rules the petitioner was not entitled to the benefit of pension under the rules and that even if he was entitled it would be on the basis of the contractual salary and not on the basis of the higher salary actually drawn by him. In answer to the contention of the learned Advocate-General that the applicant's claim to pension was now dependent on the result of the suit, learned counsel for the petitioner attempted to put in an attractive way the case of the petitioner on the point by saying that the petitioner's right to pension from State, being qua State was distinct and independent from his claim to profits from the State as successor in business of the Gwalior Potteries Ltd., and that the opponent State in asking the petitioner in their letters to withdraw his claim for profits before his claim for pension could be considered was trying to avoid a decision by a Court of law on the merits of the petitioner's claim for profits and was adopting an unwarranted and unjustified attitude.

In fairness to the learned Advocate-General it must be stated that he candidly admitted that the tone of letters dated 26-8-1950 and 7-2-1952 addressed by the Government to the petitioner smacked of brow-beating. But he said, however unfortunate the language of the letters was, all that was intended by the Government was to impress on the petitioner the fact that it was not possible for the Government to consider his pension claim so long as his suit for profits was not decided. I am myself inclined to think that the Government's point of view could have been brought home to the applicant without the use of minatory language. However, to revert to the reply of the applicant's learned counsel, here again, I think, as the applicant is claiming in the suit a share in the profits also of the years 1946 to 1949 that is of a period not covered by that stated in the agreement and during which the Potteries was run purely as a State concern, the question whether the petitioner was seeking to make the Government liable for his claim in respect of profits as a Government or as a successor in business of the Gwalior Potteries Ltd., is a part of the very issue as regards Government's liability to pay to the petitioner profits, into which the civil Court has to enquire. To a question put by the Bench counsel for the applicant was unable to clarify the basis on which the applicant was claiming a share in the profits of the years 1946 to 1949.

(11) It is thus plain that the right which the applicant is seeking to enforce in this petition does not depend merely on an interpretation and construction of the Civil Service Rules. It substantially rests upon certain doubtful facts which are now under adjudication in the civil suit and on a controversial legal effect of the facts which may be held to be proved in that suit. Until that suit is determined, it is difficult to say whether the petitioner is entitled to any pension and if he is entitled on what salary basis and at what rate he is entitled to a pension. In these circumstances there can be no question of issuing an order or a writ to compel the opponent to pass a pension payment order, which act, as the learned Advocate-General says, Government is willing to perform, but which has for the time being become difficult of performance by reason of the applicant's civil suit for profits. Again in the circumstances stated above to issue an order in the nature of mandamus directing the Government to pass a pension payment order, would be to use the words of Bowen L. J. in '(1884) 12 Q B D 461 (M)' "to create a defect of justice" and "not to supply a defect of justice". Because it would amount to a determination of matters which are in substantial litigation in the applicant's suit for profits.

(12) There is a further consideration which leads me to the conclusion that the relief asked for by the petitioner cannot be granted. Assuming in favour of the applicant what I do not myself think for the moment is established, that the petitioner has a statutory right to pension under the Gwalior Civil Service Rules and the Government is under a statutory obligation to pay him a pension, then the petitioner has the remedy of a suit to enforce his right. From the cases I have already referred to, it will be apparent that a heavy onus is thrown on the applicant to show that the remedy of a suit is not convenient, beneficial or effectual and one by which justice could be satisfactorily obtained by him. The question which arises is whether he has discharged that onus. We were pressed by counsel for the applicant on the authority of — 'Prabhawati Devi v. District Magistrate, Allahabad', AIR 1952 All 836 (P) and — 'Buddhu v. Municipal Board, Allahabad', AIR 1952 All 753 (Q) to hold that the remedy of a suit was really no remedy at all to meet the grievance of the petitioner on the ground that the applicant is an old man and that the case raises a question of public importance. I do not think much assistance can be derived from these cases in determining whether the remedy of a suit is in the present case an adequate or an inadequate remedy. For, after all the question whether an alternative specific remedy is or is not equally convenient, beneficial and effective has to be considered on the facts and circumstances of each case.

In the Allahabad case the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court thought it fit to direct under Art. 226, the District Magistrate not to give effect to an order passed by him requisitioning a newly constructed house because the petitioner in that case had built the house with a view to live in it and pass her old age and widowhood in piety in the holy city of Allahabad and because no alternative suitable accommodation had been provided to her. The other case which dealt with the validity of a municipal bye-law prohibiting slaughter of cows, bulls etc. is also similarly distinguishable on facts. No such considerations as those which existed in the cases cited by the learned counsel for the applicant are present here to impel us to treat this matter of pension as one of urgency. The petitioner is no doubt an old man. That, of itself, is not a decisive reason for exercising our jurisdiction under Art. 226 when the petitioner does not allege that an early payment of the pension due to him is so vital to him that without it he cannot live and maintain his family. I do not agree that this case raises a question of public importance requiring an early decision from this Court. The question whether the Gwalior Civil Service Rules confer a statutory right in respect of pension is no doubt of some importance to public servants who have earned pensions under the Rules and to whom pension has been denied. But this does not make a speedy decision on that question a matter of urgency. For whatever justification there may be in the allegation that officers responsible for passing pension payment orders are generally inclined to make difficulties and perhaps be contumelious and hostile, and delay the making of an order, one is yet fortunately able to say that cases of capricious and arbitrary denial of pensions are very rare indeed.

(13) In view of what I have said above, it is really unnecessary to consider the argument put forward on behalf of the applicant that the opponent's act in withholding pensions and the amount of pension contribution from the applicant is an act of confiscatory and discriminatory nature. But I think it is right to say that the argument is based on the assumptions that the petitioner has a statutory right to pension and that the opponent has infringed that right. As I have indicated above the applicant has not been able to show conclusively that the Gwalior Civil Service Rules under which he claims a pension is a statute. During the course of his argument counsel for the applicant suggested that Art. XVI of the Covenant creating the United State of Madhya Bharat guaranteed the payment and continuance of pensions and that, therefore, the right to pension was a statutory right. As to this it is sufficient to say that Cl. (i) of that Article guaranteed the continuance in service or the payment of reasonable compensation to the permanent members of the public service of each of the Covenanting States. The Article did not confer on the Civil Servants retiring after the formation of Madhya Bharat an enforceable right to pension. That Article taken by itself is not enforceable by an individual in the Courts for the reason that the Covenant has not been made a part of law of the State by any enactment. Again there has been no refusal to pay a pension to the applicant; and it seems to me quite impossible to suggest that pension contributions made by an employer on behalf of a servant whose services have been borrowed by him, are a part of the salary and that, therefore, on retirement a public servant is entitled to receive the amount so contributed by his employer. The petitioner cannot really challenge the omission, according to him, on the part of the Government to pass under the Gwalior Civil Service Rules a pension payment order as contravening Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. This article as enacted applies to laws and not to administrative acts, or omissions said to be contrary to any law. If any authority is needed for this proposition I refer to the case of — 'Dhanraj Mills Ltd. v. B. K. Kochar', AIR 1951 Bom 132 (R). In that case the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court after distinguishing the decisions in '(1886) 118 U S 356 (E)', made the following observations with which I am in respectful agreement. They said:

"Now a clear distinction must be borne in mind between the law and the administration of the law. If the law itself permits discrimination even though the law may appear to be fair and undiscriminatory, the Court may interfere and say we are more concerned with how the law actually works rather than how it appears in black and white in the statute book. One may even have a case where in exercising the discretion vested in officers under the statute the State may, as a policy of administration, require its officers to exercise the discretion unfairly and unequally. We can imagine that even in such a case the Court may interfere and say that although administrative orders are being challenged, the administrative orders suggest behind them a policy of the state of discrimination. But to our mind the position is different when a subject comes to the Court and challenges a specific act of an individual officer as being in contravention of Art. 14. The officer in acting contrary to Art. 14 is really acting contrary to the law and not in conformity with or in consonance with the law. When the law invests an officer with a discretion, the law assumes that the officer will exercise the discretion bona fide and not dishonestly, arbitrarily or capriciously, and if he exercises the discretion dishonestly, arbitrarily or capriciously, he is really going contrary to the law. In such a case the subject comes to Court not for protection under Art. 14, but for protection against the dishonest, arbitrary or capricious act of the officer. The Court is not powerless to give the subject protection against a dishonest officer, but that protection cannot be sought under Art. 14 or under Art. 226."

(14) For all these reasons in my judgment, this application fails and must be dismissed. As we have not considered this application on the merits, the points raised by the applicant are entirely at large and the civil Court before whom the applicant's suit for profits is pending need not itself feel bound by the opinion expressed by us in this order.

(15) The consequence is that this application fails and is dismissed. In the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs of this application.

Madhya Bharat Gambling Act (51 of 1949), S. 6 — Presumption under — Duty of Court — Consideration of material or circumstances — Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 6.

From the expression "the seizure of such an instrument or thing shall be evidence until contrary be made to appear" it necessarily follows that if the contrary be made to appear which is clear and distinguishable from saying that until the contrary is proved the presumption referred to in the section ought not to be raised.

(Para 10)

Anno: Public Gambling Act, S. 6 N. 1.

L. S. Shukla, for Petitioners; P. R. Sharma, Govt. Advocate, for the State.

ORDER: Narsing along with seven others was convicted on a summary trial under S. 4, Gambling Act by the learned Municipal Magistrate, Indore, for an offence under the Gambling Act and sentenced to one month's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200/- each. Soniram who was accused No. 4 was further convicted under S. 3, Gambling Act, and sentenced to one month's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200/- for that offence. Both the sentences of imprisonment were to run concurrently in his case. An appeal preferred by them to the Sessions Judge of Indore was dismissed; hence this revision application.

(2) The material facts lie within a short compass: On the night of the last Diwali festival Sub-Inspector Chaturbhuj of Police Station Bada Sarafa received information that gambling was going on in a certain house in his circle. He satisfied himself as to the correctness of the information received and raided the house. He took with him besides others, Head Constable Balmukund and two Panchas who appear to have been picked up by him on the way. They reached the house in question whereof the exit door was found open. On the first floor they found the eight accused in a closed room. It is alleged that they peeped through a chink in the door and found the accused gambling with playing cards. They were stated to be playing a game of Mang Patta. The Sub-Inspector got the door opened. The raiding party according to the evidence of the prosecution witnesses permitted its members to be searched before entering the room. When the room was searched by the Police a pack of playing cards (52 in number) and a sum of Rs. 77-14-9 were recovered. Some change was found lying in front of the persons who were taking part in the game. It has also come out in the evidence that actually only six persons (excluding Narsing and Chhagan) were taking part in the game. Narsingh was asleep and Chhagan was sitting apart. The petitioners were accordingly challaned, tried and convicted as already stated. Their defence that they were playing a game of Chhakdi and not Mang Patta, was rejected by the Courts below, mainly in view of the presumption that arises in Gambling Act cases under S. 6.

(3) It was contended by the learned counsel for the petitioners that this was not a case in which the presumption under S. 6 ought to have been raised. He argued that it was a misappreciation of the true import of that section and a mis-application of its provisions which has resulted in the petitioners' conviction.

(4) Having considered the argument carefully I have come to the conclusion that this revision application should succeed. Madhya Bharat Gambling Act, No. 51 of 1949 can by no means be said to be model of skilful draftsmanship. Keeping of a gaming house and gaming houses are offences punishable under the said Act. Under S. 4, whoever is found in any gaming house, gaming or present for the purpose of gaming is liable to punishment. Section 6 embodies a rule of evidence. It runs as follows:

"When any instrument of gaming has been seized in any house, room, tent, enclosure, space, vehicle, vessel or place entered or searched under the provisions of the last preceding section or about the person of any of those who are found therein and in the case of any other thing so seized, if the Court is satisfied that the Officer who entered or searched such house, room, tent, enclosure, space, vehicle, vessel or place had reasonable grounds for suspecting that the thing so seized was an instrument of gaming, the seizure of such instrument or thing shall be evidence, until the contrary be made to appear that such house, tent, enclosure, space, vehicle, vessel or place is used as a gaming house and that the persons found therein were then present for the purpose of gaming although no gaming was actually seen by the Magistrate or Police Officer".

(5) It will be seen that if the court is satisfied that the Officer who entered or searched such house, room etc. had reasonable grounds for suspecting that the thing so seized was an instrument of gaming the seizure of such an instrument or thing shall be the evidence, until contrary is made to appear, that such house, room etc. was used as a gaming house and that the persons found therein were then present for the purpose of gaming although no game was seen by the Magistrate or the Police Officer. The section thus makes the fact of seizure of a thing which the officer concerned had reasonable grounds for suspecting to be an instrument of gaming evidence of the place being used as a gaming house and that the persons found therein were then present for the purpose of gaming. A careful examination of this not very felicitously worded section presents the following elements for consideration:

1. Under it, the seizure of a thing is evidence of,
  - (a) that the place is used for gaming house,
  - (b) that the persons found therein were then present for the purpose of gaming, although no game was seen either by the Magistrate or the Police Officer.
2. The seizure of a thing will be evidence of facts mentioned above until the contrary is made to appear.
3. The seizure of a thing shall be evidence of facts mentioned above only if the Court is satisfied that the Officer concerned had reasonable ground for suspecting that the thing so seized was an instrument of gaming.

(6) Accordingly before the seizure of the thing can be relied on as evidence of any fact under the section the court must be satisfied that the Officer concerned had reasonable grounds for suspecting that the thing so seized was an instrument of gaming.

(7) Before I proceed further, I should like to make it clear that though Sub-Inspector Chaturbhuj stated in evidence that the six of the accused were playing a game of Mang Patta he admitted in cross-examination that he did not know how Mang Patta is played. Naturally, in these circumstances, his evidence as to the nature of the game that was being played cannot be of much assistance. We should not in the circumstances of a case like the present forget that it was a Diwali night. It is well known that numerous Hindus indulge in gambling on this night as a mark of observance of this national festival. At the same time, we should not readily jump to the conclusion that wherever a few friends are playing a game of cards on Diwali night they are gambling and thus make themselves liable under the provisions of the Act. We further find that Head Constable Balmukund went further than Sub-Inspector Chaturbhuj and actually stated that the accused were gambling with playing cards for money. He could naturally throw no light on what kind of game they were playing and how he inferred that they were gambling for money.

(8) It is an elementary principle of our criminal Law that every person shall be presumed to be innocent till he is proved guilty. The presumption to which S. 6 may give rise takes a line which is contrary to the general principle referred to above. In applying this presumption, care should however be taken that the general principle of the innocence of the accused person is negatived only to the extent provided by the Law and no further. As the language used in framing S. 6 is very general, it is of the utmost importance that the provisions of the section should be applied with great care and discrimination. We should not lose sight of the expression "the seizure of such an instrument or thing 'shall be evidence' 'until contrary 'be made to appear' ". It necessarily follows that if the contrary be made to appear which is clear and distinguishable from saying that until the contrary is proved — the presumption referred to in the section ought not to be raised. It is further necessary to justify the raising of presumption under that section that the Court must be satisfied that the Officer concerned had reasonable grounds for suspecting that the things so seized were instruments of gaming. The law enjoins that the Court should before raising any presumption satisfy itself that the Officer concerned had reasonable grounds for suspecting that the thing seized by him was an instrument of gaming. If the Court is not satisfied on this point, there is no room for any presumption under the section.

The question therefore arises how is the Court to satisfy itself whether reasonable grounds existed for the Officer concerned to suspect that the thing seized by him was an instrument of gaming. This can be done only on the material placed before the court by the prosecution. It is the duty of the Officer concerned either by his own evidence or in some other way to place before the court material which would enable it to satisfy itself whether reasonable grounds existed for his suspicion. The thing seized in the present case was a pack of cards and monies found with the different accused. Both these articles may be used as instruments of gaming or for innocent and lawful purposes. This was a night of festivity. A national Hindu festival was being observed. Possession of a sum of Rs. 77-14-9 by the eight petitioners on such a night can therefore be no reasonable ground for suspecting that the money was used or was intended to be used for any illegitimate purpose. The same may be said about a pack of cards. It has come out in the evidence of Head Constable Balmukund that from what he saw in the room he could infer that Laxmi Pooja had been performed there. If this was so, it is not at all surprising that some of Narsingh's friends may have collected there for the Pooja and afterwards decided to spend the night playing at cards.

The only material placed by Sub-Inspector Chaturbhuj before the court to satisfy it that there were reasonable grounds for his suspecting that the cards and the monies recovered were instruments of gaming was that he had received information from an informer that gambling was going on in that house and that he had satisfied himself that this information was correct. This material is of too indefinite a character to enable the court to form any opinion as to whether there did or did not exist reasonable grounds for suspecting that the playing cards and the monies found in the room were used as instruments of gaming. What the Law requires is not a mere suspicion on the part of the Officer concerned that a thing seized was an instrument of gaming but it further insists that before a presumption is raised under section 6 a court should satisfy itself that there were reasonable grounds for the Officer to suspect that the thing seized was an instrument of gaming. So long as there is not sufficient material for the Court to satisfy itself on that point no presumption could arise. Sub-Inspector Chaturbhuj was asked if he could name his informer and he declined to do so. How he satisfied himself that the information given to him by his informer is correct was not disclosed by him.

(9) It will further be noted that under the Law as it stands the Court before it raises a presumption has not only to examine the material placed before it by the prosecution to enable it to satisfy itself with regard to the existence of reasonable grounds for the Officer concerned's suspicion that a thing seized by him is an instrument of gaming. It has further to consider whether there is any material or circumstances from which it appears that no such reasonable grounds existed for the suspicion of the Officer concerned. The law does not require the accused 'to prove' that there were no reasonable grounds for the suspicion of the Officer concerned. It is sufficient if he is able to place before the Court a material or circumstances from which 'it appears' that reasonable grounds did not exist for suspecting that the thing seized was an instrument of gaming no presumption can arise.

(10) Having carefully considered the judgments of the courts below I have come to the conclusion that the true meaning of S. 6 was not fully appreciated in those courts. Merely because a pack of cards and some money was recovered from the room in which the accused were found a ready assumption was made that they were gambling. Not improbably the courts below were mainly influenced in coming to that conclusion because it was Diwali night on which the house of Narsingh was raided.

(11) The learned Sessions Judge has rejected the plea raised on behalf of the accused that they were playing an innocent game of cards on two grounds (1) that all the accused did not unanimously state that they were playing a game of Chhakdi and (2) if they were playing a game of Chhakdi four TWOS of the pack of cards should have been found separate from the rest. No question appears to have been put to any of the witnesses with regard to the last mentioned point. As regards the other point, it is sufficient to say that on being challaned in a criminal case every accused puts forward what he considers his best defence and the fact that some of the accused in the present case did not state that they were playing a game of Chhakdi should not be considered as a factor which should affect the accused who gave that explanation. Courts should not in dealing with such cases lose sight of the provisions of S. 15 of the Act under which the Magistrate trying the case may direct any portion of the fine which shall be levied under Ss. 3 and 4 of this Act, or any part of the money or proceeds of articles seized and ordered to be forfeited under this Act to be paid to an informer. In many cases this may be a temptation to the informers to give information which is not necessarily true. This is yet another reason why the presumption under S. 6 should be raised after carefully considering the entire material on the record. I am clear that in this case the prosecution did not place before the Court any material on which it could satisfy itself that there were reasonable grounds for Sub Inspector Chaturbhuj to suspect that the pack of cards and the money seized by him in the room which he raided were used as instruments of gaming. If no presumption under that section is raised the evidence that the accused were gambling falls far short of the standard necessary to satisfy a reasonable man that the accused were guilty of the offence with which they were charged.

(12) The result therefore is that the revision application is allowed. The conviction of the petitioners and the sentences passed upon them are set aside. They are on bail and need not surrender thereto. The fine if paid shall be refunded.

Anno: Cr. P. C., S. 256 N. 6.

Inamdar, for Applicant; Shiv Dayal, Deputy Govt. Advocate, for the State.

ORDER: This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Gwalior recommending that the sentence of fine of Rs. 100/- imposed on Kundanlal by the City Magistrate, Lashkar, for an offence under S. 8, Madhya Bharat Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act (Act No. III of 1948) be enhanced. On 23-4-51, the reference was admitted and on 2-8-51 a notice was issued to Kundanlal to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced. Kundanlal has now filed objections contending that his conviction under S. 8 of Act 3 of 1948 is itself illegal and that he should be acquitted of the charge of having contravened the provisions of S. 3, Madhya Bharat Kerosene Control Order of 1949.

(2) The facts are that on 29-4-1950, the Chief Inspector, Civil Supplies Department, received information that Kundanlal was selling kerosene oil and storing it without obtaining licence for the purpose under the Kerosene Control Order. On receipt of this information, the Chief Inspector sent a bogus customer Vishwambar Dayal with marked currency notes of the value of Rs. 12/- for purchasing a tin of kerosene from Kundanlal. It was alleged by the prosecution that Kundanlal sold a tin of kerosene for Rs. 11-10-0 to Vishwambhar Dayal and returned to him a change of 0/6/- annas from the amount of Rs. 12/- given by Vishwambhar Dayal to Kundanlal. Immediately after this purchase, the Chief Inspector went to the shop of Kundanlal, seized the tin sold by him to Vishwambhar Dayal and also recovered from Kundanlal the marked currency notes. The Chief Inspector Mr. Kishori Mohan also searched the shop of Kundanlal and recovered therefrom 13 other tins full of kerosene oil. Kundanlal was then tried by the City Magistrate, Lashkar on two charges (1) firstly, that he sold a tin of kerosene to Vishwambhar Dayal at a price in excess of the control rate and as such contravened the provisions of S. 6, Kerosene Control Order; (2) and that he stored for sale 13 other tins of kerosene oil. Kundanlal was acquitted of the charge of selling one tin of kerosene oil to Vishwambhar Dayal at a price in excess of the control rate. He was, however, found guilty of the other charge and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100/-. The accused admitted the recovery of 13 tins of kerosene oil from his shop, but he pleaded that they belonged to one licence-dealer of the village Guthina and that that dealer had temporarily deposited the tins with him. The learned City Magistrate rejected the defence of the accused.

(3) Having heard the learned Counsel for the accused and the Counsel for the State, I have come to the conclusion that the conviction and sentence imposed on Kundanlal must be set aside. It appears to me that in holding Kundanlal guilty under S. 8 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act by contravening the provisions of S. 3, Kerosene Control Order, the City Magistrate and the learned Sessions Judge have assumed that under the Kerosene Control Order, it was for the accused to explain the possession of the thirteen tins of kerosene oil and the fact that these tins were stored for sale was proved by the fact that Kundanlal sold one another tin to Vishwambhar Dayal. In my opinion, both these assumptions are unwarranted. Under the Kerosene Control Order, no restriction has been placed on the quantity of kerosene oil that may be sold, purchased or stored by any person. There is also no provision in the Control Order which lays down that a Court will presume that any kerosene oil, for which the accused person is unable to account satisfactorily, is kerosene oil in respect of which he has contravened the Control Order. In the absence of any restriction on the quantity of kerosene oil that may be possessed by any person and of any provision in the Control Order placing the burden of proof on the accused person, clearly there can be no justification for holding that after the recovery of the tins was established by evidence and also admitted by the accused, it was for him to prove that he had not stored the kerosene tins for sale. In my view, the burden of proof was initially on the prosecution and it was for the prosecution to prove circumstances suggesting the inference that the accused held the 13 tins of kerosene oil for sale, before calling upon the accused to repel the inference. There is in the present case no evidence whatsoever, to show that Kundanlal held the stock for sale. It must be remembered that the charge of storage for sale was in respect of the 13 tins of kerosene oil which the Chief Inspector found in the shop of Kundanlal. The tin of kerosene oil which was alleged to have been sold to Vishwambhar Dayal was not one of the tins included in the charge of storage for sale. It was, therefore, necessary for the prosecution to prove that Kundanlal had already sold these thirteen tins to some person or that he intended to sell them under a contract to be entered into in the future or that he was a dealer in kerosene oil and would have in the ordinary course sold these thirteen tins of kerosene oil. There is no evidence that Kundanlal had stored these thirteen tins of kerosene oil for purposes of fulfilling the terms of a contract entered into beforehand for their sale or that he had stored them for sale under a contract to be entered into in the future. Nor is there any evidence to show that Kundanlal was a dealer in kerosene oil. A dealer has been defined in S. 3 (Kha) of the Kerosene Control Order itself, as a person dealing in the purchase, sale or distribution of kerosene. In the present case, even if the evidence of Vishwambhar Dayal is accepted that Kundanlal sold a tin of kerosene oil to him, it only shows that Kundanlal conducted a solitary transaction of sale of one tin of kerosene. But it does not establish the fact that Kundanlal carried on business in kerosene oil as a dealer. A person can be said to carry on business in some commodity only when he conducts more transactions than one by way of trade or commerce. A single transaction of sale or purchase of the commodity is not business and the person making the sale does not by a single transaction become a dealer in that commodity. It is clear from the evidence of Kishorimohan the Chief Inspector that he did not examine the books of Kundanlal to find out whether he had been carrying on business in kerosene oil. He also did not question the accused as to how he was in possession of the thirteen tins. Kishori Mohan also admitted that he was not in a position to say whether the accused was the owner of the tins or whether he had kept them with him as a bailee. There being thus no evidence to show that Kundanlal used to carry on business in kerosene oil, from the mere fact that Kundanlal sold one another tin to Vishwambhar Dayal, the inference that he had stored 13 tins of kerosene oil for sale cannot be drawn. In my opinion, as the prosecution failed to prove in this case that the storage of these thirteen tins was for sale, the learned City Magistrate was not right in concluding that the storage was for sale merely because the explanation of the accused about the possession of the tins did not appear to the Magistrate satisfactory.

(4) Mr. Inamdar, learned Counsel for the accused Kundanlal, also urged that the learned City Magistrate erred in considering the evidence of Vishwambhar Dayal, as the witness was not recalled by the Magistrate for cross-examination after the framing of the charge. The contention is, in my opinion, well founded. It appears from the record that after the framing of the charge, when the accused was asked whether he wished to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses, the accused expressed a desire to cross-examine Vishwambhar Dayal. A summons was accordingly, issued for securing the attendance of Vishwambhar Dayal. A constable Ram Singh who was entrusted with the service of the summons deposed that he was unable to trace Vishwambhar Dayal. The learned City Magistrate thought that as the witness could not be traced, the evidence which he had given before the framing of the charge could be taken into consideration. In my view, this is not a correct proposition of law. Under S. 256 of the Cr. P. C., the right of the accused to cross-examine is absolute and a witness cannot be discharged unless and until the accused declares that he does not wish to cross-examine him or if he wishes to cross-examine him until the cross-examination is concluded. In the present case, the Magistrate was altogether wrong in discharging the witness immediately after his examination before the charge. If the learned Magistrate had not discharged the witness, it would not have been at all difficult to trace the witness and produce him in the Court for further cross-examination. When, therefore, Vishwambhar Dayal was allowed to leave, to suit his convenience or the convenience of the Court, before the charge had been framed and before the right conferred by S. 256, Cr. P. Code had been exercised by the accused, it was the duty of the Court to see that the witness was produced by the prosecution for further cross-examination.

(5) In these circumstances, the Magistrate should have expunged the evidence given by Vishwambhar Dayal before the framing of the charge. The right of cross-examination under S. 256 of the Cr. P. Code is a very important right. The accused person cannot be deprived of this right, by discharging the prosecution witnesses before the framing of the charge and then by accepting the statement of the prosecution that the witnesses cannot be traced. I think it cannot be maintained that in this case the accused has not suffered any substantial injury in the course of the trial by the failure of the prosecution and also of the Court to see that Vishwambhar Dayal was present in the Court for cross-examination after the framing of the charge.

(6) For the above reasons, I set aside the conviction and sentence imposed on Kundanlal under S. 8 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act and discharge the notice of enhancement of sentence issued to him. The amount of fine, if already paid by Kundanlal, be refunded to him.

(a) Gwalior Pre-emption Act (Smt. 1992), S. 19 — Consideration for pre-emption sale — Onus — Fixation by Court.

Under S. 19, Gwalior Pre-emption Act, 1992, if there is no agreement between the parties with regard to the consideration for a pre-emptible sale, the Court has to determine in the first instance whether the amount for which the sale is alleged to have taken place was or was not in fact fixed or paid. This section also casts the onus of proving the fact that the consideration alleged was fixed or actually paid on the vendee. It is only when the Court finds that the alleged consideration was not fixed or paid that the Court has to consider the question of the market price of the property for the purposes of the suit.

The certificate of registration has indeed an evidentiary value attached to it by S. 49, Gwalior Registration Act, Samvat 1971 which corresponds to S. 60, Indian Registration Act. It is admissible for the purpose of proving that the document has been duly registered and that the facts mentioned in the endorsement made under Ss. 27, 28, 47 and 48, Gwalior Registration Act have occurred as they are mentioned. It would thus be seen that where there is an endorsement by the Registrar upon a sale deed about the payment of money made in his presence by the vendee to the vendor and of the admission of the vendor of having already received an advance before executing the sale, it is of considerable evidential value and must prevail unless its effect is negatived by other circumstances appearing in the case. Section 19, Gwalior Pre-emption Act which lays upon the vendee the burden of proving consideration, does not abrogate the provisions of S. 49, Gwalior Registration Act relating to the evidentiary value of the endorsement made under sections referred to therein on a sale-deed. Section 19, Pre-emption Act only means that in a suit for pre-emption the initial burden lies on the vendee to show the actual amount of sale consideration and when this is done, the onus lies on the plaintiff pre-emptor to show that the consideration entered in the sale deed is not the real consideration. No particular form of books of account is generally prescribed, although books are far more satisfactory when kept in the form of daily entries of debits and credits in a day book or journal. But the book should be such a regular and usual account book as explains itself and as appears on its face to create a liability in an account with party against whom it is offered, and not to be a mere memorandum for some other purpose. Hence mere loose sheets of paper are not admissible; and a single entry does not constitute an account book. The account book of an illiterate labourer, as well as those of a tradesman or banker are admissible in evidence, if within the statutory conditions, the purposes of which are to secure authenticity and credibility in respect to the evidence, rather than to prescribe the form of it. (A) ('18) AIR 1918 PC 154: 56 Ind Cas 723 (PC)

DIXIT J.: These two appeals arise out of a pre-emption suit in which a decree for pre-emption in respect of certain lands for Rs. 9115/- has been passed by the Court of District Judge Bhind in favour of the plaintiff Fuljarilal. The Appeal No. 29 of 2005 is by the plaintiff and is concerned solely with the question of the amount for which the plaintiff Fuljari Lal is entitled to exercise his right for pre-emption. The other appeal is by the defendant Ram Swarup with regard to the costs of the suit decreed against him. On 30-5-46, one Bhando Lal sold a piece of land situated in Bhind to Ram Swarup by a registered sale deed which contained a recital of a consideration of Rs. 9115/-. After the sale of the house by Bhando Lal to Ram Swarup, the plaintiff Fuljari Lal brought a suit for pre-emption alleging that the sale was really for Rs. 6000/-, the amount which was actually paid before the Registrar and that the recital in the sale deed that Bhando Lal had received Rs. 3115/- from Ram Swarup on the previous day was fictitious. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled to exercise his right of pre-emption in respect of the land for a sum of Rs. 6000/- only. The defendant asserted in his written statement that the sale was in fact for Rs. 9115/-. The lower Court found that the consideration for the sale was Rs. 9115/- and that the plaintiff had the right to pre-empt the property for this amount.

(2) In the appeal preferred by Fuljari Lal, the appellant prays that the decree of the lower Court be modified by reducing the amount for which the appellant is entitled to exercise his right of pre-emption to Rs. 6000/-. Under S. 19, Gwalior Pre-emption Act, 1902, if there is no agreement between the parties with regard to the consideration for a pre-emptible sale, the Court has to determine in the first instance whether the amount for which the sale is alleged to have taken place was or was not in fact fixed or paid. This section also casts the onus of proving the fact that the consideration alleged was fixed or actually paid on the vendee. It is only when the Court finds that the alleged consideration was not fixed or paid that the Court has to consider the question of the market price of the property for the purposes of the suit. In the present case, the evidence as to the consideration for which the property was purchased by Ram Swarup from Bhando Lal consists of (1) the statements of Ram Swarup that the land was sold to him for Rs. 9115/- that on 29-5-46 he paid to Bhando Lal Rs. 3115/- and obtained a receipt from him of the payment and that on the next day he paid Rs. 6000/- to Bhando Lal before the Registrar and also gave back the receipt for the payment of Rs. 3115/- to Bhando Lal in the presence of the Registrar, (2) the entries in Ram Swarup's account books of the payment of Rs. 3115/- to Bhando Lal on 29-5-46 and of Rs. 6000/- on 30-5-46, (3) the endorsement on the sale deed that a sum of Rs. 6000/- was paid before the Registrar and that Bhando Lal admitted before the Registrar that he had already received from Ram Swarup Rs. 3115/- and had given him a receipt for this amount and this receipt was returned to Bhando Lal on the registration of the sale deed, (4) the depositions of the attesting witnesses to the sale deed, namely Sukhwasi Lal and Lal Chand that Bhando Lal was paid Rs. 6000/- before the Registrar, and he admitted having already received Rs. 3115/- and that the receipt for this amount was returned to him on the registration of the deed, (5) and the statement of Mr. Shyam Swarup Johari, the Registrar who gave evidence as to the facts mentioned in the endorsement in the sale deed.

(3) This evidence is challenged by the learned counsel for the appellant on the ground that Ram Swarup is interested in the transaction and his statement that Rs. 3115/- were paid by him to Bhando Lal on 29-5-46 is not supported by the entry in his account book. It was said that Ram Swarup's account books were not regularly kept and that in that account book the amount of Rs. 3115/- said to have been paid to Bhando Lal is still shown as due from Bhando Lal. It was argued that the receipt alleged to have been obtained for the payment of Rs. 3115/- was not produced; the witnesses who attested the receipt were also not examined by the plaintiff and the contents of this receipt which is said to have been lost could not be proved by oral evidence in accordance with the provisions of Ss. 59, 63, 64 and 65, Evidence Act. It was said that these factors and the fact that Ram Swarup did not give any notice to the plaintiff of the intended sale indicated that the payment of Rs. 3115/- to Bhando Lal on 29-5-46 recited in the sale deed was fictitious.

(4) I am unable to accede to the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant. The evidence of Ram Swarup cannot be ruled out of consideration simply because he was a party to the transaction. Likewise the evidence of Sukhwasi Lal and Lal Chand cannot be ignored merely because they attested the sale deed. As observed by the Privy Council in — Idris v. Jane Skinner, AIR 1918 P. C. 154 (A).

"In cases of this kind, (that is, in cases of pre-emption) the persons engaged in the transactions and notably the vendors and the vendees are necessarily essential witnesses and in the absence of the contradiction to disregard their testimony because they were interested parties, is to carry the vigilance with which the Court ought always to regard interested testimony beyond all reasonable and trustworthy limits. There appears to be no reason on record in the evidence to impute collusion and dishonesty to any of these witnesses, and as their evidence is wholly unanswered it must in their Lordships' opinion prevail".

(5) Here, Ram Swarup said in his evidence that on 29-5-46 he paid to Bhando Lal Rs. 3115/- as earnest money for the sale and expenses of the registration and obtained a receipt from him and that this receipt was returned to Bhando Lal the next day on the completion of the registration of the deed. Bhando Lal was also examined as a witness of the plaintiff. He said that he had lost the receipt for Rs. 3115/- and was not, therefore, able to produce it. It is true that the witness was not asked either by the plaintiff or by the defendant whether he did receive the amount of Rs. 3115/- on 29-5-46. But then there is nothing in his statement to destroy the evidentiary value of the endorsement by the Registrar on the sale deed that Bhando Lal admitted before him the receipt of Rs. 3115/- on 29-5-46 and that the receipt for the payment was returned by Ram Swarup to Bhando Lal in his presence on the completion of the registration. Mr. Shyam Swarup Johari who registered the deed and other witnesses Sukhwasi Lal and Lal Chand also deposed that this admission was made by Bhando Lal before the Registrar and a receipt of the payment of Rs. 3115/- was returned by Ram Swarup to Bhando Lal after the registration. It was the duty of the appellant to put question to Bhando Lal to elicit the fact that he did not admit before the Registrar the receipt of Rs. 3115/- from Ram Swarup on 29-5-46. The certificate of registration has indeed an evidentiary value attached to it by S. 49, Gwalior Registration Act Samvat 1971 which corresponds to S. 60, Indian Registration Act. It is admissible for the purpose of proving that the document has been duly registered and that the facts mentioned in the endorsement made under Ss. 27, 28, 47 and 48, Gwalior Registration Act have occurred as they are mentioned. It would thus be seen that where there is an endorsement by the Registrar upon a sale deed about the payment of money made in his presence by the vendee to the vendor and of the admission of the vendor of having already received an advance before executing the sale, it is of considerable evidential value and must prevail unless its effect is negated by other circumstances appearing in the case. The onus was, therefore, clearly on the appellant to rebut the endorsement and to show that Bhando Lal did not admit before the Registrar the receipt of Rs. 3115/- on 29-5-46. It must be noted that S. 19, Gwalior Pre-emption Act which lays upon the vendee the burden of proving consideration, does not abrogate the provisions of S. 49, Gwalior Registration Act relating to the evidentiary value of the endorsement made under sections referred to therein on a sale deed. Section 19, Pre-emption Act only means that in a suit for pre-emption the initial burden lies on the vendee to show the actual amount of sale consideration and when this is done, the onus lies on the plaintiff pre-emptor to show that the consideration entered in the sale deed is not the real consideration. This section cannot be so construed as to render the express provisions of S. 49, Registration Act absolutely nugatory and to cast on the vendee the burden of proving the facts stated in the endorsement aliunde by positive evidence. As the appellant made no attempt to rebut this endorsement, it must be held that Bhando Lal admitted before the Registrar the receipt of Rs. 3115/- on 29-5-46 and also received back from Ram Swarup a receipt for the payment which he had given to Ram Swarup.

(6) Learned counsel for the appellant laid considerable stress on the fact that Ram Swarup's account books were not regularly kept, that in the account books, the account of Rs. 3115/- alleged to have been paid to Bhando Lal is still shown as due from him and that in the account books, entries were not made from day to day as transaction took place. In support of this contention, learned counsel for the appellant relied on the evidence of the plaintiff's witness Shri Ram who examined the accounts and said that the accounts were not regularly kept. In my opinion, there is no force in this contention. It is not clear from the evidence of Shri Ram that he is an expert in accounts. He also does not depose that books of accounts in order to be regular must be kept in some particular prescribed form. As noted in Jones "On Evidence".

"No particular form of books of account is generally prescribed, although books are far more satisfactory when kept in the form of daily entries of debits and credits in a day book or journal .... but the book should be such a regular and usual account book as explains itself and as appears on its face to create a liability in an account with the party against whom it is offered, and not to be a mere memorandum for some other purpose. Hence mere loose sheets of paper are not admissible; and a single entry does not constitute an account book,..... The account book of an illiterate labourer, as well as those of a tradesman or banker are admissible in evidence, if within the statutory conditions, the purposes of which are to secure authenticity and credibility in respect to the evidence, rather than to prescribe the form of it."

(7) Counsel for the appellant says that the respondent vendee's account books are not regularly kept in the course of business as at one place there is no entry of any transaction done during one fortnight. It is difficult to see how there could be any such entry if no transaction was done during the period. As regards the entry in the account books about the payment of Rs. 3115/- on 29-5-46, it is true that it is in the words "Bando Lal Baniya Bhind Walw ke nam", thus showing that the amount is due from Bhando Lal. But so is the entry relating to the payment of Rs. 6000/- on 30-5-46 before the Registrar to Bhando Lal, which is not disputed. Both the entries, however, mention that the payment is in respect of the purchase of a land. In these circumstances the words of the entry in the account books of Ram Swarup about the payment of Rs. 3115/- to Bhando Lal cannot be taken as decisive of the fact that the payment was not towards the purchase of the land.

(8) It is then argued that the receipt for the payment of Rs. 3115/- alleged to have been passed by Bhando Lal in favour of Ram Swarup was not produced and that other evidence to prove the existence of the receipt and its contents was not admissible. There is no force in this contention. The effect of Ss. 59, 61, 63 (5) and 65, Evidence Act, read together is that the contents of a document may be proved by oral evidence, when such evidence is admissible as secondary evidence. In the present case Ram Swarup, who had himself taken the receipt and seen it, deposed to the contents of the receipt and said that it was returned to Bhando Lal in the presence of the Registrar. Mr. Johari the Registrar and attesting witnesses Sukhwasi Lal and Dal Chand corroborate the fact of the return of the receipt to Bhando Lal. Mr. Johari's statement is that the receipt referred to in the endorsement on the sale deed must have been produced before him. Mr. Johari no doubt, added that he could not recall all the details about the registration & made it clear that he was not testifying to the facts mentioned in the endorsement from his memory. In saying that the receipt must have been produced before him, Mr. Johari only stressed the fact that he used to perform regularly the registration proceedings and that if the receipt had not been produced before him, seen by him and returned in his presence to Bhando Lal, he would not have made the endorsement on the sale deed which he did. I think in the absence of anything to suggest to the contrary it must be presumed that Mr. Johari, performed the official act of the registration in a regular manner and saw the receipt before it was returned to Bhando Lal in his presence.

The attesting witnesses do not say that they actually saw the receipt. But Sukhwasi Lal says that the receipt was read out at the time of the registration. The existence of the receipt and its return to Bhando Lal having been thus established, no adverse inference can be drawn against Ram Swarup from the fact that it was subsequently lost by Bhando Lal and could not be produced in evidence by Bhando Lal. Learned Counsel for the respondent sought to explain the return of the receipt to Bhando Lal by saying that after the registration of the sale deed evidencing the payment of the consideration of Rs. 9115/- and the existence of a receipt for Rs. 3115/- Ram Swarup might have thought it unnecessary to retain it with him. I cannot regard this explanation as altogether untenable, especially when the learned counsel for the appellant was unable to suggest the significance that should be attached to the fact of the return of the receipt to Bhando Lal in the face of the evidence that it was produced before the Registrar and was seen by him and that Bhando Lal admitted before the Registrar that he had already received from Ram Swarup Rs. 3115/-.

(9) On a consideration of the evidence on record I am led to the conclusion that the respondent has succeeded in discharging the initial burden that lay on him to show that the consideration for the sale was Rs. 3115/-. The burden was not heavy. For, it is obvious that with the aid of S. 49, Gwalior Registration Act, a vendee is able to discharge the burden with a quantum of evidence much less than that which would otherwise be required. It was open to the pre-emptor appellant to prove in rebuttal that the amount of Rs. 3115/- was never paid to the vendor Bhando Lal or that if it was paid, the amount was subsequently refunded to Ram Swarup. But he has not done so. The evidence of his witness

Ram Chandra is simply this, that he was at first intended to be one of the attesting witnesses to the sale deed but when Dal Chand became available he was not required and that on 30-5-46 Sukhwasi Lal told him that the sale was for Rs. 3000/- a statement not asserted even by the appellant himself. The witness further said that he had heard the parties to the transaction talk amongst themselves that the receipt for Rs. 3115/- was obtained to defeat any right of pre-emption that might be set up. If this was the intention of the defendant, he would not have talked about it loudly enough to enable the witness to hear and know of his intention nor would he have returned the receipt to Bhando Lal. According to the other witness Balmukund, he had offered to purchase the land for Rs. 6000/- and that his was the highest offer which Bhando Lal had received from any one for the purchase of the land. In my opinion this sort of evidence is not evidence of the fact that Ram Swarup did not as a matter of fact pay Rs. 3115/- to Bhando Lal on 29-5-46. Such being the state of evidence on record, I am of the view that the finding of the learned District Judge that the sale was for a consideration of Rs. 9115/- must be upheld and the plaintiff Fuljari Lal's appeal must be dismissed.

(10) The defendant's appeal as regards costs rests on the contention that as the plaintiff has failed in the lower Court in the matter of the price to be paid, he is not entitled to receive any costs from the defendant. This contention must also be rejected. There could have been some force in the appeal if in the suit the issue between the parties had been only with regard to the consideration for the sale. But the defendant Ram Swarup chose to resist the suit also on the grounds of non-joinder of parties and waiver on the part of the plaintiff of his right of pre-emption. On both these issues he failed miserably. There is, therefore, no justification for disallowing the plaintiff his costs in the trial Court.

(11) In our opinion, the decision of the trial Court is correct. Both the appeals are, therefore, dismissed with costs. The plaintiff-appellant was permitted by this Court to defer the deposit of the consideration amount of Rs. 9115/- till the disposal of his appeal. He should now deposit it within three months' time together with the respondent's costs in this Court after deducting his own costs in the trial Court and in this Court in the appeal preferred by the defendant. In case of default in the payment within three months, the plaintiff's suit shall stand dismissed with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT: This is second appeal by the defendant decree-holder arising from a suit filed by the plaintiffs objectors under O. 21, R. 63 in Execution Case No. 13 of 1946. An objection had been brought by Dhanna and Pusaji that cattle and house attached in the execution of the decree did not belong to the judgment-debtor, Gendi Bai but belonged to them. The objection about house was allowed but the objection about cattle was disallowed. Pusaji is the son-in-law of Gendi Bai the judgment-debtor and he with his brother Dhanna brought this suit for a declaration that cattle belonged to him. The trial Court dismissed the suit but the District Judge Mandleshwar in appeal reversed the finding and set aside the decree and decreed the suit. The defendants have filed this second appeal against the decree and judgment of the District Judge.

(2) As the question involved in this second appeal is question of fact I am not inclined to interfere.

(3) Mr. Samvatsar, learned counsel for the appellant, contends that the view of the trial Judge as to where credibility lies is entitled to great weight as the conclusion was arrived at by it after having had the advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses. He places reliance on the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in — 'Veeraswami v. Narayya', AIR 1949 PC 32 (A). It is true that the appellate Court should bear in mind that it has not enjoyed the opportunity of seeing and hearing the witnesses, but it has nowhere been laid down that, the Judge of the first instance can be treated as infallible in determining which side is telling the truth or is refraining from exaggeration. The principles which should guide an appellate Court in deciding whether to reverse the trial Judge on a question of fact were stated by Lord Thankerton in — 'Watt v. Thomas', (1947) 1 All ER 582: 1947 AC 484 (B); and the two judgments of the Privy Council reported in — 'AIR 1949 PC 32 (A)' and — 'Prem Singh v. Deb Singh', AIR 1948 PC 20 (C), are based on this judgment. The third principle laid down by Lord Thankerton at page 587 of the All E. R. is in the following words:

"The appellate Court, either because the reasons given by the trial Judge are not satisfactory, or because it unmistakably so appears from the evidence may be satisfied that he has not taken proper advantage of his having seen and heard the witnesses and the matter will then become at large for the appellate Court."

(4) Applying this principle to the facts of this case I find that the trial Judge has measured the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs by a standard required only in criminal proceedings and has forgotten that there is a strong and marked difference as to the effect of the evidence in civil and criminal proceedings. In civil cases, it cannot be said that the benefit of every reasonable doubt must necessarily go to the defendant.

(5) The Indian Evidence Act has adopted the requirements of the prudent man as an appropriate concrete standard by which to measure proof and in civil proceedings a mere preponderance of probability, due regard being had to the burden of proof, is a sufficient basis of decision. If a Court requires a standard of proof higher than that laid down by the Evidence Act the appellate Court must interfere. In this case, the plaintiffs had produced licences to graze cattle Exs. P/3, P/4, P/5 and P/6 issued from 1-7-1945 to 1-7-1946. The attachment of cattle took place on 13-10-1946. The licences for grazing cattle were issued in the name of Pusaji and that shows that the authorities were confident that Pusaji was the owner of the cattle. The licences were issued much before the attachment and therefore the licences are not tainted with any suspicion. This circumstance which alone outweighs other considerations, in this case, has entirely been ignored by the trial Court. The second circumstance is that the cattle were attached in the house which has been held to be of Pusaji. These two circumstances ought to have been considered by the trial Court and if the evidence adduced by the plaintiff is read along with the aforesaid circumstances then the conclusion is irresistible that the cattle belong to Pusaji and not to Gendi Bai. There is no reason why so many witnesses would come to depose in the Court that Pusaji purchased cattle from them and the trial Court has not recorded that the witnesses were inimical to the defendant or partial towards Pusaji. Thus, it is clear that the trial Court had left its decision fairly open to attack and the appellate Court has rightly set aside the finding of fact.

(6) That Pusaji was son-in-law to Gendi Bai is a circumstance which warns the Judge that Pusaji's evidence must be received with caution. But this does not mean that it must be rejected altogether and in this case the adverse presumption has been rebutted, and the initial suspicions seem to be unfounded. I, therefore, come to the conclusion that the Judgment of the learned First Appellate Court is sound and does not warrant any interference.

(7) I, therefore, disallow the appeal with costs.

ORDER: This is a revision application against the order of the lower Court passed in Civil Suit No. 768 of 49 staying under O. 21, R. 29 the execution proceedings of a decree pending in the Court of City Civil Judge, Lashkar. One Ganesh Ram, who is now dead and whose legal representative Musammam Sugandho is the non-applicant in the petition before me, filed a suit for partition against Bhawani Sahay on 17-12-49 in the Court of Sub-Judge, Lashkar. In the re-organisation of the Courts that took place in 1948, the Court of Sub-Judge was replaced by the Court of City Civil Judge, First Class, Lashkar and the plaintiff's suit is now pending in the Court of City Civil Judge, Lashkar. At present, suits up to the valuation of Rs. 200/- instituted in the Court of City Civil Judge, Lashkar are being tried by Mr. Ram Krishan Gupta as Additional Civil Judge, Lashkar. Mr. Gupta is also the Civil Judge, First Class, Gwalior. But he is trying the suit out of which this revision petition arises as Additional City Civil Judge, Lashkar. On 4-11-47, the defendant in the suit Bhawani Sahay had obtained from the Gwalior State Judicial Committee a decree in his favour and against Ganesh Ram for demolition of a wall alleged to have been constructed by Ganesh Ram on a piece of land jointly owned by him and Bhawani Sahay. The suit, in which the Gwalior Judicial Committee, in the exercise of its revisional powers, passed the decree, was also instituted in the Court of Sub-Judge, Gwalior. The execution proceedings of that decree were started by Bhawani Sahay, the decree-holder, on 1-12-49 in the Court of City Civil Judge, Lashkar. These execution proceedings were stayed by the order of the lower Court which is under revision.

(2) Learned counsel for the applicant contends that O. 21, R. 29 has no applicability to the present case as the Court in which the plaintiff non-applicant has sued, is not the Court which had passed the decree in favour of the petitioner and that in any case the order staying the execution of the decree can only be made by the Court in the execution proceedings and not in the suit proceedings.

(3) I am unable to accept the contention of the applicant. The suit, in which the Judicial Committee ultimately passed the decree in favour of Bhawani Sahay, was instituted in the Court of Sub-Judge, Gwalior, and at the time of making the application for the execution of that decree, the City Civil Judge, Lashkar would have had jurisdiction to try Bhawani Sahay's suit. It is clear that under S. 37, Civil P. C., the Court of Civil Judge, Lashkar must be regarded as the Court which passed the decree in favour of Bhawani Sahay. The plaintiff non-applicant's suit was also instituted in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Gwalior and is now pending before the City Civil Judge, Lashkar. It is true that the plaintiff non-applicant's suit is being tried by Mr. Gupta as an Additional City Civil Judge and the execution proceedings of the decree in favour of Bhawani Sahay are not pending before him, but before the City Civil Judge. This fact does not, in my opinion, take away the jurisdiction of Mr. Gupta to pass an order under O. 21, R. 29 to stay the execution proceedings pending before the City

Civil Judge, Lashkar. Order 21, R. 29 simply refers to the Court in which a suit is pending against the holder of a decree of such Court.

It has no reference to the personality of the Judge presiding over such Court. If there are two or more Judges attached to a Court, each one of them exercises the powers and jurisdiction of one and the same Court and not of the different Court. It cannot, therefore, be maintained that the Court of Additional City Civil Judge, Lashkar presided over by Mr. Gupta in which the plaintiff non-applicant's suit is pending is different from the Court of City Civil Judge, Lashkar presided over by another Judge where the execution proceedings are pending. For the purpose of O. 21, R. 29, it is not necessary that the execution proceedings should be pending before the same Judge in whose Court the suit is pending. It is sufficient if the suit is pending in any Court against the holder of a decree of such Court. In my opinion, the Additional City Civil Judge Mr. Gupta had, therefore, jurisdiction to pass an order under O. 21, R. 29.

(4) As to the contention of the petitioner that the application for stay of execution decree ought to have been made not to the Court of Additional City Civil Judge in which the suit is pending, but ought to have been made to the Court of City Civil Judge, Lashkar in which the execution proceedings are pending, I think on a plain reading of O. 21, R. 29, it is clear that it is the Court in which the suit is pending that has jurisdiction to pass an order under O. 21, R. 29. It is true that R. 29 is one of the rules of O. 21 which deals with the execution of decree and order. But this fact alone cannot, in my opinion justify the conclusion that under this rule, the stay of the execution of a decree can be ordered only by the Court executing the decree. There is no indication whatsoever in the rule itself that the application for stay of execution must be made to the Court in execution proceedings. On the other hand, it is clear from the wording of R. 29 that it is the Court in which the suit is pending that has jurisdiction to stay execution of the decree. I am aware of the decisions in the cases of — O. Steel & Co. v. Ichchamoyi, 13 Cal 111 (A); — Lingum Krishna v. K. Sivaramayya, 20 Mad 366 (B); — Mahesh Chandra v. Jogenlal, AIR 1928 Cal 222 (C) in which an application under O. 21, R. 29 was made to the Court in execution proceedings and it was held that an appeal lay against the order of stay passed in execution proceedings. The point before me did not arise in those cases, which cannot for that reason be regarded as authorities to support the view that an application under O. 21, R. 29 must be made to the Court in the execution proceedings. On the other hand in the case of — Narsidas v. Manahar Singh, AIR 1931 Bom 247 (D), the question, whether under O. 21, R. 29 an application for the stay of execution of a decree must be made in the execution proceedings or in the suit proceedings, was considered and it was held by a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court that the Court in which the suit is pending has jurisdiction to pass an order under that Rule. I think, therefore, that Mr. Gupta before whom the plaintiff non-applicant's suit is pending had jurisdiction to pass the order staying the execution of the decree.

(5) No other point was urged on behalf of the petitioner.

(6) For the above reasons, I dismiss this petition. There was no appearance on behalf of the non-applicant and there will be no order as to the costs of this petition.

Dayaram Laxman, Appellant v. State.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 134 and 138 of 1951, D/- 11-1-1952.

Penal Code (1860), Ss. 96, 97 — Girl removed forcibly by her husband and companions against her will — People interested in rescuing her, are entitled to use minimum force in rescuing her.

While using minimum force in rescuing the girl, if accidentally a stone hits some one of the captors on the head and unfortunately results in an injury to the base of the skull it could not be said that the person who threw the stone exceeded his right of private defence. (Paras 10, 12, 13)

KAUL C. J.: These two criminal appeals — Criminal Appeal No. 134 of 1951 preferred by Dayaram and No. 138 of 1951 preferred by Gopal — may conveniently be disposed of by one common judgment. They arise thus:

(2) Misarbai a girl aged about 20 years was married to Rajaram s/o Dewa of Jagatpura. In January 1950, she went to the house of her sister who was married to Gopal of Karai Kasba. It appears that once the girl was in Gopal's house he would not let her return to her husband's house. Thereupon her husband Rajaram, along with his cousin Bhagwan Patel, his sister's husband Rajaram s/o Hira and four or five others including one Santokhsingh came to Karai Kasba in two bullock carts. They left the bullock carts at the house of Santokhsingh's brother who lived in that village. This was on the night between 5th and 6th April 1950. The next morning when Misarbai came to the river to fetch water she was seized by her husband Rajaram s/o Dewa who along with his other companions forcibly carried her away. They directed one of their companions Lalchand to bring the bullock carts which had been left behind. By the time the news of this forcible abduction of Misarbai reached Gopal and he arranged for the rescue of the girl. Misarbai's captors had taken her beyond village Nagziri which adjoins Karai Kasba. They were overtaken by a party of rescuers which included the present two appellants Gopal and Dayaram. This party consisted in all of six or seven persons. The two parties met and it is alleged that Gopal's party set upon Misarbai's captors. They threw stones on their opponents and also caused some injuries with lathis. During this clash Rajaram s/o Hira was hit with a stone on the head which though it left no external mark of injury resulted in a fracture at the base of the skull. He dropped down and became unconscious. Gopal's party succeeded in rescuing the girl. Besides Rajaram s/o Hira, Bhagwan Patel and Rajaram s/o Dewa also received some minor injuries. Misarbai's husband and his companions thereupon lifted Rajaram s/o Hira into one of the bullock carts and took him to the Police Station Balwada where a first information report of the occurrence was made by Bhagwan Patel at 3-30 P. M. the same day i.e., 6-4-1950. The report ran as follows:

“बयान करता है कि व मुकाम बलवाड़ा तारीख ६-४-१९५० व वक्त ३॥ दिन को मय हमराई राजाराम वल्द देवा, लालचंद वल्द देवला, भारुड़, साकिन जगतपुरा ने हाजिर स्टेशन होकर जबानी रिपोर्ट किया कि हम लोग राजाराम की औरत लेने कल श्याम को करी कस्बा गाड़ी से गये थे। औरत को लेकर आज सुबह आ रहे थे कि नागझिरी गांव पार करने के बाद में भीलट बाबा के ओटले पर के रास्ते के पास आये होंगे कि पीछे से दयाराम गोपाल भारुड़ व ५, ६ आदमी नागझिरी के जिनके नाम जानता नहीं हूं वो लोग गवली समान थे इनके पास लठ थे इन्होंने गाड़ी में पड़ा हुआ मजरूका राजाराम वल्द हीरा भारुड़ साकिन जगतपुरा को पत्थर मट्टी से मारा जिससे राजाराम वहीं बेहोश होकर गिर पड़ा था। दाहीने कान की फेंपड़ी फट गई थी कनपटी दीमाग में से खूब खून बह रहा था। कतई बातचीत रास्ते भर नहीं की वो पिपलदा के आगे अरे बापरे २ ऐसा बोला था। बाद में फिर सांस जोर २ से लेना शुरू की जो अभी तक उसी रफ्तार से सांसे ले रहा है। मुझे भी इन लोगों ने व राजाराम वल्द देवा को लाठी से मारा है। रिपोर्ट करता हूं।”

Shortly after at about 3-45 P. M. Rajaram s/o Hira expired. A case under S. 302/34, I. P. C., was accordingly registered. As the Station Officer was away at the moment Head Constable Shankarlal started the investigation. He went to the place of occurrence and arrested Gopal and Dayaram. They went to Nagziri but as Bhagwan Patel could not identify any person of that village as being among the culprits no other arrests were made.

(3) After a Panchanama was prepared the dead body of Rajaram s/o Hira was sent to Burwah where an autopsy of the corpse was made by the Sub-Assistant Surgeon, Shiv Shaktilal. According to him Rajaram's death was due to coma caused by the compression of the brain.

(4) The next day investigation of the crime was taken over by Circle Inspector Kartarchand into his own hands. As a result of his investigation 7 persons including the present two appellants were challaned and in due course after the usual Magisterial inquiry were committed to the Court of Session.

They all pleaded not guilty. The learned Additional Sessions Judge of Mandleshwar acquitted them of the charge under S. 302/149, I. P. C. He convicted Gopal for an offence under S. 304, I. P. C., with respect to injuries caused to Rajaram s/o Hira and sentenced him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. For injuries caused to Rajaram s/o Dewa he was convicted under S. 323/149, I. P. C., and sentenced to nine months' rigorous imprisonment.

(5) Dayaram was convicted under S. 325/149, I. P. C., for injuries caused to Rajaram s/o Hira and sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment and for injuries caused to Rajaram s/o Dewa he was convicted under S. 323/149, I. P. C., and sentenced to nine months' rigorous imprisonment. Both the sentences were in each case to run concurrently.

(6) The main witnesses in the case are Bhagwan Patel P. W. 4, Rajaram s/o Dewa P. W. 7, Siva Gawali P. W. 9 and Misarbai P. W. 8. On the evidence before him the learned Additional Sessions Judge held:

1. That Misarbai was being forcibly carried away by her husband and his companions when she was rescued by a party of six or seven persons including the two appellants Gopal and Dayaram.
2. They were the members of an unlawful assembly which had as its common object the rescue of Misarbai by use of force; and
3. There was no occasion for exercise of right of private defence inasmuch as the appellants and their companions could have resort to public authorities to secure the release of Misarbai.

(7) Dissatisfied with this decision the present appeals have been preferred.

(8) It was contended by Mr. Karanjkar learned counsel for Dayaram that even if his client and his companions inflicted the injuries for causing which they have been punished, they did so in exercise of right of private defence of person of Misarbai. He argued that Misarbai's husband had no right to forcibly seize the girl and carry her away from Karai Kasba against her will. Dayaram and his companions accordingly could not be held guilty of any offence if they inflicted some injuries upon the woman's captors in their attempt to rescue her. This contention is not without force.

(9) There could be no doubt that the learned Additional Sessions Judge came to a correct conclusion when he held that Rajaram s/o Hira was forcibly carrying away his wife against her will. This is abundantly proved by the fact that after the parties met Misarbai went to Karai Kasba. It was pointed out that the nature of the injuries inflicted in the present case though they resulted in loss of one life cannot be said to be serious or disproportionate to the requirements of the situation. According to Bhagwan Patel as the appellants approached them they shouted 'catch them and seize the woman.' "They began to hurl stones at us." A stone thrown by Gopal hit Rajaram s/o Hira on the head. He fell down. As he attempted to rise he was assaulted with lathis. Gopal caught hold of Misarbai's hand and rescued her. He is definite that Dayaram did not strike Rajaram s/o Hira. The other witnesses also gave evidence on the same lines.

(10) Once it is held that the girl was being carried away forcibly against her will those who attempted to rescue her were entitled to use sufficient force to achieve that purpose. If in doing so they inflicted some injuries they can well claim the benefit of the plea of the right of private defence.

(11) Under S. 96, Penal Code, nothing is an offence which is done in the exercise of the right of private defence. Under S. 97, I. P. C., every person has, subject to the restrictions contained in S. 99, a right to defend his own body and the body of any other person, against any offence affecting the human body.

(12) It was not disputed by the learned Government Advocate that the present appellants and their companions had a right to rescue the woman provided they did not transgress the limitations imposed by S. 99, I. P. C. With his usual fairness the learned Government Advocate made no attempt to support the judgment of the lower Court which held that the accused had no right of private defence inasmuch as they could have resort to public authorities. Obviously if a woman is being forcibly carried away against her will in the manner that Misarbai was abducted from Karai Kasba, those interested in her could not be reasonably expected to wait till the matter had been reported to the Police and action taken by the public authorities. It is true that she was being carried away by force by her own husband. But that would not affect the right conferred by S. 97, I. P. C.

(13) Once it is held that there was a right of private defence, it cannot be said that the present appellants or their companions were members of an unlawful assembly. The only question which the learned Government Advocate attempted to raise was that the right of private defence was exceeded. I am unable to accept this contention. I have given above what was stated by one of the chief prosecution witnesses Bhagwan Patel in his evidence. We know that the stone which Gopal is said to have thrown and which hit Rajaram s/o Hira on the head did not leave any external mark of injury. Dr. Shiv Shaktilal has said that it was possible that the fracture found at the base of skull could have been caused by such a stone. It is said that lathis were used by the party of Misarbai's. The injuries caused by lathis are of a minor character. The only severe injury received by any member of the complainant's party was that by Rajaram s/o Hira who was hit by a stone said to have been hurled by Gopal. In the circumstances in which the rescuers were placed it was only natural for them to use stones for achieving their object. If accidentally a stone hits someone on the head and unfortunately resulted in an injury to the base of the skull it cannot be said that the person who threw the stone exceeded his right of private defence. Accordingly disagreeing with the view taken by the learned Additional Sessions Judge we hold that the injuries inflicted by Gopal and Dayaram the present appellants upon the captors of Misarbai were inflicted in the exercise of right of private defence and they are not guilty of any offence.

(14) The appeals are allowed. The conviction of the appellants in each of these appeals is set aside. Both the appellants will be set at liberty.

(15) MEHTA J.: I agree.

(a) Madhya Bharat High Court of Judicature Act (8 of 1949), S. 23 — Appeal under — Concurrent findings of fact — Principles as to when findings will be set aside elaborately discussed — Civil P. C. (b) Hindu Law — Joint family — Nucleus of ancestral property — Acquisitions by member — Presumption as to.

The mere existence of a nucleus of ancestral property will not by itself raise a presumption that the subsequently acquired properties of a member are joint family properties. The law is that where a nucleus of joint family property is proved or admitted, a presumption arises that the whole of the property of the joint family is joint including all acquisitions by a member of the joint family. The presumption however can be rebutted. AIR 1937 Bom 446 and AIR 1938 Mad 841, Rel. on. (Para 18)

Where the intention to keep the self-acquisitions separate from the joint family property is clear the mere failure to keep separate accounts in respect of the self-acquisitions cannot raise a presumption of blending. (Para 19)

(c) Hindu Law — Partition by way of family arrangement — Reopening of — Powers of Court.

Once separation is proved, the Court cannot go into the question whether the partition effected was on an equitable or unequitable basis. The High Court cannot reopen a family arrangement arrived at whatever its basis might have been. (Para 20)

(d) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35 — Pawti Book — Evidentiary value of.

The Pawti Book is not Government record of rights and as it is not kept in a Government Office but remains with the holder or the Zamindar its evidentiary value is very little as compared to a Khatoni or Khasra record or a mutation order. (Para 24) Anno: Evi. Act, S. 35 N. 1, 12.

(e) Limitation Act (1908), S. 28 and Arts. 142 and 144 — Exclusion of co-owner from joint possession for statutory period — Effect.

If a co-owner who has been excluded from joint possession of the lands sleeps over his rights or suffers his rights to be barred by limitation, the practical effect is the extinction of his title in favour of the party in possession, and there cannot be a revival of the title of which there has been a statutory extinguishment. (Para 26) Anno: Lim. Act, S. 28 N. 6.

(f) Hindu Law — Joint family — Coparcener — Right of.

If there is a joint family and a joint estate, the youngest child would acquire an interest by birth without contributing any labour. (Para 27)

(g) Records of Rights — Land mutated in name of one member of joint family — Presumption.

The entry of the names of particular members of a joint family in Revenue records as being proprietor of the property, does not lead, by any means, to the inevitable conclusion that the property is not the property of the joint family to which they belong. This is very often a mere matter of form. (Para 27)

(h) Hindu Law — Partition — Partial partition — Separation of one brother does not necessarily raise a presumption that other brothers have also separated. AIR 1924 PC 126 and AIR 1927 Oudh 149, Rel. on. (Para 29)

(i) Evidence Act (1872), S. 17 — Admission — Gratuitous admission — Withdrawal of.

CHATURVEDI J.: These two appeals Nos. 130 and 131 are filed under S. 23, Madhya Bharat High Court of Judicature Act (Act No. 8 of 1949) from a judgment and decree dated 22-12-1948 of a learned Single Judge (Mehta J.) passed in Civil First Appeals Nos. 9 and 10 of 1948 affirming the decree and judgment of the learned District Judge, Caroth dated 12-8-1947 in Original Suit No. 1 of 1945 by which he disallowed the claims of defendants 4 to 7 for partition of joint family property.

(2) The suit for partition of joint family property was filed by Keshav Khande Rao Karnik plaintiff 1 and (his minor son) against his elder brother Sadashiv Khande Rao Karnik deft. 1 (and his minor son) and against the mother of plaintiff 1 and defendant 1 Laxmibai (deft. 3). The other collaterals were also impleaded as defendants 4 to 7 on their application. The plaintiff Dr. Keshav admitted that defendants 4 to 7 are members of the Joint family, but defendant 1 and his mother defendant 3 did not admit that they remained members of the joint Hindu family and had any right to the joint family property. The following pedigree will show the relationship of the family.

(3) The claim of the plaintiffs for the partition was originally against defendants 1 to 3 on the ground that Khande Rao, the father of plaintiff 1 and defendant 1 and husband of defendant 3, died in the year 1916 at Mahidpur leaving the joint family property in dispute, which was managed for some time by defendant 3 and then by defendant 1. In May 1944 the dispute about family property was entrusted to 3 arbitrators Messrs Chitale, Samvatsar and Dighe but as the decision of the arbitrators could not be filed in time, the suit was instituted on 18-12-1944. Soon after, defendants 4 and 5 (who are the sons of Vishwanath) and defendants 6 & 7 (who are the sons of Ganesh or Ganpat Rao) applied to the Court claiming shares in the property in the suit on the ground that they were also members of the joint Hindu family. According to them the common ancestor of the family Madhav Rao had left a house and other moveable property worth about Rs. 5000/- which passed to his three surviving sons Khande Rao, Vishwanath, and Ganpat Rao. The family property in the suit had grown out of this ancestral nucleus and this property was liable for partition and defendants 4 to 7 were thus entitled to their shares in this property.

(4) The learned District Judge at first framed 4 issues and the first issue was in the following words:

"Whether the defendants 4, 5, 6 and 7 are the members of a joint Hindu family and whether they have a right to demand the partition of the suit property."

(5) The learned District Judge then held that defendants 5 and 4 i.e. sons of Vishwanath remained members of the joint Hindu family and were entitled to a share in the ancestral property but defendants 6 and 7 i.e. sons of Ganpat Rao have got no such right because their father (Ganpat Rao) had separated from Khande Rao long ago. The learned District Judge passed a preliminary decree in this suit to this effect. Defendants 6 and 7 then came to this Court in appeal and defendants 4 and 5 filed cross-objections and defendants 1 and 3 filed Cross-appeal.

(6) This preliminary decree was set aside by Rege J. who framed the following 5 issues for decision and remanded the case to the Court of the District Judge.

- "(1) Did Madhavrao at his death leave a house and Rs. 5000/- worth of jewellery?
- (2) Whether this formed nucleus for the acquisition of the property in suit or any part of it.
- (3) Is the property in suit the self-acquisition of Khande Rao?
- (4) What is the extent of the property available for partition?
- (5) What are the respective shares of the contending branches of the family in the property?"

(7) After recording the evidence adduced by the parties on these issues and after carefully weighing it the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that Madhav Rao at his death in Samvat 1953 (1896 A. D.) had left a house and jewellery worth Rs. 5000/- but that the jewellery or ornaments were given to the wives of three brothers Khande Rao, Ganpat Rao, & Vishwanath at the time of their marriages and remained with them and the house remained intact till Khande Rao's death in 1916, and thus nothing of the ancestral nucleus was utilised for the acquisition of property in suit which was the self-acquired property of Khande Rao who had established himself in Samvat 1935 as a pleader at Mahidpur with an income of Rs. 150-200 per month and had himself purchased the property in suit. The Learned Dist. Judge further held that Ganpat Rao had separated from Khande Rao seven or eight years before Khande Rao's death in 1916 and defendants 6 and 7 Mahadeo and Rangnath (who are appellants in C. S. A. No. 131 of 1949 before us) cannot claim any partition. As regards defendants 4 and 5 Ramchandra and Anant (who are appellants in C. S. A. No. 130 of 1949 before us) it was held that that their father Vishwanath till his death in 1913 lived jointly with Khande Rao who had brought up both Ramchandra and Anant and afterwards they remained joint with defendant 1 till 1934 but as there was no ancestral property left they could claim no share in the self-acquired property of Khande Rao.

(8) In Civil First Appeals 9 and 10 of 1948 the learned Judge on the Single Bench (Mehta J.) concurred in these findings holding that Khande Rao had acquired these properties at Mahidpur from 1907-1911, when Ganpat Rao and Vishwanath were dependent or protegee of Khande Rao, that Ganpat Rao had separated and Vishwanath was a lad of 14-15 years and both of them were not in a position to contribute anything towards the acquisition and that there was no possibility of these properties having been acquired by joint labour or joint exertion. The learned Judge therefore came to the conclusion that the sons of Ganpat Rao and Vishwanath cannot claim a share in the separate and self-acquired property of Khande Rao.

(9) From this judgment there are two appeals:— (1) C. S. A. No. 130 of 1949 is preferred by the sons of Vishwanath (appellants Ramchandra and Anant) who are represented by Mr. Wagmare; (2) C. S. A. No. 131 of 1949 is filed by the sons of Ganpat Rao (appellants Mahadeo and Rangnath) who are represented by Mr. Newaskar.

(10) We first take C. S. A. No. 131 of 1949 the appeal of sons of Ganpat Rao (appellants Mahadeo and Rangnath). Mr. Newaskar contends that though there are concurrent findings of facts against him still S. 100, C. P. C., is not binding on us as it is an appeal under S. 23, Madhya Bharat High Court of Judicature Act (Act No. 8 of 1949). It is true that to these appeals S. 100, C. P. C., will not apply as it is not an appeal from a decree passed in an appeal from any Court subordinate to this Court. This however does not warrant our departing from the general rule which forbids a review of the evidence for the third time where there are concurrent findings of two Courts on a pure question of fact. This general rule has been fully explained by their Lordships of the Privy Council in — Bibhabati Devi v. Ramendra Narayan, AIR 1947 P. C. 19 (A) and it should not be taken to be confined to the Privy Council appeals only. Unless it is shown with absolute clearness that some blunder or error is apparent in the way in which the learned Judges have dealt with the fact a review of evidence third time will not be justified. It is only when there had been any principle of evidence not properly applied or if there had been written documents referred to on which the appellants could show that the Courts below had been led into error — Thakur Harihar

Bakhsh v. Uman Pershad, 14 Ind App 7 (PC) (B), or, when the existence of a document does not appear from the judgment of the First Appellate Court to have been appreciated by it, and no effect whatever is given to the statutory presumption arising from the document — Shankar Rao v. Sambhu, AIR 1940 PC 192 (C) that the evidence can be re-examined. In fact, the question that has to be determined in such appeals is not what conclusion we would have arrived at if the matter had for the first time come before us, but whether it has been established that the judgments of the two Courts below are clearly wrong. In appeals from the decree of a Judge on the Single Bench the onus lies heavily on the appellants to show that the conclusion arrived at by the Learned Judge is legally erroneous — Diwan Chand v. Gujranwala Sugar Mills Co. Ltd., AIR 1937 Lah 644 (D). Then we have, also to pay respect to the opinion which a Judge who has watched and listened to the witnesses has formed as to their credibility. In — Prem Singh v. Deb Singh, AIR 1948 PC 20 (E) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee laid down that where a question of fact has been tried by a Judge, an appellate Court should not come to a different conclusion on the printed evidence unless it is satisfied that any advantage enjoyed by the trial Judge by reasons of having seen and heard the witnesses could not be sufficient to explain or justify the trial Judge's conclusion. In deciding these two appeals in my opinion we should follow the principles enunciated above.

(11) Now it is well established in this case that Madho Rao the common ancestor, was in the service of the Holkar State and was during his lifetime regarded as a man of some substance. He died on Posh Sudi 4 Samvat 1953 (i.e. on 7-1-1897). Before his death, Madho Rao had suffered from a stroke of paralysis for about four or five years (Vide statement of witness Khande Rao D. W. 1). A year before Madho Rao's death i.e. on 23-1-1896 his eldest son Khande Rao had shifted to Mahidpur for his practice. Khande Rao was not legally trained and during those times no training was needed for a pleader or a Public Prosecutor in Holkar State. It is admitted before us that he had ordinary education upto 5th standard. But within few years he established a good practice. The Hindu Gains of Learning Act was not enacted in Indore till 1936 and the principles were in applicable as Khande Rao had received no more than an ordinary education. His brother Ganpat Rao, soon after Madho Rao's death i.e. about 1899, was appointed a Thanedar in Mahidpur on a salary of Rs. 12 per month and another brother Vishwanath, a minor, aged 12 years, came to Mahidpur within two years of his father's death and was brought up by Khande Rao.

(12) It is not disputed that Madhav Rao left one house, ornaments and some moveable property. What it exactly was it is difficult to say. The learned District Judge has drawn certain inference from a letter (Ex. D-1.) written by Khande Rao to his brother Ganpat Rao in the year 1915 in which he mentions that the ancestral property is worth about Rs. 5000/- and that Ganpat Rao is entitled to Rs 1666/-.

(13) One thing that strikes me after a perusal of this letter is that Khande Rao, who tries in this letter to work out precise mathematical calculations for the expenditure incurred for the maintenance of the families of Ganpat Rao and Vishwanath, does not mention in this letter what the ancestral property exactly consisted of. A perusal of this letter however leads me to conclude that whatever it was the ancestral property remained with Khande Rao and he was managing the joint family funds as Karta of the family. At one place he writes.

बडलारजित इस्टेट अंदाजे ५००० की है। उसमें हर एक के हिस्से में १६६६ रुपये आते हैं। इसमें इस हिसाब के अलावा तुम्हारे तरफ खेती लागत व कपडा मिला १००० रुपया रहते हैं। यह वजा जाते तुम्हारे बाकी रु० ६६६ रहते हैं। ऊपर के तपसील में बताया अनुसार २४०० रुपये तुम्हारे तरफ लेना है उसमें वजा जाते बाकी १७३४ रु० लेना निकलते हैं वह ब्याजसहित चाहिये।

(14) In this letter he clearly mentioned that Khande Rao was maintaining the family of Ganpat Rao. He does not mention anything about house. But he mentions that as regards ornaments the prices will be determined later on:

जेवर की नक्की कीमतें वगैरा हम या तुम बाद में करेंगे। यदि लिखे हुवे जेवरों के अलावा कोई रकम कम जादा बडलारजीत हो तो देख लें।

(15) He also states that some ornaments during his father's time were pledged and that he paid the pledge-money. It is clear that he paid the money from the ancestral nucleus & not from his own pocket. He writes:

पिता के वक्त जेवर रुपये ५०० के गिरवे थे। ५८१ रुपये में आसाडी वाले इन्होंने मारफत छुड़ाई। मगलीया वाले ढोर के ४२४ रु० आये बाकी १५७ रु० रहे। इसमें इन्दोर से एक भैंस व एक बैलजोड़ी आये। मिलके बराबर हुवे।

(16) At one place he also mentions in this letter that he is not indebted to anybody and that he has not derived any benefit from the ancestral nucleus.

बडलारजीत इस्टेट से मेरा कोई संबंध नहीं।

(17) This letter is also important to show that there was ancestral nucleus available to Khande Rao and that it was with him till 1915. Whether it was in cash or in securities in 1915 we do not know but it is certain that the ancestral nucleus was worth Rs. 5000/- and it did not include either the ornaments or the Indore house. The learned trial Judge has neither analysed the contents of the letter Ex. D-1 nor discussed them in the judgment. He has however taken it for granted that Ex. D-1 mentioned that the ancestral nucleus was worth Rs. 5000/- and consisted only of ornaments & a house in Indore. It is true and the fact is supported by the evidence of Laxmibai, respondent 3, Bhagirath Bai, and Gajanan that the ornaments were given away to the wives of the three brothers at the time of their marriages and remained with them. The house in Indore was sold after the death of Khande Rao. It appears that Khande Rao had been supporting the two brothers from the ancestral nucleus and that the portion of Ganpat Rao in it had been exhausted and by 1915 Khande Rao had given Rs. 1734 more from his own pocket and had informed him of this fact.

(18) Then it is not contested that the property in dispute was purchased by Khande Rao during 1907-1911. At that time Vishwanath was a minor and Ganpat Rao was out of service. The only earning member was Khande Rao. There is no evidence that the later acquisitions of property by Khande Rao were in any way connected with the ancestral nucleus. It is natural for a member of a joint Hindu family to keep his self-acquired property separate from the joint family property meeting the expenses of the joint family from the joint family property. Therefore it cannot be presumed that the separate earnings of the member were spent on the maintenance of the joint family and that the income from the joint family property was utilised in whole or part towards acquisitions made by him — 'Vythinatha Iyer v. Varadaraja Iyer', AIR 1938 Mad 841 (F). In such case the acquisition of Khande Rao cannot be deemed in law to be joint family property unless he had desired them to be so treated. The mere existence of a nucleus of ancestral property will not by itself raise a presumption that the subsequently acquired properties of a member are joint family properties. The law is that where a nucleus of joint family property is proved or admitted, a presumption arises that the whole of the property of the joint family is joint including all acquisitions by a member of the joint family — 'Babu Bhai Girdharlal v. Ujamlal Hargovind Das', AIR 1937 Bom 446 (G). The presumption however can be rebutted.

(19) Except for the agricultural holdings in Baraphater and Dhuleet which I shall deal later on, other property was purchased in the name of Khande Rao alone (Vide D. 1/9 and 1/10). Even the house occupied by Ganpat Rao from 1910 to 1930 was purchased by Khande Rao (Ex. D. 1/5). (After discussion of evidence the judgment proceeds:—) From all the surrounding circumstances and especially from Khande Rao's letter to his brother Ex. D-1 it is clear that Khande Rao wanted to keep his self-acquired property separated from Ganpat Rao. In such a case the mere failure of Khande Rao's keeping separate accounts of earning will not raise a presumption of blending, so far as the family of Ganpat Rao is concerned.

(20) Then there is ample evidence that Ganpat Rao had separated from his brother Khande Rao. The date is uncertain. (After discussion of the evidence the judgment proceeds:—) In the presence of this overwhelming evidence the learned Judge of first instance has disbelieved the evidence of Hameed Khan D. W. 1 on which Mr. Newaskar has very much relied before us. As the objection is to the weight of evidence and not to its admissibility we decline to interfere. Once separation is proved, we cannot go into the question whether the partition effected was on an equitable or unequitable basis. We cannot now re-open a family arrangement arrived at in 1908-1909, whatever its basis might have been.

(21) Mr. Newaskar has drawn our attention to a sentence in Laxmibai's testimony which may mean that there was no division. But taking into consideration the whole tenor of that deposition it can only mean that there was partition without drawing up any formal deed.

(22) Ganpat Rao then had separate agricultural holdings in Parabatheda in his own name (Ex. D-1/18). Whether they were purchased by Ganpat Rao, or, by Khande Rao for Ganpat Rao is immaterial after so many years. The fact however remains that this property was regarded as separate and after Ganpat Rao's death in 1929 the land was mutated in favour of the sons of Ganpat Rao and in January 1935 was sold to somebody as the appellants did not pay arrears of rent (Exs. D. 1/16 and D1/17). If it had been a joint family Khata, Sadashiv might have tried to pay the rent and save the family property.

(23) The third circumstance to be borne in mind is that just after Khande Rao's death, Ganpat Rao's wife with her two sons and two daughters went away to her brother's place at Depalpur and never returned. After her death there, all the four children of Ganpat Rao were brought up at Depalpur. Ganpat Rao remained alive for a period of twelve years thereafter but the children never came to Mehidpur. Appellant Mahadeo came to Mahidpur only during his Janoo and marriage. The ancestral house in Indore appears to have been sold at the time of Janoo of the appellants Mahadeo and Rangnath. Mahadeo admitted that he had filed a suit against defendant 1 Sadashiv for the sale of the house but abandoned it. According to Laxmi Bai the house was sold by herself and Ganpat Rao for the Janoo of Mahadeo and Rangnath. In a Hindu family that importance is not attached to a son's marriage as to that of a daughter's marriage and the fact remains that the marriage expenses of the two daughters of Ganpat Rao had to be borne by their maternal uncle. That clearly shows that Ganpat Rao had long severed his connection with the family of Khande Rao and Ganpat Rao's sons cannot now claim to be coparceners in the family.

(24) The only point for consideration then remains is about the agricultural holdings at Dhulet and Baraphatter. We have already seen that the Parabatkhedda land was in the sole name of Ganpat Rao. Lands in Chitawad (Ex. D. 1/12) and Lakhakhedi (Ex. D. 1/11) were in the sole name of Khande Rao. But in the Khatowni of Baraphatter of Fasli year 1317 (1906-1908) the names of three brothers Khande Rao, Ganpat Rao and Vishwanath were entered as holders of the property (Ex. D. 4/2). Then after the death of Vishwanath in 1913 and Khande Rao in 1917, the mutation order dated 11-7-1917 (Ex. D. 4/3) showed that till that time the agricultural holdings in Baraphatter and Dhulet remained in the joint names of the three brothers. Except a general statement of the witnesses that all the property was purchased by Khande Rao from the earnings he had from his legal practice, there is no definite evidence that Baraphatter and Dhulet lands were purchased by Khande Rao from his self-acquired property. The Pawti Book D-1/14 produced by defendant 1 is not Government record of rights and as it is not kept in a Government Office but remains with the holder or the Zamindar its evidentiary value is very little as compared to a Khatoni or Khasra record or a mutation order. A Pawti Book must necessarily be in the name either of the Lambardar or of the seniormost of the joint-holder who pays the revenue.

(25) The presumption is that from 1906 to 1917 the Baraphatter and Dhulet lands remained in the joint names of the three brothers. No evidence from Revenue Records of a period previous to 1917 has been adduced to rebut this presumption.

(26) The entries in the Khasra of Baraphatter for the Fasli year 1335 (1925-1926) Ex. D. 4/6 are not free from suspicion and according to the Ameen, Mr. Gangadhar Gokhale, the interpolations are in different ink and seem to be unauthorised. We therefore cannot rely upon them. But from clear entries in Khatoni of Baraphatter for the Fasli year 1335 (1926) Ex-D. 4/7 and in the Patta Bandobast of village Baraphatter (Ex. D. 1/13) it transpires that in 1335 Fasli year i.e., 1926 A.D. the names of Sadashiv and Keshav had been mutated and they alone were shown as holders of these lands. Ganpat Rao was at that time alive and did not object to it. There is no evidence that he had been, after his separation, in the participation of rents and profits from these lands. He seems to have abandoned his share in favour of other co-owners. From 1926 to 1944 (when the suit was filed), during the period of 18 years, the appellants did not even once try to exercise their possessory or proprietary rights in these lands. From the circumstances, it is easy to infer an ouster, if anybody sleeps over his rights or suffers his rights to be barred by limitation, the practical effect is the extinction of his title in favour of the party in possession, and there cannot be a revival of the title of which there has been a statutory extinguishment. It follows therefore that the appeal of the sons of Ganpat Rao must fail. I now proceed to consider C. S. A. No. 130, the appeal by Ramchandra and Anant, sons of Vishwanath.

(27) The appeal of the sons of Vishwanath must receive considerations entirely different from that of the sons of Ganpat Rao; for, Vishwanath till his early death in 1913 remained joint, in the same house with Khande Rao, and helped him in agricultural operations. He remained joint in food, estate and worship. At one place it is stated by Laxmibai respondent 3 in her deposition that Vishwanath remained separate for one year before his death. But she explained that Vishwanath was in the same house but would cook his food separately. All the material for cooking food as well as the cereals etc. were provided by her. Vishwanath's wife and children even then continued taking their meals jointly with Khande Rao's family. It appears therefore that till his death he remained joint in mess and estate. He was living exactly as a junior member of the Hindu joint family, had food and lodging and when the time came for him to be married a bride was found for him and his necessary expenditure incurred out of the common purse. He was looking after the agricultural operations and was also helping the family in day to day living. Several witnesses however have stated that he was lazy and was addicted to intoxicating drugs like Bhang and Ganja and that his exertions were of very little account implying that they would not entitle him to any share in the property. It is well settled law however that the quantum of labour cannot be the decisive factor in such cases. If there is a joint family and a joint estate, the youngest child would acquire an interest by birth without contributing any labour. As regards lands in Baraphatter and Dhulet I have already stated above that from 1906 to 1917 these lands remained in the joint name of three brothers. And it was not before 1926 that the names of Sadashiv and Keshav were mutated and they alone were shown as holders of the lands. Dhulet land had subsequently gone out of the family but Baraphatter land is still in the possession of the family. The mutation effected in favour of Sadashiv and Keshav in the year 1926 cannot in any way affect the interests of the appellant Ram Chandra and Anant, for, the entry of the names of particular members of a joint family in Revenue records as being proprietor of the property, does not lead, by any means, to the inevitable conclusion that the property is not the property of the joint family to which they belong. This is very often a mere matter of form: — 'Jot Singh v. Jangu Singh', AIR 1933 Oudh 482 (H). It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in — 'Kamakhaya v. Abhiman', AIR 1934 P. C. 182 (D), that entries in a survey record or Khewat raise a presumption of correctness but it may be rebutted. Then in — 'Nirman Singh v. Lal Rudra Pratap Singh', AIR 1926 P. C. 100 (J), it has been held that mutation proceedings are in the nature of fiscal enquiries for the purposes of ascertaining which of the several claimants for the occupation of certain denominations of immovable property may be put into occupation of it with greater confidence that the revenue for it will be paid. Their Lordships further held in this case that orders in mutation proceedings are not evidence that the successful appellant was in possession as sole legal owner in a proprietary sense to the exclusion for example, of all claims of the other members of the family as co-owners. The Revenue authorities have no jurisdiction to pronounce upon the validity of such a claim and these proceedings could not be the foundation of any proprietary right or interest. This ruling has been followed by us in a Gwalior case — 'Mst. Droupad Kuwar v. Mulloo', C. S. A. No. 6 of 2005 (K).

(28) Thus Ramchandra and Anant remained proprietors in Baraphatter and Dhulet lands even after mutation had been effected in favour of Sadashiv and Keshav.

(29) The separation of Ganpat Rao in 1908-1909 does not raise any presumption that Vishwanath had also separated: — 'Hari Baksh v. Babulal', AIR 1924 P. C. 126 at p. 133 (L), and — 'Dy. Commr. v. Sheonath', AIR 1927 Oudh 149 (M). The view formerly taken in some cases that where one brother separates from the other, and the rest continue to live as joint family, it must be presumed that there has been a complete separation of all the brothers, but that those who continue joint have re-united cannot now be regarded as good law (vide para 458 pp. 559-560 Mayne on Hindu Law and Usages 1950 Edn.) The family of the two brothers Khande Rao and Vishwanath will be held to have remained joint, legally as well as actually, after 1908-1909. After Vishwanath's death in 1913 his family remained in the same house jointly with Khande Rao. The ancestral nucleus was with Khande Rao and the portion of Vishwanath in it in 1915 according to Ex. D. 1 amounted to Rs. 586 (1666-1080-586). Then there was the ancestral house in Indore. Thus it is clear that in 1915 at least (1) the ancestral nucleus, (2) the house in Indore, and, (3) the lands in Baraphatter and Dhulet were in joint possession of the family. The appellants Ramchandra and Anant, sons of Vishwanath remained in the same house jointly with Khande Rao's family till 1934. According to Laxmi Bai (respondent 3) Ramchandra used to help her in agricultural operations and in day to day family work. When Ramchandra appellant became an earning member it was settled that he along with his mother and brother would separate in mess but would remain in one of the houses of the family. There is a letter dated 4-4-1934 from appellant Ramchandra to Sadashiv (Ex. D. 1/7) which states:

"Yesterday you put before me two measures to secure our love as it is, in future, (1) to pay Rs. 15/- to you as lodging expenses and live in joint and suffer other expenses myself, or, (2) to lodge independently ..... Will it be cause of interruption to our love if I accept, second measure? The first measure will be very inconvenient to me ..... you read over to me the old accounts which I never wished to learn. I have nothing to say against this. I never dreamt to cross swords for the property and would never dream. If at all I have claim on my forefather's property I gladly forfeit.... Lastly I request you to be good enough to give me the building in front not as a claim but as a donation in token of pure love. I ask for it because I am serving in this State and I must have some immovable property in the State for being local subject."

(30) It is contended that after this letter Ramchandra appellant cannot ask for partition as he had forfeited all his rights. This contention does not seem to be well founded. It was a gratuitous admission that his rights had been extinguished. There is nothing in this letter to prevent him from withdrawing the said admission and the law is well-settled that when a person makes a gratuitous admission that the maker has no right in the property in certain estate there is nothing to prevent him from withdrawing the said admission unless there is some obligation not to withdraw the gratuitous admission made by him: — 'Izhar Fathma Bibi v. Mt. Ansar Fatma Bibi', AIR 1939 All 348 (N). It is also to be noted that Ramchandra had no authority on behalf of his younger brother to forfeit his rights. There is evidence on the record that after shifting to the new house Ramchandra appellant and Sadashiv respondent had strained relations. Ramchandra appellant in 1941-1943, according to his version, occupied some lands in Barapatter and was after some time dispossessed by Sadashiv respondent.

(31) That shows that he continued to exercise his rights in joint family property and I am clear in my mind that he was entitled to demand partition at least in lands in Baraphatter. The learned trial Judge has arrived at a right conclusion that Ramchandra and Anant appellants remained members of the joint family but his conclusion that there was no joint family property appears to be erroneous. The conclusion of the Learned Judge about ornaments is also sound. Bhagirath Bai, mother of the appellants Ramchandra and Anant, admits in her deposition that she had ornaments given to her at the time of her marriage and that she had taken them to her father's house but they were taken away by her father who squandered them. The appellants cannot therefore lay any claim to other ornaments. It is then reasonable to infer that the portion of the appellants in the ancestral nucleus (Rs. 586/-) must have been spent on their upbringing and education.

(32) Lands in Dhulet have gone out of the family and the ancestral house in Indore was sold either by Sadashiv or by Ganpat Rao and Laxmi Bai. The evidence about this transaction is not very clear but the selling away of the ancestral house definitely deprived the appellants of any residential accommodation after their leaving the house in which they had been living ever since Vishwanath came to Mahidpur. That it was not the intention of Khande Rao who brought up Vishwanath and his sons is clear from the evidence and the way in which Vishwanath's family received treatment at his hands. It appears to me that on behalf of the Karta of the family, after Khande Rao's death, there was reckless disregard of the appellant's interests in parting with the agricultural holdings in Dhulet and the ancestral house in Indore. But the appellants are not now entitled to open up past accounts or to claim relief against past inequality of enjoyment of the family property. From the beginning the parties had remained under the impression that the whole property including the self-acquired property of Khande Rao was joint family property, and, from Khande Rao's time till 1934, the fruits of this property were enjoyed by the appellants as members of a joint family. In fact, from the way and the manner in which the profits of the self-acquired property were dealt with, it is not difficult to infer that Khande Rao had clothed it with some of the legal qualities and incidents of joint family property. This claim was however never made in the defence presented, nor before us in arguments, and so it is no use discoursing the evidence about a plea which was never put forward. But I hope that Sadashiv, Keshav and Laxmi Bai will feel their moral responsibility in providing suitable residential accommodation to the appellants in one of the family houses left by Khande Rao. Legally, the appellants can claim only one half of the share in lands in Baraphatter.

(32) The result is that we allow the Civil Second Appeal No. 130 to this extent that the appellants will be entitled only to one half share in the family lands in Baraphatter. Their appeal about other properties is dismissed. Considering the near relations of the parties the parties will bear their own costs throughout. The decree of the learned trial Court will be amended accordingly.

(34) We dismiss Civil Second Appeal No. 131 with Costs.

Guardians and Wards Act (1890), S. 25 — Custody of child of tender year — Paramount consideration — Respective rights of parents.

The paramount consideration in the matter of a custody of a minor of tender years is the interest of the child rather than the rights of the parents. If the mother is a suitable person to take charge of the child, it is quite impossible to find an adequate substitute for her for the custody of a child of tender years and consequently the mother is preferable to the father in such case. (Para 5)

After all an order under S. 25 allowing the minor to remain with his mother instead of with his father is of a temporary character & if at any time it should appear that the guardian is not giving that care and attention to the child which is expected of her and is not giving the child proper education it will always be open to the father to move the Court for a proper order. JUDGMENT: This is an application under S. 25, Guardians and Wards Act by one Gopalji son of Chensingh for the custody of his minor daughter Rewabai who is aged 3 years.

(2) The minor Rewabai lives with her natural mother Sunderbai. Gopalji and Sunderbai were husband and wife and Rewabai was the offspring of this marriage. However on 9-7-1949 Sunderbai got divorce from her husband Gopal and she contracted Natra with one Nandram.

The plaintiff claimed the custody of the child being the natural father and guardian of the child. The application is opposed by Sunderbai on the ground that the child is only 3 years old and there is mutual attachment and affection between her and her child and the child would suffer great mental shock if the child is forcibly removed from her custody. She contends that the child lives happily with her and this application by Gopalji is not bona fide. She alleges that in Criminal Case under S. 438, Criminal P. C., started by her the Court had passed an order of maintenance of Rs. 15/- P. M. in favour of the child and in order to avoid this payment this application is made.

(3) In my opinion the paramount consideration in a case like this is the welfare of the minor. The minor was brought up by the mother and both are extremely fond of each other and the minor daughter is happy with her mother and at least temporarily so long as Rewabai is of tender age of 3 years, she should not be removed from the custody of her mother. There are certain considerations which induced me not to handover the custody of Rewabai to her natural father. Gopalji after his divorce with his first wife Sunderbai had married again and to force the innocent child of 3 to live with her step-mother would be harsh and the step-motherly treatment which would be meted to the poor minor would not be for her welfare. In an Oudh case reported in — 'Shushila Ganju v. Mr. Kunwar Krishna', AIR 1948 Oudh 266 (A) an application under S. 25, Guardians and Wards Act was made by husband and the custody of the minor child was with her mother and the Court held that in an application under S. 25 the sole criterion for disposing of the case is the minor's welfare. It is only if Court is of opinion that it will be for the welfare of the ward to return to the custody of his guardian that it can pass an order for such return. It appears to me in the case before me that father does not care for the minor child and that the welfare of the minor will not be promoted by her being placed under the guardianship of her father and in my opinion the application was filed by the father merely in order to escape the payment of arrears of maintenance.

(4) After all an order under S. 25 allowing the minor to remain with his mother instead of with his father is of a temporary character and if at any time it should appear that the guardian is not giving that care and attention to the child which is expected of her and is not giving the child a proper education it will always be open to the father to move the Court for a proper order.

(5) In — 'Saraswathibai Shripad v. Shripad Vasanji', AIR 1941 Bom 103 (B), Beaumont C. J. held that the paramount consideration in the matter of a custody of a minor of tender years is the interest of the child rather than the rights of the parents. Human nature being much the same all the world over, if the mother is a suitable person to take charge of the child, it is quite impossible to find an adequate substitute for her for the custody of a child of tender years and consequently the mother is preferable to the father in such case. Orders as to the custody of a child being always of a temporary nature those interested in the minor are at liberty to apply to the Court at any time for the change of minor's custody. Having regard to these authorities cited above and the fact that the girl is of tender age I think that at present the personal care of the mother as regards the minor is the paramount consideration for some time. The minor girl aged 3 should be allowed to live with her natural mother and she should not be forced to stay with her step-mother where she might meet with step-motherly treatment.

(6) No doubt the father is nevertheless entitled to have access to his child and in order that the child is not antagonised against the father and should have soft corner for the father, the father should be allowed to have access to see his minor daughter and the parties to make arrangement by which the father should be allowed to see the child at least twice in a week. If the parties do not make any arrangement the Court will make the arrangement.

(7) The result is that I allow the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Court and direct that for the present Rewabai who is a girl aged three should be allowed to remain in the custody of her natural mother Sunderbai. Pleader's fee be taxed at Rs. 20/-.

DIXIT J.: This is an appeal from the decision of the Additional District Magistrate Guna acquitting the respondent Karan Singh of an offence under S. 215, I. P. C.

(2) It was alleged by the prosecution that on 4-10-50 a report was lodged with the police by Godi and Bhallu that on 30-9-50 their twelve buffaloes had strayed from a jungle where they had been taken for grazing; that some two or three days after this report the respondent Karan Singh met Godi and Bhallu in a jungle and promised them to trace the buffaloes on a payment of Rs. 600/-. It is said that accordingly after about ten or eleven days Karan Singh took Godi and Bhallu to a place in the jungle at about 3 in the morning and leaving the complainant at this place, he went away and returned shortly afterwards with two buffaloes and took from Godi and Bhallu Rs. 600/- and that after the receipt of this amount, he again went away and returned with the remaining buffaloes. The learned Magistrate acquitted the accused on the ground that the prosecution had failed to prove as a positive fact that the buffaloes had been stolen and they had also failed to show that the accused did not use all the means in his power to cause the offender to be apprehended and convicted.

(3) Mr. Mungre learned Government Advocate for the State concedes that there is no evidence to show that the buffaloes had been stolen. But he contends that there is sufficient evidence to show that although the buffaloes strayed, some person committed criminal misappropriation in respect of them and thus deprived Godi and Bhallu of the possession of the buffaloes. In order to show that some person committed criminal misappropriation, Mr. Mungre relies solely on the circumstances that the accused took Godi and Bhallu to the jungle at night and that after taking them there, the accused did not point out to them the actual place where the buffaloes were, but himself went alone & returned first with two buffaloes, then demanded the amount of Rs. 600/- and again went alone and brought the remaining buffaloes. Mr. Mungre relies on the decision of the Allahabad High Court in — 'Yusuf Mian v. Emperor', AIR 1938 All 440 (A).

(4) In my opinion, this appeal must be rejected. It is quite true that for an offence under S. 215, I. P. C., it is not necessary to prove as a positive fact that the property was stolen. The section says that the property for the recovery of which gratification has been taken or promised must be one of which the owner has been deprived of by any offence punishable under the Penal Code. It is clear from this that the deprivation of the property is not confined to one resulting from an act of theft. A person who commits criminal misappropriation of a property also deprives the owner of the possession of the property. The question, therefore, that arises for consideration is whether there is evidence to show that after the buffaloes had strayed, some person detained them by committing an act of criminal misappropriation. In my opinion, there is no such evidence. From the mere fact that the accused took Godi and Bhallu during night-time to the jungle and did not point out to them the actual place where the buffaloes were, it cannot be inferred that some person had committed criminal misappropriation in respect of them, if, as the evidence shows and as has been found by the trial Magistrate, the buffaloes had strayed, it is possible to conceive that they failed to return to their owner in the ordinary course either because they were entrapped in the jungle or because they were impounded by somebody in a place or because some person had committed criminal misappropriation in respect of them and detained them.

There is nothing in the present case to indicate that the failure of the buffaloes to return to their owners was not and could not have been due to any of the first two causes. If, therefore, as is possible the buffaloes could not return to their owners on account of the first two causes, it cannot be said that the owners were deprived of the property by an offence punishable under the Code. If in these circumstances, the accused used his efforts to drive the buffaloes from a place from where they could not get out except with the aid of human agency or secured their release from a place of impoundment without letting the complainant know of the place, it cannot be said that he adopted this course because some person had committed criminal misappropriation in respect of the buffaloes. The manner in which the accused returned the buffaloes does not prove the fact that the owners had been deprived of the buffaloes by any offence punishable under the Penal Code. It is obvious that the act of the accused in taking the complainants to the jungle at night, in not disclosing them the place where the buffaloes were and in bringing first two buffaloes and then bringing the remaining buffaloes after the receipt of Rs. 600/- was only to ensure that the complainant paid the amount of Rs. 600/- which they had promised. The Allahabad case cited by the learned Government Advocate is distinguishable on the facts of that case. In the Allahabad case the accused took the complainant to the jungle and pointed out a bullock which had strayed tied to a tree. From the fact that the bullock was tied to a tree, the learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court inferred that the person who tied it up in the jungle deprived the owner of possession of the bullock by committing criminal misappropriation. No such inference can be drawn for the simple reason that there is no material whatsoever, even to suggest why the buffaloes failed to return to their owners in the ordinary course.

(5) Before concluding, it must be observed that the learned Magistrate was not right in thinking that in a prosecution under S. 215, it must be proved by the prosecution itself that the accused person did not use all means in his power to cause the offender to be apprehended. As is clear from the wording of S. 215, I. P. C., the burden of proving that the accused used all means in his power to cause the offender to be apprehended and convicted of the offence, is on the accused. (See — 'Arman Ulla v. Jainulla', AIR 1933 Cal 599 (B)).

(6) For the above reasons I would dismiss this appeal.

Jagannath Harlal, Applicant v. State.

Criminal Reference No. 75 of 1951, D/- 24-4-1952.

Evidence Act (1872), S. 92 — Proviso (2) — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 516A and 517).

Cattle seized from accused put in safe custody of supurdgidar pending trial —

Supurdginama stipulating that supurdgidar will produce them when so ordered by Court — No provision in it that supurdgidar will be paid expenses for keeping cattle — Oral understanding that in case supurdgidar had to incur expenditure Court would ask owner of cattle to suitably compensate him and that income derived from milk obtained from cattle would be set off against expenditure incurred by supurdgidar — Such oral agreement not being inconsistent with terms of supurdginama can be proved under proviso (2) to S. 92, Evidence Act.

Anno: Evi. Act, S. 92 N. 25; Cr.P.C., S. 516A N. 2 S. 517 N. 10.

Munnalal Pancholi, for Applicant; Govt. Advocate, for the State.

ORDER: This is a reference from the Sessions Judge, Goona arising under the following circumstances:

One Jagannath was prosecuted and during the course of proceedings some cattle were seized from him, and were delivered to one Mehendra Singh as Supardgidar. When Jagannath was acquitted the Court ordered Mahendra Singh to deliver the cattle to him. Mahendra Singh claimed Rs. 203/- for feeding the cattle. On Nazir's report the Magistrate ordered that Rs. 128/12/- be paid to Mahendra Singh by Jagannath as expenses for feeding the cattle. Jagannath went in revision to the Sessions Judge, Goona who is of the opinion that there was no contract either express or implied with Jagannath to pay this expense to Mahendra Singh. The learned Sessions Judge, therefore, recommended that the Magistrate's order be set aside and he should be asked to make an inquiry into the actual expenditure that was incurred by the Supardgidar, in keeping the cattle after deducting the cost of milk that was utilised by the Supardgidar.

(2) A notice was sent to the Supardgidar Mahendra Singh but he did not appear today. I have heard arguments of Mr. Pancholi on behalf of Jagannath and Government Advocate on behalf of the State. I am of opinion that the terms of Supardgidars should govern the question in this case. This Supardginama stipulated that Supardgidar will produce the cattle as soon as the Court orders him to do so. There is nothing in the contract to show that Supardgidar would be given any expenditure for keeping she-buffaloes; but I agree with the Sessions Judge that there was some understanding that in case the Supardgidar had to incur any expenditure, on principles of justice and equity, the Court would ask the owner of the cattle to suitably compensate him and that the income derived from the milk obtained from the cattle would be set off against the expenditure incurred by the Supardgidar. This will not be inconsistent with the terms of Supardginama within the meaning of proviso 2 of S. 92, Evidence Act.

(3) Under the circumstances I accept the reference and exercising my powers under S. 561A, in order to secure the ends of justice, I set aside the order of the Magistrate dated 26-2-1951 and direct him to institute an inquiry into the matter and dispose of the question according to law in the light of the observations made above.

The custom of sonless Jain widow adopting a son to her deceased husband without a prior authority from him is so well known and well established by judicial decisions that it is no longer necessary to prove and plead it and except in case of Madras and the Punjab, in the rest of India, the onus would now lie upon those who deny the existence of this custom. (B) ('48) AIR 1948 PC 60: ILR (1947) All 748 (PC)

CHATURVEDI J.: This is second appeal of the plaintiff Laxmibai who instituted a suit for recovering Rs. 2,150/-/- (advanced from 30-12-1944 to 14/2/1945 to the minor's natural father) plus Rs. 357-6-0 as interest total Rs. 2497/6/- from the share of deceased minor Narendra Kumar. It was averred that the minor boy Narendra Kumar s/o Champalal was adopted by the respondent on 27-11-1943 according to the custom prevalent amongst Oswal Jain Mahajans, and soon after the adoption, the real father of the minor, Champalal, fearing dissipation of the property of the minor by the adoptive mother, started the guardianship Case No. 65/44 in the District Judge's Court and on 22-9-1944 a partition suit was filed by him as next friend of the minor in the Indore State High Court for partition of the property.

During the pendency of the suit, on 26-4-45, the minor Narendra Kumar expired, and the suit was ordered to abate on 18-6-1945. For carrying on the partition suit the plaintiff had advanced Rs. 2,150/-/- to Champalal from time to time during the period from 30-12-44 to 14-2-1945 and the plaintiff prayed that a decree for Rs. 2497-6-0, be passed in favour of the plaintiff to be realised from the share of Narendra Kumar in the property of Mangilal deceased in the hands of the defendant respondent Pushpabai.

(2) The defendant resisted the suit on the ground that there was no adoption and that there was no dissipation of the properties and that it was not necessary for the next friend and natural father of the minor to incur any costs. A suit could have been filed in 'forma pauperis'. It was further alleged that if any sum was borrowed by Champalal it was borrowed by him in his personal capacity and the minor's estate cannot be held liable for it. It was denied that the alleged costs incurred in litigation were not necessities of the minor within the meaning of law; and it was added that the plaintiff had no right to be reimbursed from the property left by the minor.

(3) The first issue was about the factum of adoption. The trial Court did not express any opinion on the point; but held that the deceased Mangilal had not given any permission to his widow to adopt and on the basis of — '1934

Indore L R 77' (A) held that in Madhyabharat, Mitakshara as administered by the Benaras School prevails and a widow cannot adopt without the express authority of her husband or without the consent of her 'sapindas'. The trial Court, therefore, held that the adoption, even if it took place, was not valid.

(4) The first appellate Court reversed this finding; after discussing the evidence it came to the conclusion that adoption of the minor Narendra Kumar by the respondent did not take place and cited — 'Prem Raj v. Mt. Chand Kunwar', AIR 1948 PC 60 (B) for the proposition that the custom of sonless Jain widow adopting a son to her deceased husband without a prior authority from him was so well known and well established by judicial decisions that it was no longer necessary to prove and plead it and that except in case of Madras and the Punjab, in the rest of India, the onus would now lie upon those who deny the existence of this custom. As regards the dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council we have no doubt that the principle of law enunciated is the correct one and the finding of fact arrived at by the first appellate Court is binding on us in second appeal.

(5) The four main issues, which are necessary for the disposal of this appeal then are:

"(2) Whether the defendant dissipated the minor's property as alleged in para 3 of the plaint? and

(3) Whether the plaintiff advanced a loan of Rs. 2150/- between Dec. 1944 and Feb. 1945 to the minor's real father Champalal for the litigation as stated in paras 5 and 6 of the plaint.

(4) Whether the costs of the litigation were the necessities of the minor within the meaning of law as pleaded in para 5 of the plaint.

(7) What relief the plaintiff is entitled to?"

(6) The Courts below have held that there is no evidence of any dissipation of the property and this is a concurrent finding of fact. As there was no dissipation the suit on behalf of the minor was uncalled for and the two Courts below held that the costs of the suits were not 'necessaries' of the minor within the meaning of S. 68, Contract Act. On these grounds the suit and the first appeal have been dismissed. As regards the third issue, the trial Court found that only Rs. 1225/- are proved to have been paid by the plaintiff to Champalal, real father of the minor.

(7) The real question which we put before the counsel to be considered in this case is: Whether as far as the lender is concerned she advanced the loans to the natural father of the minor, Champalal, in his personal capacity, or, whether she intended to secure for these advances the direct liability of the minor's estate. It seems the plaintiff opened in her account books a ledger folio (Khata Ex. P. 1) for recording the accounts of the money advanced. It was headed खाता चम्पालाल छगलाल महाजन को Chhogalal is brother of Champalal.

The accounts were throughout continued under the same heading right down to the very end. There is no reference in these accounts to the minor or the minor's estate and this absence of any reference to the minor or minor's estate in the accounts is a strong argument in support of the view that the plaintiff and Champalal Chhogalal dealt with each other on the footing that it was the latter alone that were regarded as the borrowers. Our attention has not been called to any other document that may show that Champalal Chhogalal were not pleading their own credit, but only the credit of minor's estate in respect of these transactions. We are, therefore, constrained to hold that these transactions bound the borrowers alone and not the minor's estate. The form of 'Khata' is definitely against the possibility of the parties to it having had any other liability in mind than that of Champalal and his brother Chhogalal.

(8) Para. 6 of the plaint, also supports the same inference. It runs as follows:

"Champalal had no means to spend the necessary amount and the minor was incapable of contracting and incurring a loan; hence loan worth Rs. 2150/-/- was given to Champalal himself personally and through his brother by the plaintiff as shown in the copy of the 'Khata' attached herewith."

(9) Mr. Khabya, learned counsel for the appellant, has addressed to us much argument about the application of this money to suit proceedings. He contends that Rs. 900/- were paid to Rai Sahib A. P. Bhargava on 23-12-45 who was conducting the partition suit in the High Court. We have carefully gone through the deposition of Mr. Bhargava who stated

"चंपालाल की मेरे सामने लक्ष्मीबाई से ऐसी बात नहीं हुई कि रुपया जायदाद से वसूल हो जायगा। इसलिये कोर्ट फीस भर दो।"

Asked why he did not file a suit in 'forma pauperis' R. S. Bhargava replied:

"नादारी का सवाल ही पैदा नहीं हुआ क्योंकि चंपालाल ने कहा था कि पैस का इन्तजाम कर लेंगा।"

(10) From the statement it is clear that firstly there was no idea of making the minor's estate liable and secondly there was no necessity of incurring any costs for the suit; the suit could have been, if deemed necessary, filed in 'forma pauperis'. Champalal had taken a risk unnecessarily and the plaintiff had advanced him money without having the least idea of making the minor's estate liable for the money. Any person of ordinary prudence would not have advanced money to Champalal in the known circumstances of the case. Champalal could have waited for being appointed guardian of the minor by the District Judge's Court before filing partition suit.

It may also be added here that Champalal, though natural father of the minor, was not his guardian; as the guardianship of an adopted son, who is minor, passes on his adoption from his natural father and mother to his adoptive father and mother (Hindu Law, page 590, Mulla). Many rulings cited by Mr. Khabya relating to the expenses undertaken by the natural guardian of the minor for the minor's "necessaries" do not apply to the facts of the case. The facts of this case, as stated above, are peculiar and we do not think any purpose will be served by discussing rulings which have no material bearing on the question before us.

(11) For reasons stated above, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 344 — Stay of criminal proceeding pending civil suit.

The discretion to be exercised by Courts in ordinary stay of criminal proceedings cannot be crystallised into a hard and fast rule, and largely depends on the circumstances of each case. The only point of importance is whether the criminal complaint has been filed before or after the civil suit. If it is filed afterwards an intention to prejudice the civil litigation may often be suspected, especially when there has been long delay i.e. a delay of two years in filing the complaint from the date of occurrence. (Para 3)

Anno: Cr. P. C., S. 344 N. 11.

Harihar Niwas, for Applicant; Anand, for Opponent.

ORDER: This is a revision by the complainant who had lodged a complaint on 3-7-1951 against the accused non-applicant for offences under Ss. 420 and 384, I. P. C., in the Court of first class Magistrate Morar. The allegations in the complaint were that on 1-5-1949 the accused came to Morar, and administered some intoxicating drug to the complainant and got his signatures on a Hundi worth Rs. 79,000/- on the stamps of Uttar Pradesh Government. It is alleged that the complainant filed the report in police station, Morar against the accused on the evening of 1-5-1949. It is further alleged that a notice was given to the accused on 3-5-1949. After having done this it is very strange that the complainant waited for two years for filing a complaint. The police did not take any action on the report. Presumably they did not regard the report as genuine one and so did not challan the accused. Then when the accused came to the Court on 23-11-1951, he filed an application stating that a civil suit had been filed on 14-4-51 in Bulandshahr for the recovery of the sum due on the Hundi and he prayed that the criminal case should be stayed till the decision of the civil suit. The 1st Class Magistrate Morar granted this application and stayed proceedings in the criminal Court. This order has been upheld by the Sessions Judge in revision. Against this order the complainant had come up to this Court.

(2) The ordinary principle in revision is this that if the discretion exercised by the Magistrate is not arbitrary or capricious there will be no interference by this Court. After hearing the arguments of the learned counsel I have come to the conclusion that the Magistrate's order was neither arbitrary nor capricious and the revision must be dismissed.

(3) The discretion to be exercised by Courts in ordinary stay of criminal proceedings cannot be crystallized into a hard and fast rule, and must largely depend on the circumstances of each case. The only point of importance is whether the criminal complaint has been filed before or after the civil suit. If it is filed afterwards, an intention to prejudice the civil litigation may often be suspected, especially when as in the present case, there had been long delay i.e., a delay of two years. In a case of Hundi worth Rs. 79,000/- if the complainant felt a genuine grievance he would surely have made the complaint much earlier. An intention to prejudice the civil litigation can hardly be anything but matter of inference and I am satisfied that it can be alleged with some force in this case. I am also satisfied that in the civil suit at Bulandshahr in his written statement filed on 5-7-51 the complainant had raised the same contention that he was given intoxicating drugs by the accused and in that state he signed the Hundi. Considering that the evidence of the witness produced by the defendant in the civil case is being recorded, I feel that the Magistrate did the right thing in staying the criminal proceedings in his Court. I therefore dismiss the revision.

JUDGMENT: This is landlord plaintiff's second appeal who had instituted a suit on 19-1-1948 against the defendants tenants for ejectment from a shop on the ground floor of a house No. 79 in Hathipala Road, Indore, for arrears of rent and mesne profits. The House Rent Control Order of 1943 was at that time in force and did not apply to Shops. Plaintiff had given a notice to quit on 12-12-1947 asking the defendants to vacate the shop on 31-12-1947. The defendants resisted the suit on the ground that the M. O. of Rs. 48/-/- was sent to the plaintiff for arrears of rent but he had refused to accept it, that he is willing to deposit the rent in the Court and that the suit was premature as there was an oral agreement that the lease would continue for a period of two years. He also stated that the place is suitable for residence and should fall within the definition of the word 'house' and according to the provisions of the Rent Control Order cannot be vacated. Issues were framed on the pleadings, but in May 1948 change in the Indore House Rent Control Order of 1943 was effected. The new law applied to non-residential premises and the definition of the 'house' was widened. Defendant amended his written statement and added:

“नये रेंट कंट्रोल आर्डर के मूजिव दाविया दुकान खाली नहीं हो सकता।”

The plaintiff on this, filed a reply to the application for amendment on 11-8-1948 in the written statement in the following words:

“दावा दाखील होने के बाद रेंट कंट्रोल आर्डर में जो संशोधन हुए है कानून से लागू नहीं हो सकते.

अगर कोर्ट ने यह ठहराया कि ये संशोधन इस मामले को लागू हो सकते हैं तो उस हालत में भी वादी का कहना है कि वादी को दाविया जगह अपनी खुद की केमली के रहने व व्यापार करने वास्ते बड़ी जरूरत है और इसलिए हाल का दावा पेश करना हुआ था उसी मकान का दाविया हिस्सा छोड़कर बाकी का हिस्सा जो वादी के पास है वो उनको बहुत कम पडता है और बड़ी तंगी भुगतनी पडती है।”

Three additional issues were framed and evidence was adduced by the parties on 9-2-1950 the present Madhya Bharat Sthan Niyamtran Vidhan (स्थान नियंत्रण विधान) came into force. Again issues were re-cast and for the purposes of this second appeal only the following first two issues are relevant:

1. Has there been a failure on the part of the tenant to pay the arrears of rent and the notice charges within one month from date of service of notice?

2. Whether the plaintiff landlord genuinely requires the accommodation for his own residence and whether the plaintiff has no other place to live in Indore?

ISSUE NO. 1:

(2) It is not disputed that an M. O. of Rs. 48/-/- was sent and the plaintiff declined to receive the payment. The issue had been rightly decided against the plaintiff and in favour of the deft. Mr. Sanghi contends that notice charges (only seven annas) were not sent by the defendant and that should furnish sufficient ground of ejectment. I do not think this contention has any force. The emphasis in the Act of 1950 is on the payment of arrears of rent and not on the payment of notice charges. In this case, the tenant in 1947 could not have dreamt that the Act of 1950 will make the payment of notice charges also compulsory. The money was sent in 1947 and I have no compunction in holding that the defendant made no default in payment within the meaning of sub-cl. 3 (A?) of S. 4 of the Madhya Bharat Sthan Niyamtran Vidhan (Act 5 of 1950).

ISSUE NO. 2:

(3) The application of the plaintiff on 11-8-48 begins with the words:

“अगर कोर्ट ने यह ठहराया कि ये संशोधन लागू हो सकते हैं तो उस हालत में वादी का कहना है।”

This shows that the plaintiff had to state this new ground in order to come within one of the grounds specified in S. 4, without which a decree could not have been passed in a pending case (vide S. 12). This, from the context of the case, could not have been a genuine ground; but the plaintiff was compelled to state it in order to obtain a decree of ejectment under the Act of 1950. The artificiality of the ground stated is apparent.

(4) The two Courts below have held that the place was required by the plaintiff for the purposes of a shop or for carrying on business and not for his residence. This is a concurrent finding of fact binding on me in second appeal.

(5) The words in the statute are:

(५ग) यह कि भूमी स्वामी को स्वयं के निवास के लिए उस स्थान की वास्तविक रूप से आवश्यकता है और उस नगर अथवा नगरी में उसके रहने के लिये कोई अन्य स्थान नहीं है।

The word निवास is a Sanskrit word derived from the verb वस (ubhayapadi) meaning "to dwell". The word "dwell" is stronger than "reside" (Halsbury Vol. 11, page 817, 1952 Reprint) and refers to a place of permanent abode (Vol. 8 page 189). The word 'निवास' means 'dwelling place' or 'residence'. There is no authorised English translation of the Madhya Bharat Act, but the first portion of S. 4 ग has been taken from S. 3 ग of the Accommodation Control Ordinance Gwalior State (Samvat 2004) where in the English and Hindi version were as follows:

“(३ग) यह कि भूमि स्वामी को अपने निजी निवास के लिए उस स्थान की वास्तविक रूप से आवश्यकता है।”

“(3g) that the landlord genuinely requires accommodation for his own residence.”

Section 4 (g) of the Madhya Bharat Act corresponds to S. 13 (3) (VIa) of the C. P. and Berar House Rent Control Order 1949 which runs as follows:

“VI that the landlord needs the house or a portion thereof for the purpose of (a) his bona fide residence, provided he is not occupying any other residential house of his own in the city or town concerned.”

(6) The corresponding provisions in S. 13(1)(g) of the Bombay Rent Control Act of 1947 is different from the above and is in the following words:

“13(1g) that the premises are reasonably and bona fide required by the landlord for occupation by himself or by any person for whose benefit the premises are held.”

The word 'occupation' in the above provision is of wide import for 'occupation' may be for business or for residential purposes — 'Rustomji Dinshaw v. Dosibai Rustomji', AIR 1921 Bom 34 (A); — 'Nowroji Hormasji v. Srinivas Prabhu', AIR 1922 Bom 222 (B). The Madhya Bharat Act had however deliberately left out the word 'occupation' and has adopted the word निवास (residence) and has further elucidated the point by the additional clause:

“और उस नगर अथवा नगरी में उसके रहने के लिये कोई अन्य स्थान नहीं है।”
